Dear Colleen,
We are pleased to know that Mennonite Church USA has received a grant to digitize the print files of Gospel Herald and The Mennonite.

You have our full permission to digitize all issues of The Mennonite and make them available for free, with full-text access.

Best wishes in this important endeavor.

Of Your Pen Acquaintances

FORD BERG, Scottdale, Pennsylvania, is missions editor of the Gospel Herald, the official organ of Old Mennonite Conference.

CORNELIUS BOLDT, is pastor of the Hoffnungsau Mennonite Church at Cuauhtemoc, Chih., Mexico.

GERALD STUCKY, Cachipay, Cund., Colombia, South America, is in charge of the General Conference missionary project among the untainted leper children of leper parents in Colombia. He is a native of Berne, Indiana.

JACOB T. FRIESEN, Beatrice, Nebraska, is pastor of the First Mennonite Church.

Beyond Our Own

NETHERLANDS.—The General Synod of the Netherlands Reformed Church, just prior to the outbreak of the present hostilities, sent a letter to the Dutch government opposing military action by the Dutch forces, and pointing out the "catastrophic" effect of armed intervention in Indonesia. The Synod declared, "To see a solution by force of arms would inevitably lead to very great difficulties in the future."

DENVER, COLORADO. — Seventh Day Adventists International Council meeting here recently heard that their membership had grown by 30,000 last year with 729 new foreign missionaries being appointed and per capita giving within the denomination set at $63.20. They voted to establish a school of tropical medicine under the College of Medical Evangelists in Los Angeles.

NEW DELHI, INDIA.—"Mahatma Ghandi Ki Jail" (Victory to Mahatma Ghandi) was the resounding shout as Article 11 of the new Indian constitution was adopted, abolishing untouchability. It reads thus: "Untouchability is abolished and its practice in any form is forbidden. The enforcement of any disability arising out of untouchability shall be an offence punishable according to law." However, nationwide abolition of untouchability will not go into effect until the constitution does.

CHINA.—Out of 50,000 students seeking admission to the freshman class of the twelve Christian colleges in China last year, only 4,000 could be admitted, according to the United Board of Christian Colleges in China.

NEW YORK CITY.—Church groups were warned to be on the alert for financial appeals from a Captain Lawrence Aber of Guadalajara, Mexico. The Foreign Missions Conference of North America stated that Aber has mailed numerous appeals to this country for support of "missions projects" in Mexico; investigations of which have failed to uncover any of the projects. The letters, accompanied by a crudely printed pamphlet describing Aber's mission work, are written in longhand, and addressed "To any Protestant Church" in a given town. Over several years, these letters have appealed at various times for support of a mission church, mission school, a Bible-printing project, money for a boat, medical supplies, and books.

Official Conference Announcements

Appointment

The Officers of the General Conference herewith announce the appointment of Brother Marvin D. Linscheid, Aberdeen, Idaho, to fill the vacancy on the Board of Publication created by the recent homegoing of Brother C. Henry Smith. —Walter H. Dyck, Executive, Secretary.

At the last Western District Conference, the Charity Committee was instructed to make its needs known to the churches if and when they were in need of funds. The treasure informs us that he will not be able to meet the next monthly allowance unless churches make some contributions. May we, therefore, reques that an offering be taken in the churches for this purpose at an early date.—Western District Charity Committee, H. P. Fast, Chairman. (Please send contributions to Rev. Wald Kaufman, Hydro, Oklahoma).

PRAYER IS THE MOST FUNDAMENTAL and intimate expression of the Christian Faith. It is giving personal, living witness to the fact that we belong to a personal God as revealed in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and that as a result of this conviction we, as actual children of God by creation and potential children of God by redemption belong together. This is why we have always insisted that true prayer is impossible apart from a person's being right with God and right with his fellow men. Prayer is the throwing of a switch that closes a circuit of which you, your God, and your neighbor are integral parts. As you gather with fellow-Christians in the week of prayer, make sure that the circuit is closed so that the power of God may flow into your life and into that of your neighbor. If you are not right with God, you are robbing yourself, your neighbor, and consequently the whole needy world of the blessing of God. If you are not right with your neighbor, you are robbing God of the opportunity of helping you to be a blessing in the world. When we say, "Our Father . . ." let us make sure the threefold circuit between God, our neighbor, and ourselves is intact.—JJE

IT IS TRUE that we must stand on our feet to march, but it is equally true that, as Christians, we must get down on our knees to get the marching orders.—JJE

THE UNIVERSAL WEEK OF PRAYER ought to be the Church's annual year-end spiritual inventory. At such a time people ought to be asked some rather heart-searching questions. Where are we in the Church as compared with a year ago? Are we, as a denomination, conference, churches, and individuals closer to the Center—even Jesus Christ? Have we grown in faith? Have we become more and more convinced of the Gospel? Has our conviction reached such proportions that we can harbor no feelings at all against anyone because every soul is infinitely precious in the sight of God? Have our consciences become more sensitive because of these convictions so that we refuse to have any part in any program or system or group that displays attitudes contrary to the love of God as manifest at Calvary?

Then what about our conference-wide programs and organizations including missions, relief, etc.? Are we using them to the glory of God as a direct expression of clean hearts and consciences that seek to reflect the love of God in Christ or are we letting them become a degenerate form of activism by which we seek to satisfy our consciences that are crying out against us because we have neglected this or that area of vital concern to the cause of the Gospel. Programs and organizations are inevitable and indispensable to the Church of Jesus Christ. No group is without them. The challenging question is how do we use them? Do they exist for people; are they geared to meeting the needs of individual people; are they used as means of "confronting people with and controlling their lives by the Gospel" as Vieth of Yale puts it? Or have we succumbed to the temptation of permitting a subtle, yet real, barrier to stand between organization and the needy people. Jesus had to set aside one program and organization because it stood between God and the people. He established His own program and organization—the Church—that it might be the open door for people to the new life in Christ.—JJE

"HOPE ALONE IS NOT ENOUGH." So said Secretary of State Marshall at one time last year when the world situation appeared to be unusually critical. If hope alone is not enounugh what is the 'plus'? Will it be the Cross of the atom bomb? Christ or Mars? The answer may be given this year. For the Church of Jesus Christ and particularly for our denomination this presents a crisis comparable to the crisis of the early church when John warned them against slipping into the popular program of emperor-worship which was a state program accommodating to itself religious forces in order to make it appeal to the masses. As the modern states continue on their godless, hell-bent march to mutual destruction, they are still seeking to accommodate the Church to their program. Churches are being tempted; some have already fallen in the temptation. Among these are not only churches with little emphasis on doctrine but churches which, like the Ephesian church, are very insistent upon sound doctrine. Let us not lose our first love! Let us re-affirm our conviction that the success of the Gospel is not dependent on this or that earthly regime, but upon regenerate men!—JJE

THERE IS A TIME WHEN DOING GOOD BECOMES A SIN. There was a time in the life of Jesus when he could no longer have a free conscience about going around and helping people get well and feeding people. There was a time when his more basic mission of witnessing to the truth brought him face to face with the cross, with the decision involving the choice between continuing his work of a healing, preaching, helping ministry, or setting his face as a flint to go up to Jerusalem and to face the real enemy, the enemy of the Spirit. Is the church facing a similar situation today without being aware of it?—JJE

To Bethlehem once came a Rose
Its fragrance sweet to share;
It found a Vase at Golgotha
And blooms forever there.

Daily Bible Reading--A Load or a Lift

by Frederick W. Cropp

Maybe your Bible is no more interesting to you than the telephone directory or an arithmetic book. Or maybe you can say with the Psalmist, "O how love I thy law! It is my meditation all the day."

Why is it, a man asks, that when I read a detective story I lose a half night's rest to finish it, but when I read the Bible, I fall asleep?

This question, in one form or another, is a familiar one to all pastors. At a time when people from all over the world are crying earnestly for the Word of God, why do so many people in America find it drudgery to read the Bible?

Let us admit that it is one thing to believe that everybody ought to read the Bible, or to want to read the Bible with enthusiasm; it is quite another thing even for many earnest Christians to read the Bible regularly with satisfaction.

What is the trouble?

Is it the format? No; the column type of printing is used in many of the most popular magazines. Perhaps the breaks of verses and chapters do contribute to the difficulty, but not too much—and there are numerous Bibles which remove or de-emphasize the versification.

Is it the arrangement of the books of the Bible? Perhaps so. The new reader may begin grandly in Genesis, but finds himself soon involved in laws and customs or plain arithmetic. Or suppose he begins with the New Testament. I have some sympathy with the bluejacket who returned his New Testament to the chaplain with the camplaint that the first of Matthew's Gospel read like a telephone directory. He wasn't interested!

The difficulty may be in the language of the Bible itself, but new versions keep coming off our presses to make the words of the Bible as lively and fresh as its message.

Let us face it: the Bible is not the same as other books; it is not even like other collections of books. It cannot, as a whole, be read as other books are read for the Bible is first of all God's Book; then it may become ours.

The introductory paragraphs to a new series of Sunday-school lessons face the problem of Bible use and its relationship to spiritual growth in these words:

> "How shall there be a rebirth of faith unless God is known in our midst, and how shall He be known unless the word of Scriptures becomes again His living Word in which He speaks to man?"

Thousands of sermons, leaflets, even books, have been written to lead people into the Bible. Hundreds of devices and reading lists are published and widely distributed for this very purpose. And the evidence is at hand that there is more Bible reading now than ever before.

But it is also true that we still need new approaches and suggestions for Bible use.

The Bible deserves to be opened hopefully—at least with as much expectancy as one opens a letter.

Bible reading will revive if we read until a word strikes home to become the "order of the day" for us. That word from the Bible may on some days leap out of the first verse we read. On other days it will have to be hunted as we would search for a lost but valuable coin. It may be a word about God or His world, or more explicitly, His will for us. But be sure of this: in the Bible is planted enough truth to provide us with daily power for a lifetime.

Then there must follow reflection on the truth read. The process of continuous reading is difficult for many people, and even Bible reading has no merit unless the Spirit can work upon the reader's perception.

And finally each reader must make the Bible come alive in action. I find that people are always interested in the story of the translation of the Scriptures, but there is little that the average person can do about the language barrier of Bible reading. Each reader can, however, make the ultimate translation of the Bible into the language of action. A Chinese boy had become a Christian and was discussing his experience with a friend. Said he, "I am now reading the Bible and behaving it." That is a version which all the world can read.

Test your Christian life at this point: Is my daily Bible reading a load, or does it lift me up? If you cannot pass this simple test, try the remedies suggested here— and discover how the Scriptures come alive for you.—Reprinted from the Bible Society Record.

Why is it, a man asks, that when I read a detective story I lose a half night's rest to finish it, but when I read the Bible, I fall asleep?

MCC Resettles 6,881 Last Year

Other 4,000 Seek Help -- Farm Equipment Needed

Your MCC's Annual Meeting

AKRON.—When the World War II refugee migration efforts are completed, 1948 may stand as the peak year in the number of Mennonite refugees moved to new homelands. During the year, 3681 persons were assisted in going to Canada, 2445 to Paraguay, 751 to Uruguay, and 4 to the United States, making a total of 6881. It is interesting to note that more entered Canada than any of the other countries. On the other hand, only four could enter the United States. These totals do not represent a complete picture of the work accomplished, for they do not convey the relief and thankfulness which each of these persons felt in finding an opportunity to resume a peaceful existence. The task is not completed and as the new year is entered, there are many challenges in the refuge migration and resettlement program.

Our best estimate of the Russian Mennonites still remaining in Europe is 4000, of which number 1500 have substantial reason to hope that they may join relatives or friends in Canada. The other 2500 non-relatives hope to enter Canada or the United States. In addition to the 4,000 Russian Mennonites, there is a similar number of Danzig Mennonites who may also seek MCC assistance in migrating to South America.

More Farm Equipment Needed for Paraguay and Uruguay

The response to last year's tools-for-Paraguay program was good, but there are certain items that are still needed. The smaller items of equipment and tools and utensils are rather well supplied through last year's program and through purchases which the later groups of refugees were able to make just before their leaving from Europe. However, there is a scarcity of larger farm equipment, and it is extremely difficult to purchase these items in South America, both because of scarcity and high prices. Our Paraguay brethren who visited the United States and Canada a few months ago commented on the great use to which they could put a large number of abandoned horse-drawn farm implements which are in most of our Mennonite farm communities. We therefore are encouraging the churches to contribute such items.

Those items which are needed are as follows: disc harrows, walking plows, one or two-bottom riding plows, single row planters, single row cultivators, two-horse riding cultivators, stump pullers, ground scrapers, blacksmith tools, treadle sewing machines, and strap or rod iron.

The implements contributed should be in good condition. More detailed information will be sent to each congregation regarding packing and shipping instructions.

The MCC Annual Meeting

The Mennonite Central Committee consists of representatives of each of the various Mennonite and Brethren in Christ groups. Once each year this Committee of representatives meets to review the activity of the past year and plan for the continuaion of the work. Since the fiscal year of the MCC ends on November 30, an appropriate time for this regular annual meeting is about January 1. There may be special MCC meetings during the year for particular reasons, but the annual meeting is the time for an over-all view of the past work and planning for the future.

In this Annual Meeting there is first presented a series of reports covering the activity of all the sections and departments of MCC work. Throughout this critical review of the past year, there is opportunity for discussion and questions on the work. Recommendations are then made for the outline of the work for the ensuing year. Each of the Committee members expressed the extent to which he believes the group which he represents is able to and desires to take part in the work. On the basis of this a plan of work is adopted to which the members are unanimously agreed. This Committee does not act in a legislative way laying down resuirements with which the various groups are forced to comply. Instead it is a meeting where the desires of each group are expressed and a plan adopted through which the desires can unitedly and harmoniously be accomplished.

This year the MCC Annual Meeting was held on December 31 and January 1. On the previous day there were various sectional and sub-committee meetings. The meeting place was Chicago, since this seems to be a central location.

The present Members of the Committee are P. C. Hiebert, Hillsboro, Kans.; Henry A. Fast, North Newton, Kans.; Orie O. Miller, Akron, Pa.; Harold S. Bender, Goshen, Indiana; C. F. Klassen, Winnipeg, Man.; J. J. Thiessen, Saskatoon, Sask.; H. E. Bertsche, Archbold, Ohio; David V. Wiebe, Reedley, Calif.; Henry F. Garber, Mt. Joy, Pa.; Kenneth Geiger, Goshen, Indiana; Sam J. Schmidt, Marion, S. D.; S. C. Yoder, Goshen, Indiana; C. N. Hostetter, Jr., Grantham, Pa.; F. H. Wenger, Moundridge Kans.; Elmer G. Swartzendruber, Wellman, Iowa; H. E. Nunemaker, Goshen, Indiana; I. W. Bauman, Bluffton, Ohio; Eli J. Bontrager, Shipshewana, Indiana; J. G. Toews, Steinbach, Man.; Jesse B. Martin, Waterloo, Ont.; P. G. Lehman, Kitchener, Ont.; and J. A. Ringenberg (associate member), Ft. Wayne, Indiana.

Each branch of the Christian church must make its supreme task to come closer to Christ as Lord even more than its task of drawing closer to other branches of the church, important though that may be.—F. C. Mallott

Manitoba Conference Voices Concerns

This conference of The Manitoba Conference of Mennonites, meeting in Winkler on Nov. 19 and 20, 1948, recognizing in these days of unrest the increasing need of instructing our youth in the principles of non-resistance as held by our church, passed the following resolutions:

Peace

1. That the churches promote a more intensive distribution of the literature prepared by the Mennonite Central Committee on this subject.

Such pamphlets as "Must Christians fight," by Edward Yoder; "The Christian and Conscription," by Edward Yoder and Don Smucker; "Before you Decide," by Howard Charles, are to be recommended, as well as the series of six pamphlets entitled. "Mennonites and their Heritage."

These pamphlets sell for about 30 cents each and may be obtained through David Schroeder, 103 Furby Street, Winnipeg, Manitoba. Mr. Schroeder is representative for the MCC in Manitoba.

2. That the churches invite the peace team organized last year by the MCC for the purpose of instructing young people in the peace principles of our church. This team, composed of David Schroeder, Bruno Epp and Ramon Jantz, was active in Saskatchewan last summer, and is accepting invitations as time and circumstances permit.

3. That besides this one or two other men be appointed to visit the churches with the purpose of giving information on this subject.

4. That a conference of ministers in Manitoba be called before Christmas in order to consider the possibility of agreeing on the form of alternative service to be recommended to our young people in the event of another war.

Pastoral Care

5. In view of the fact that there is a great amount of work that needs to be done in connection with the visiting and spiritual care of our people living in Winnipeg, it was decided to appoint Rev. Jacob Toews of Glenlea, Manitoba, as full time mission worker in this city. Reverend Toews will pay particular attention to more recent immigrants from Europe who are now living in Winnipeg. This work is to be carried on in cooperation with the Bethel Mission Church and the Canadian Mennonite Bible College.

Education

6. After hearing a paper prepared by Rev. P. A. Rempel on the subject, "Our Schools," the Conference passed a resolution stating that our three Mennonite schools in Manitoba, the MCI at Gretna, the Altona Bible School, and the Bible College at Winnipeg, were equally entitled to the full support of our churches. Rev. Rempel stated that each school had its definite contribution to make. The Gretna school was necessary for preparing teachers for our public schools, the Altona school was needed to prepare Sunday school teachers and other workers in our churches, and the Winnipeg Bible College was needed to prepare teachers for the Bible schools, as well as ministers for our churches. It should be our aim to coordinate the work in these schools in such a way that a common purpose would be pursued.

The conference also recommended that our young people attend these institutions which are trying to serve the best interests of our people.

Retreats

7. Due to the necessity of providing a place where our young people, as well as others, might go for physical relaxation and also religious instruction during the summer months, the conference decided to rent a retreat ground for the coming summer.—From December issue of the Bethel Beacon, monthly news publication of the Bethel Church, Winnipeg.

Mennonites Can Meat for Hungry of Europe.—A mass butchering of hogs for the benefit of Mennonite relief agencies in Europe was conducted December 16 and 17 by members of the Emmaus Mennonite Church, at Whitewater, according to reports.

Forty-six hogs weighing between 250 and 600 pounds were butchered and the meat canned on the farm of Albert H. Classen, well known Butler County farmer.

The congregation canned 4,700 No. 2½ cans of pork with the aid of a portable canning unit mounted on a truck and operated by electricity.

The meat will be sent to the Mennonite Central Committee at Akron, Pa., for distribution throughout the world. One hundred members of the Whitewater church participated in the canning.—Hillsboro Journal, December 23, 1948.

The Washington Scene

by Paul Goering

December 20. Selective Service reports from 42 states show 3211 registrants classified IV-E as of November 30. Twenty-four of these are negroes. Total classifications were 747,000—less than a tenth of the nearly 9 million registrants. IV-E's represent slightly over .4 of one-per cent of total classifications.

As for 1-A-O's while the law requires local boards to show them on a separate register National Headquarters of SSS says it does not separate 1-A-O's from 1-A's. States not reported are Arizona, California, Florida, Colorado, Minnesota, and Missouri.

Introducing the Mexican "Hoffnungsau"

by Cornelius Boldt

Our little church here in Cuauhtemoc consists of less than 30 members, although the congregation is considerably larger. As in the case of other churches, we, too, have many problems that confront us and must be overcome through unceasing prayer. Although we are strangers, the kind people are doing all in their power to make us feel at home.

Problems of the Leader

Taking charge of the teaching of secular and religious education here in school, I found the double burden of both school and church too difficult, so am trying to find a teacher to take my place in school. The subjects taught are religion, German, and English. The attendance is 20 pupils.

The Wider Community

Sunday afternoons, as often as possible, we serve a group of about 30 Mennonite people at Pedronales are taking part in our Bible Course. It seems to be a great incentive to weekly or even daily Bible reading. Should any of our readers be interested, I would be pleased to explain more fully. Our session for the Bible Course takes place immediately after the worship period, here in Cuauhtemoc after the evening service, and at Pedronales immediately after the afternoon service. If this kind of work is carried on prayerfully, no doubt it should bear fruit.

About the People

The elderly brother, David Redekop, who suffered serious illness some months ago, is much improved in health. Sunday mornings he is back again in church, and with renewed efforts participating in other church activities as well.

Death came to Pedronales, when Mrs. Bernard Penner suddenly passed away during the absence of husband and children. The funeral service took place here in church. According to law, the deceased must be buried within 24 hours.

The new leader of the M. C. C., Rev. P. J. B. Reimer, has consented to assist in our church services. The other members are also serving in various capacities in the furtherance of God's work.

About three months have passed since we stepped on Mexican soil. Praises are due our heavenly Father for guidance and protection all along the way.

Ps. 136:1. "O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good, for His mercy endureth forever."

To our parents, relatives, and friends in Canada and the United States, we send greetings and covet your prayers. Yours in His Service. Cornelius Boldt, Cuauhtemoc, Chih.

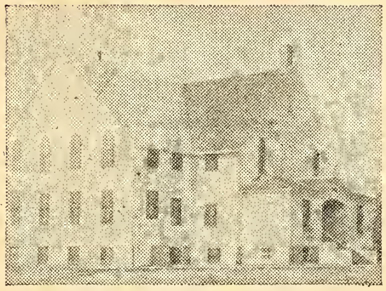
BEHIND THE 100% PLAN

TABOR MENNONITE CHURCH
Eleven miles north and one east of Newton, Kansas
H. B. Schmidt, Pastor
P. H. Richert, Pastor-Emeritus
(Serving 160 homes)



THE TABOR Mennonite Church was erected in 1908 and enlarged in 1938. It now has close to 400 members. A park was planted in 1929, which attracts picnickers and reunions.

In 1941 the General Conference passed a resolution that the churches pay for the Conference papers. Subscriptions increased 25 per cent in our church effectively. By 1945 subscriptions had increased 70 per cent. Much work has been done by the pastors and the local church paper agents to achieve the goal of the 100 Per Cent Plan. They have been especially anxious to place the MENNONITE in every home even where only one party is a member of our church. At first each family was asked to contribute to the cause. In 1945 the church took the payment to make the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN complete. Now the Sunday school has the responsibility, as well as that of the JUNIOR MESSENGER HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN.

The HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN keeps the members informed about the work of the Conference. Young people are drafted into Conference work. They will take over the work tomorrow. They become familiar with its activities. It provides inspiration and information. It keeps even non-attending members informed.

The plan also works for unity. United we shall stand. What could our churches accomplish if we all take active zeal for peace! The results have been partially shown. "And working together with Him, we entreat also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain" (I Cor. 6:1).

Protesting A

on the Chri

by Ford Berg, M

Editor's Note: This artic article which appeared in the Mennonite Church.

Increasingly evident is a growing awareness of the problem of popular Fundamentalism entering our church. That it has been seeping in is familiar knowledge; that it has a substantial foothold in some quarters is less known; that some of its trappings are un-Biblical is not always known. An awareness of what popular Fundamentalism involves as compared to our position of maintaining the supremacy of the New Testament in faith and action will help us to realize that we need to continue to be "protestants" against the Protestants. We are also Fundamentalists, especially in what we believe concerning the inspiration of the Scriptures, the deity of Christ, miracles, the atonement, regeneration through faith, and the resurrection of Christ. Perhaps a better explanation is that we are fundamental but not Fundamentalists.

" . . . a rash disregard . . . ."

We need to mark that Fundamentalism, as popularly interpreted, has slithered into our church, bringing with it a hundred views on dispensationalism, faith in Christ only (failure to insist on discipleship), and a rash disregard of the teaching of the New Testament on man's relation to man. Some who have assimilated part of this Fundamentalism creed would rise in horror and would disbelieve it if someone should suddenly inform them that their system of Biblical interpretation lends support to contradictory positions, and is incompatible with an interpretation which says that the New Testament has supremacy in faith, life, and action.

Many points of Fundamentalism are good. Their stress on evangelism in going out and reaching the unsaved is commendable, indeed. They put us to shame in this. For this activity and initiative the New Testament faith is followed. We use the same verses for our activity on this point. But there is still a radical difference between Fundamentalism and our faith. Most Fundamentalists shift between the old covenant and the Holy Spirit age, using one period and then the next to prove their point. Our difference is that we place the period following the descent of the Spirit as recorded in Acts 2 as over and above the many Old Testament rituals, regulations, and enforcements. "But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises. For if that first covenant has been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second" (Heb. 8:6, 7). We understand this to be final, that Old Testament laws are not to be observed unless there is specific mention in the New Testament in which there is a restatement, a repointing, or a sharpening of any one Old Testament teaching on life and conduct. Only those teachings of the Old Testament are carried over that are specifically mentioned by the New Testament church. Not to follow this interpretation of the Bible as a whole throws the reader into helpless turmoil concerning which guide to follow, the old or the new. Several examples will show that we need to be consistent on this. For example, the old law permitted concubinage whereas the new does not even sanction looking upon a woman with evil intentions. Also, the new says. "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer." The old was considerable different in this, permitting retaliation. The Levitical law system had dozens of sundry restrictions. But since these are not at all restated, repointed, or sharpened in the Holy Spirit age, we simply must disregard them. If we shuffle between the two, we become hopelessly confused.

Dare we be bold to say that the Fundamentalist's (remember the "F") confusion on this point is one of the reasons that war plagues this earth? For if the Christian church would denounce war and refuse to participate, there would be little war, especially in a nation such as the United States. War simply could barely exist. The nominal Christian readily admits that war is wrong and foolish. But along come certain Fundamentalists who actually advocate it for the preservation of the faith, as a means of serving God. War would probably continue despite what the Fundamentalists say about it, just as it continues despite what the Anabaptist have said about it. But to have a group of Christians openly urge that war is proper for a nation certainly must have its effect upon decisions and policies, the long-range planning that thwarts or encourages warfare. A Religious News Service release, under date of May 14 of this year, said, "Representatives of the American Council of Christian Churches, a fundamentalist group, presented a peace program to President Truman . . . . Following their meeting with the President, the American Council delegates quoted him as saying that he was glad to meet a bunch of preachers who were not pacifists."

Caution!

It is a difficult matter to point a finger at other individuals or church bodies, but to prove that some Christians throw in their force to warfare, and to avoid vague generalities, it will be done here for clarity, however frank. Generally it is much wiser to be positive than negative, considering the system of interpretation rather than the individuals.

John R. Rice, one of the foremost and most effective revivalists and evangelists of our day, has edited a book, The Sword Book of Treasures, which is a compilation of "Gems of Christian literature from writers living and dead and published in 'The Sword of the Lord' [Rice's magazine]." This book has some excellent articles, but the one of present concern is the chapter on "The Christian and War," written by R. L. Moyer, late dean of the Northwestern Bible School and Seminary. The fact that Rice includes it in his book is testimony of his seconding of Moyer's view, which is claimed to be the "Word of God."[1]

rint of a carefully annotated official organ of the Old Men-

“ . . . . not all killing is murder”

R. L. Moyer’s first argument justifying warfare is that human government is ordained by God (to this we agree) substantiating his opinion by referring to Dan. 2:21 and other verses.[2] Next he avers that God takes life for the judgment of sin[3] and that God killed 185,000 Assyrians in one night. Therefore, since God has taken life, not all killing is murder. To prove this he quotes the seeming contradiction of “Thou shalt not kill,” and “Thou shalt utterly destroy them,” both written by Moses. The first applies to the individual, Moyer claims, and the latter to a nation. “Killing by an individual is prohibited, but killing by a nation is permitted.”[4] He attempts to prove this by Exodus 22:2, 3, where “we are told that if a thief, in breaking into a house, be smitten so that he die, there shall be no blood shed for him.”[5] The defender is not to be punished. Therefore, he continues, “The Bible recognizes a man’s right to defend his person, his property, his dear ones, and his country, too. Would you defend your home or your dear ones from attack? Certainly, you would. If you saw a big brute of a man abusing a boy, would you go to the defense of the boy? You ought to.”[6]

Moyer also says that God authorizes governments to take life (Num. 2:33-35), and “let us not lay any charge of cruelty against God.”[7] To the question, ‘Should nations ever declare war?” he writes, “Our answer is Yes,”[8] referring his readers to Ezekiel 14:12.

The Major Premise

By this time it is evident that Moyer, as do many of the Fundamentalists, fails to grasp an understanding of rightly dividing the Word, and uses Old Testament verses out of their setting. Moyer does, however, refer to the New Testament. His reply to what our Lord said in John 18:36, “If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight,” is that “His kingdom is not of this world. It is the kingdom of heaven, and will be established by Him when He descends from heaven.”[9] He uses other Scriptures in the New Testament to bolster his support of warfare, but he does this only after he has established the law of retaliation and criminal justice in Genesis and Leviticus. He further jumps about by saying the Christian should obey the human government and then two pages later gives an emphatic no, that if the command of the government contradicts the command of God, God must be obeyed rather than men.[10] Of course, once he has set up the premise that the nation can institute war, his argument is at least consistent. “War today is not between soldiers; it is between nations.” [11]

. . . . it hath been said . . . .

Another Fundamentalist’s position is that of Harold Snider, in his book published by Zondervan, “Does the Bible Sanction War?” where he says icily: “Let it be said right here—sans sugar-coating— all who take their stand against capital punishment do so against the very teaching of the Word of God and pit their judgment against the judgment of the Almighty! Who am I to criticize God? Who am I to question His judgments? And if God, through holy man of old, said, ‘Whoso sheddeth man’s blood, by man shall his blood be shed’ (Gen. 9:6), and also ‘he that killeth any man shall surely be put to death . . .’ (Lev. 24:17), that is exactly what He must mean!”[12]

In examining Genesis 9:6, we find that God is there presenting His covenant to Noah, instructing him on the procedure of life after the flood. In the latter quotation, Leviticus 24:17, the third verse down says: “Breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth . . .” (Lev. 24:20). Let us compare this, remembering Hebrews 8:6, 7, with what Jesus said in Matthew 5:38, 39: “Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: but I say unto you, That ye resist not evil . . . .” Snider’s difficulty here is the same as Rice’s and Moyer’s and many of the Fundamentalists’, in that he utterly fails to give the Word of the New Testament supremacy over that of the Old Testament.

Snider also uses as his pattern of conduct the practice found in Numbers 35:11-15, where the slayers are to flee to a city of refuge and there receive a fair trial.[13] A survey of his book’s subchapter headings shows that Snider uses Old Testament verses liberally; for instance, “ . . . With us is the Lord our God to help us, and to fight our battles . . .” (II Chron. 32:8).[14] One of the New Testament subheadings which he uses is, “I am set for the defence of the gospel” (Phil. 1:17).[15]

“ . . . . more fair . . . .”

Henry Ostrom, a prolific writer for Zondervan’s, in his booklet, “The Christian and War,’[16] is more fair and quotes New Testament verses in support for his argument. One of his last points, however, shows his failure to hold a consistent position on the relationship of the two testaments. He quotes: “I, even I, will bring a sword upon you” (Ezek. 6:3). “I came not to send peace, but a sword” (Matt. 10:34). “The Lord set every man’s sword against his fellow” (Judges 7:22). “He [the government] beareth not the sword in vain” (Rom. 13:4). “The book of the wars of the Lord” (Num. 21:14). Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah, David—became through faith mighty in war. Heb. 11:32, 34.[17] Ostrom says that for a remarkable contrast of this latter quotation we are to look at Ezra 8:22.

During the last war, Bro. John A. Hostetler distributed some tracts on warfare and made them available to ministers of various denominations in the area in which he then lived. First Lieutenant Eugene McGee, a chaplain, sent Hostetler a message on which “Christian and Missionary Alliance” was printed on the letterhead. McGee said, in part "The policeman who put down crime within a country or the soldier who put down international crime in the world is 'the minister of God' . . . . My dear brother, I pray you to repent of this serious error of doctrine, and ask God to enlighten you and forgive you."[18]

" . . . all conscientious objectors should be shot . . ."

Various Sunday-school commentaries, particularly Arnold's are notably weak on their understanding of warfare and do not hesitate to urge the Christian to participate. The Sunday School Times has long been noted for its sanction of Christian warfare. Most radio evangelists, Charles E. Fuller in particular, would send our young men off to the battlefield. A leading professor, a ringing Fundamentalist, in a newly established seminary on the West Coast is reported to have said that all conscientious objectors should be shot. And so the parade continues. We should not laugh about their views; rather we should grieve.

A Welcome Note!

Through all this, a welcome note comes from the book, "The Uneasy Conscience of Modern Fundamentalism,"[19] by Carl F. H. Henry, professor of Philosophy of Religion in the new Fuller Theological Seminary, Pasadena, California. Henry, a convinced Fundamentalist, an evangelical man, says that some time ago he asked one hundred evangelical pastors, "How many of you, during the past six months, have preached a sermon devoted in large part to the condemnation of such social evils as aggressive warfare, racial hatred and intolerance of liquor traffic, the exploitation of labor or management, or the like—a sermon containing not merely an incidental or illustrative reference, but directed mainly against such evils and proposing the framework, in which you think solution is possible?" He says that not a single hand was raised in response. Although Henry uses "aggressive warfare," his concern is to the point and is a good beginning.

Fundamentalists Not Alone

One could single out most of the Fundamentalists in Protestantism and even a few in other Mennonite bodies as defenders of war. The Fundamentalists, however are not alone in this war-view. Loraine Boettner in, "The Christian Attitude Toward War,"[20] has plenty to say about people who believe that war is not for the Christian. Daniel A. Poling, certainly not a Fundamentalist, in his book, "A Preacher Looks at War,"[21] says he hates war, but goes on to prove that Christians are indebted to the support of war when Christian principles are at stake. Word can be said for Poling, however, which cannot be said for many Fundamentalists, that he respects the view of the nonresistant persons (he calls them pacifists). Some of the Fundamentalists practically assign nonresistant persons to hell, call them cowards, shirkers, and whatnot.

"Sincerity not Enough"

In conclusion, we should not take an unwholesome attitude toward those who do not see as we do. Rather, we should be willing to explain our position to them and have them see that their position is hardly Christian, pointing out their inconsistencies in interpretation. No more sincere group of individuals than the Fundamentalists can be found. But since sincerity is no criterion of the Christian faith, we would do well to emerge from our shell, and perhaps the cloak of self-righteousness, and tell the Christian world about the love of God and how that love should be exemplified in every Christian. We should show them how God reconciled us to Himself. "And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation" (II Cor. 5:18), and this reconciliation involves living godlike and Christlike.

Confusion Until . . . .

Our own Mennonite young people will continue their mystification as to which is right, participation or nonparticipation in war, unless we approach the whole question from the angle of a total overall interpretation of the Bible, warning about pulling verses out of their setting, and making clear that the New Testament has supremacy in faith, life, and action. It must be considered as the fulfillment of God's Word. We dare not suggest that all Scripture, verse for verse, has the same weight. We need to teach that faith through Christ is trusting in God, and having proper relations to our fellow men and the material world. Strangely, although many of our people live the full Christian life, they are not aware that that life is a result of an interpretation that the teachings of Jesus and His apostles are the fulfillment of the progressive relation instituted by God. "Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster" (Gal. 3:24, 25).

Opportunity Supreme

We who understand this position have a tremendous opportunity of evangelization. Witness: "One of the young people in Neustadt, Germany, said to me last evening. 'We cannot understand the American people; a lot of them come over here and shoot us to pieces, and then a small group comes over and helps us the way you Mennonite Central Committee people are doing' "[22] Let us awaken! Dale F. Nofziger a worker among the Jews, feels that one of our primary tasks as Christians, as far as the Jews are concerned, is to help them understand that war-minded Christianity which so often involves persecution of the Jews, is not really true Christianity. Why, the Jews ask, should they love the Messiah whose followers hound, persecute them, and actually murder them—in the name of Jesus whom we proclaim to be the Son of God, the Son of Love. Can we blame them? Would we want to believe in Christ if we knew that so-called Christians are prejudiced and even hate us? All evangelization work, Jewish or non-Jewish, will be more consistent if one remembers that Old Testament sundry laws and restrictions should not be pulled out of their setting and that a balanced view of the Bible as a whole is necessary before the war question can be satisfactorily answered.

Our Colleges and Seminary

BETHEL COLLEGE

More than $1,200 have been collected in cash and pledges from students and faculty to set up a supplementary feeding program for the students at the University of Mainz, Germany. The Student Christian Association, which sponsors this drive, announced that the campaign for funds will close Jan. 5, two days after the Christmas vacation.

Dean H. A. Fast and Dr. J. Winfield Fretz attended the annual meeting of the MCC held in Chicago, Dec. 30 to Jan. 1. Dr. Fast is vice-chairman of the MCC and Dr. Fretz is chairman of the Aid Section. Approximately seven students also went to Chicago to attend the meetings of the Peace Section held at the same time. Peace groups in colleges which are members of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges had been invited for the first time to sit in on the meetings of the Peace Section of the MCC.

Five programs of sacred music will be given by the Bethel College Men's Octet during the week-end of January 7, with Dr. David H. Suderman directing the octet. The first program will be at Pawnee Rock, Kansas, followed by others at Waka, Texas; Turpin, Oklahoma; and a community concert at Hanston, Kansas. One other meeting will be arranged later. Members of the group are: Eldo Neufeld, Inman, Kansas, and Bert Russel, Portland, Oregon, first tenor; Walter Jost and Theodore Pankratz, both from Hillsboro, Kansas, second tenor; Novalis Toews, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, and O'Ray Graber, Marion, South Dakota, baritone; John Gaeddert and Walter Siemens, both from Buhler, Kansas, bass.

The Paganini Quartet will give a concert at Bethel College, Tuesday, January 18—the fourth program this season in the Memorial Hall series. The string quartet was only founded in 1945, but has become widely known for the classical music they are playing.

Dr. J. Winfield Fretz, recently appointed to a committee to advise the government of Kansas regarding the resettlement of displaced persons from Europe, reports a unanimous feeling in the committee that such persons would be welcome in Kansas.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

December 14, the students and faculty of Freeman Junior College and the people of the surrounding community celebrated Founder's Day, the 48th year since the filing of incorporation papers. Dr. L. L. Ramseyer, President of Bluffton College was the guest speaker. In the forenoon he spoke on the subject of "Christian Education and the Church," and in the afternoon on "Christian Education and the World." Both messages were challenging and timely for the observance of Founder's Day. The Home Economics Department served lunch to the visitors. In the evening a musical Christmas pageant was given by the music and art departments. An offering for the floor of the new gym was taken.

Christmas vacation for students of Freeman Junior College began December 22 and ended January 4, 1949. The students again had a white Christmas this year with proceeds going to mission work in America.

President Miller spoke to the students in chapel about "Playing Second Fiddle Graciously." As an example of a person who did just that he used the disciple Andrew. Rev. J. J. Regier gave a challenging message to the Student Christian Association in a talk entitled "Be More Than a Conqueror." A film about the song of Fanny Crosby was shown to the Christian Youth Volunteers. A March of Time film was also shown to the students. It concerned the very timely subject—the Atomic Bomb.

December 8, Dr. Gross and President Miller attended the Annual Conference of Church Related Colleges in the West Central Area held in Omaha, Nebraska.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

This week has been a rich experience in special Christmas emphases. On Sunday, December 12, the Sunday school presented its Christmas program since this was the last Sunday that our entire Seminary family would be together before the Christmas recess.

Thursday evening the entire student body of both Bethany and Mennonite Biblical participated in an all-school party which featured the singing of carols and other informal activities.

On Friday there were two climatic activities to this splendid week of Advent celebration. First there was the all music program in the chapel which was climaxed by the singing of the Hallelujah chorus. Every student was given a copy of this music and the stirring rendition was given without rehearsal. Then the concluding event of the week before the students left for their homes was the faculty Christmas meeting. Outstanding in this meeting were reminiscences of vivid Christmas experiences from the youth period of the faculty's life plus some very interesting contributions from the mission fields of Africa, India, and China. Dr. S. F. Pannabecker gave an illustrated message of the conception of Christmas in Chinese art, showing how Chinese artists pictured Joseph and Mary and the Baby Jesus as Oriental people in an Oriental background, thus making Christ come alive to another group of people quite unknown to most of us. All in all it was a fine week in which to acknowledge that almighty God did something decisive, final, and ultimate in sending forth His Son.

Jottings

—Friedensfeld Church, Turpin, Oklahoma: A total of $2,268.64 was recently collected for war sufferers in Europe. Rev. and Mrs. C. H. Suckau of Nebraska, Mr. and Mrs. Wilbert Unruh, and Miss Ruby Unruh, from the "Go Ye Mission," were with us for our annual Harvest Festival. We have recently canned 1,325 cans of meat for relief. The boys with the canning machine gave us a nice musical program while they were in this vicinity.—Mrs. J. I. Koehn, Corr.

—Walton Mennonite Church, Walton, Kansas: On November 28, Dr. C. H. Suckau and the Ambassadors Quartet, from Omaha, Nebraska, were in charge of the morning service. The proceeds of the Mission Sale and Supper, held December 2, were $271.53. The C. E. held its annual Christmas program on December 5; featured topics were, "A Christian's Christmas Message to the World." and "What if There Were No Christmas?"—Ella Voth, Corr.

—The Third Quarterly Conference of the Eastern District will be held in the Bethel Mennonite Church, Perkasie, on Monday, Jan. 31, 1949, at 2:30 and 7:30. In the afternoon a paper will be presented by one of the pastors. The Old Folks Home at Fredrick will also be discussed. In the evening, Dr. Paul Minninger, Professor of Christian Education at Goshen College, will speak on "The Principle and Practice of Non-Conformity to the World."

—Farms for sale: W. H. Regier, pastor of the Colby Mennonite Church, has announced to interested members of the brotherhood that there are several farms for sale in the Colby, Kansas, area. He has expressed interest in inviting Mennonite farmers to consider these opportunities so as to strengthen the thriving church at Colby. Interested parties may inquire from Brother Regier or from the Board of Mutual Aid at North Newton, Kansas.

—First Mennonite Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: The week of November 28 to December 3 has been a week of spiritual blessings through a series of messages brought to us by Rev. Don E. Smucker, of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago. December 5 the Men's Chorus of our church gave a musical program at the State Mental Hospital at Blackfoot, Idaho. Approximately 500 patients were reached by going to the various wards of the hospital.—Arnold E. Bartel, Corr.

—Zion Church, Elbing, Kansas: On Thursday, December 2, a group of about ten young people from our church spent the day working at the clothing center at North Newton. Following the noon meal at the college dining hall, the group met in the faculty room for a short program. Mr. Henry Claassen led in devotions and Miss Teatske van der Zijjp, foreign student at the college, told of relief work in Holland. Mrs. W. C. Voth and Miss Eleanor Camp were guest speakers at our Sewing Society meeting on December 9.—Dorothea Dyck, Corr.

—Due to the illness of Dr. A. C. Schultz of Northern Baptist Seminary, Dr. S. F. Pannabecker substituted for him at the Laymen's Missionary Rally at the Temple Building, Chicago, December 9. Approximately 600 men from the various Mennonite congregations of downstate Illinois attended these meetings which were planned by veteran city mission work, A. H. Leaman.

—Rev. Don E. Smucker conducted special meetings at the First Mennonite Church of Christian, Moundridge, Kansas, December 26-31. He presented also the Christmas sermon at the Emmaus Mennonite Church, of Whitewater, Kansas.

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Oregon: During the past month we have received 25 new members into our church, 11 by letter and 14 by baptism. Wednesday, December 8, the executive committee and evangelization committee of the Pacific District Conference met in our church. Their agenda was largely concerned with missionary projects. We are preparing for our Christmas program which will be presented December 19.—Beverly Yoder, Corr.

—Saron Mennonite Church, Orienta, Oklahoma: November 14 we celebrated the 50th aniversary of our church, with full day services. Rev. Lando Hiebert, of Omaha, Nebraska, and Dr. Dan Gilbert were guest speakers. In connection with this celebration our church sponsored a Bible conference which was held in the city auditorium at Fairview, Oklahoma, the previous week also conducted by Dr. Dan Gilbert, of Washington, D. C. Recently our pastor, Rev. H. P. Fast and Mrs. Fast, spent three weeks in Steinbach, Manitoba, Canada, where he was a guest speaker at a Bible conference. Our annual church meeting was held December 7.—Mrs. Ernest Voth, Corr.

—Zionsville, Pa.: The Upper Milford Mennonite Congregation has marked the beginning of a new era in its long history, on December 19, 1948. The First Mennonite Church, Allentown, and the Upper Milford Church have been one charge for the past 47 years, sharing the services of one pastor. Rev. Walter H. McDowell, Mechanics Grove, Pa., has begun his ministry in our church as a full-time pastor, serving only the one congregation. Reverend McDowell is the 15th duly elected pastor of the congregation in the 208 years of its history. The pastor was greeted at his new home in Chapel, Pa., by a decorated Christmas tree and a bountiful supply of food, also many helping hands assisting in unloading the moving van.—N. S. Schantz, Corr.

—Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, Wichita, Kansas: Once a week the men of our church meet for a "work night." Through their efforts, two Sunday school rooms, the mother's room, and hall on the main floor are well on their way to completion. The Ladies Friendship Circle sponsored a Christmas food sale in a downtown store December 11. Each Saturday afternoon the Primary, Junior, Intermediate, and Catechism classes meet in the church for Bible study, song, supervised play, and handwork. Reverend Langenwalter and six Bethel College students are conducting these classes. Our church was crowded on December 19, when the children presented the pageant, "The Bells of Christmas."—Mrs. Waldo Leisy, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, McPherson, Kansas: Recent programs in our church have included Dr. E. S. Johnson, former professor at Hartford Seminary, who spoke about conditions in Europe; Hulda Gaede, who showed slides of last year's student tour to Europe; a program by the young people from the Free Methodist Church. Th cantata. "Carols of Christmas," was given December 19. The ladies of the church have canned 196 cans of jam, 18 cans of lard, and 196 cans of meat for relief. The Ladies Friendship Circle has recently had programs by the Hopefield Ladies Aid, and another by Vaio Alailima, of Pago Pago, Samoa, student at McPherson College, who spoke about conditions in Samoa.—Mrs. John W. Goering, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Geary, Okla.: The Ladies' Aid packed four boxes of clothing and sent it to the clothing center at North Newton, Kansas. The church has been enjoying the benefit of the minister's pulpit exchange during the months of October, November, and December. Ministers taking part were: Rev. Henry Hege, Corn; Rev. Waldo Kaufman, Hydro; Rev. C. Boese, Carnegie; Rev. G. Peters, Gotebo; Rev. P. Dahlenberg, Bessie; and our pastor, Rev. Abe Peters. The last of these series was on December 12, and Reverend Boese was our guest. The Brotherhood organization enjoyed a fellowship dinner Monday, December 13. —Corr.

Calling the United States by Amateur Radio

The Usefulness of 'Ham' Radio to a Missionary

by Gerald Stucky (W9KXS)

Cachipay, Colombia, South America

Fifteen thousand dollars lost by mail! For a long time we had been waiting for some necessary funds and now we had received a letter stating that the money had been sent some time ago. It had not arrived. Surely it must be lost, we thought. The mails are so unsafe—perhaps the money was stolen. It was imperative that payment on the check be canceled at once. We must cable at once to our Headquarters in Newton, Kansas. As I made preparation to go to Bogotá to send the cable, another plan began to take shape in my mind. Cables are so expensive, and besides, so little can be said Why not use amateur radio? Surely my "ham" friend in Bogotá would again be glad to loan me the facilities of his ham station. I got into our Station Wagon and made the trip to Bogotá to visit my ham friend. It was not long before we were calling "CQ Kansas," and lo and behold an amateur in Hutchinson, Kansas, replied to our call. We told him what our situation was and asked him to call Walter Dyck in Newton and to reverse the charges. He was glad to do so, and in a few minutes we received the answer—and everything had been fixed up. Total cost of all the communications—about 35 cents—the call from Hutchinson to Newton.

The joy, experience, education, and value that one gets out of being a radio amateur far outweighs the small investment one must make to buy equipment for a small transmitter and receiver. To be a radio amateur i.e., a liscensd operator, one must pass an examination given by the government. If one passes this simple examination, he is assigned call letters, and is permitted to own and operate an amateur station.

As a hobby, radio is intensely interesting. Although one may have no intention of making radio his vocation, still it is a paying proposition. It teaches one how to make and repair simple radio receivers and also how to make simple transmitters. The time and money that hundreds of young people spend at the soda fountain, theater, etc., could much better be used in some worthwhile hobby. Through amateur radio, a person can receive a good education in the line of radio and besides have the fun of talking to many people throughout the United States and the world. Some radio amateurs talk to almost all of the countries in the world!

On the mission field, amateur radio takes on a yet more practical value. Although we do not yet have the necessary $200-$300 that it takes to build a good station nor the necessary permissions, we have enjoyed the benefits of the occasional use of a station of a friend in Bogotá. When a missionary leaves the United States, it doesn't mean that he desires to live a secluded life and forget all of his friends and loved ones. It doesn't mean that he looses all interest in the life about him nor in the life of his homeland. Since he can only return to the United States every three to seven years for furlough he finds it very difficult, however, to maintain a standard of life common to his former friends as well as a progressive spirit. Radio has been, and can be, of great help.

Through the use of amateur radio here, we have been enabled to occasionally talk with old friends. How good it has been to hear the familiar voice of my good friend N. Paul Stucky (WHOM) at Newton Kansas. Through amateur radio LaVerne and Harriet Rutschman have been able to talk to LaVerne's father and family. Even the little baby, David Henry, cried, over microphone for the benefit of his grandparents. Through amateur radio we have been enabled to talk directly with various members of our Board of Foreign Missions to tell them of what we are trying to do here and what our problems are. We have been enabled to straighten out some of the difficult problems that have confronted us and that are often so difficult to get straightened out by mail. By radio we have been able to do in an hour what often takes weeks and months by mail. It has given us new encouragement, and it has been a great blessing to listen to voices, familiar voices, talk to us about what they are doing at home. Although Mary Becker has gone on furolugh we have still been able to keep in contact with her through amateur radio. Recently we talked with her for about an hour telling her of recent events on the field and listening to her tell of her trip home, of her contacts with friends and Board members. Through the medium of radio we hope to be able to effect a much better cooperation between missionary staff and Mission Board. What a great blessing and of what great benefit it would be to talk with one or more members of the Board every week! Then the missionary would no longer be isolated but would be as near to his constituency as their telephone. Is it wrong to add efficiency to the wide flung missionary activity of our church in India, China, Africa, and South America? No, let us do this and much more that the Word of God might penetrate into the remotest corners of the globe. Let us use the advances of science to the glory of God.

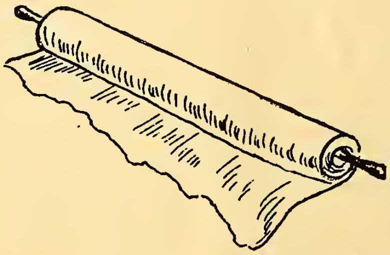
How We Got Our Bible

"When the Jews Change Languages"

Article I in a Series

by Jacob Friesen, Beatrice, Nebraska

SATURDAY John went to the synagogue with the other members of the family. It was the Jewish Sunday or Sabbath. As they walked, they chatted in the common language of their community. Though the language was quite new, most people spoke it. Alexander the Great had conquered the world bringing with him the Greek culture and language. Alexandria became the center of learning. New opportunities invited Jews of Palestine to make their homes in Egypt.



As the family walked along, a real problem was being discussed. When the children were small they spoke only Hebrew, the language of the Scriptures, of the synagogue and of their forefathers. All was well until John's oldest brother went to school and learned to speak Greek. His youngest brother and sister learned it too, and now they thought it old-fashioned to speak their childhood language. The change began about 15 years ago. Now Greek was rapidly becoming the language of the home. The seriousness of this change was most evident on the Sabbath. Only Hebrew was used in the services.

Time for Church!

The family had entered the synagogue and had taken its traditional place. As the service began, John and his sister Lois were more interested in what happened than in what was being said. As the scroll was brought out from its place behind the red drape, they recalled its history and meaning as told them by their father. God chose to lead Abraham, their father, and his descendents as a special people. Later He spoke to Moses and gave him the Ten Commandments. Under God's direction the experiences of his people were written down, together with the story of how the world came into being. Later God sent prophets to explain his will to the people. These divine messages were preserved and became the sacred Scriptures reverenced by their parents.

There were three main divisions: The Law, The Prophets (including the former and later), and The Writings. These had been hand-copied, either on parchment (a thin leather) or papyrus scrolls. Usually a scroll was one book of the Bible as we know it today in our Old Testament. Books such as Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles, were too long for one scroll so they were copied on two and numbered "first" and "second." The copiers were very exact, watching every letter and writing evenly. After this was finished, they were so sure of its accuracy that they would often destroy the old copy. Every Sabbath the Rabbi took one of these scrolls and placed it upon the pulpit. As he read, one assistant on either side held the scroll while the third pointed to the lines. This was very impressive, but it was all in Hebrew.

How Long, Mother?

Long before the service was over Lois asked her mother, "When will he stop talking?" John could understand the Hebrew, but the Greek of the week was so much a part of him that he didn't follow the words of the Rabbi very closely. The problem of this family was common. Children were not receiving the proper instruction and parents were staying away from worship. The empty pews and the attitude of the children re-emphasized the concern of the parents. The family returned home realizing that something had to be done.

To day we do not know the details of what happened. One tradition tells us that seventy distinguished leaders and scholars were assigned the task of translating the Hebrew Scriptures into the Greek vernacular. The seventy men worked seventy days. When they compared their work, the translations were identical. The details of this tradition are not generally accepted today, but this first translaton is still called "the Septuagint," — "The translation of the seventy."

Many Translations

Since this first translation of our present Old Testament was made from the original Hebrew into the Greek, the Bible has been translated into 1,900 or more languages. The great work of translating and distributing the sacred Scriptures is carried on today by our Bible societies. Millions are reading the Bible in their mother tongue as the story of new translation is told.

A Ship! A Ship!

Rescue After Thirteen Days Adrift at Sea

by A. Donald Miller

When we had our first rest and the Captain had come into the cabin, we had our first real talk with him. We told him our position when our ship had been sunk, and the course we were making for St. Helena.

"You are still about 150 miles away," he said, "But you are right on your course."

My wife showed him the little pocket compass by which we had steered.

"That is wonderful," said the captain. "And there's another thing which is wonderful, too. We've been at sea for over forty days, and I was given my course before leaving Scotland all the way to the Cape. And then, last night, we received a wireless message from the Admiralty, to change our course by so many points. And that is the only reason why I have come to cross your path!"

We were deeply moved. The Admiralty knew nothing of our position; the ship knew nothing. But God knew, and in this mysterious way our prayer had been answered.

"This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes."

Postscript

As I finish the writing of this narrative a letter reaches me from a friend saying that he feels sure God must have had some special word for me in the experiences of those days adrift, and in that marvelous rescue.

What It All Means

God had many words for me—chiefly two. The first was one of quickening, of challenging, to "stab my spirit broad awake" to what physical and material want and isolation from one's fellows mean; and what, on the other hand, the grasp of welcome and the provision of those material needs bring. The second word was one of strong assurance that God uses all for good; that He hears man's cry, and that He uses man's co-operation to frustrate the assaults of evil and to bring, out of life's very disasters, a fuller life.

As the happening of those thirteen days drift further away they become more and more symbolic—even sacramental. For twenty years I had been engaged in the task of helping to provide havens of refuge and rescue for desperately needy men and women. I had seen them arrive in their tattered and soiled rags; looked into their careworn and ill-nourished faces; listened to their pitiful tales of separation from their loved ones and their homes as the disease of leprosy had shattered their lives. All the while I had never known hunger and thirst myself; I had never known what it was to be cut off from human aid, from access to the world of men; I had never looked in vain upon bare horizons that offered no sign of hope of help. I had never known what it meant at last, stripped and possessed nothing, to be taken into strong and welcoming arms, clothed, fed, and made clean—all without price, all with the sweetness and the courtesies of gentle service.

Now I knew more of what these things meant. The material things of life took on a new value. While I learned, on the one hand, that so much is unnecessary, a mere weight and burden, on the other I also learned that much else is very necessary if these earthly and yet heaven-bound lives of ours are to be lives as God intended them. I saw that rescue ship of ours, coming to us when we were spent and stripped, as a symbol of what the Mission to Lepers, in its work of rescue, means to so many thousands of dispirited, diseased, and lonely folk. I saw it more and more as a divine task of human succor—at once sacramental and practical, making of the material service of human need a liberating act for the spirits of the children of God.

God Was Still There

I saw that in that experience of human extremity, caused not by the goodness of God but by the evil of man, the Maker of heaven and earth still was regnant, yet still awaited human co-operation and human instruments to enable His perfect will to be fulfilled. Those prayers of so many hundreds of my leper friends, of loved ones bound by blood, of ourselves brought to a position where we owned our inability to save ourselves, and our faith that God was able to do so—those prayers did not go unheard or unheeded. The bravery and willing service of those good men upon the ship and the devotion to duty of those who directed their course from afar—these too were seen and used of God to be His instruments. Our prayer, God's provision, and man's presentation of that provision, all met.

Again I recognized in this a symbol and representation of the history and fruitfulness of the Mission to Lepers. The prayers of many, from the foundation of the work in 1874, have been offered to God every day and night for men in direst need. "The Mission," wrote our founder, Wellesley Bailey, to a colleague "was cradled in prayer and it has been carried along in the arms of prayer ever since." "I ask from everyone," he wrote in the first Occasional Paper of the Mission in 1875, "earnest, expectant prayer that the Lord may bless us in this work." God has answered those prayers by moving the hearts of His people to be His instruments of mercy, His hosts, His bearers of good tidings, His healing hands.

My mind goes back to the little cabin which the Captain placed at our disposal. For two days my wife and I had done little but rest and sleep and gradually take more substantial food. Together we had offered our thanksgiving to God. Now, rather falteringly, my wife was moving about the cabin, I still lay back. On the Captain's table was a Prayer Book.

"Shall I read to you?" said my wife.

"Do," I said. "Read the Psalm for the day."

"What is the day? I've forgotten."

"It's the twenty-second."

So she opened the Psalms for the twenty-second day, and began to read Psalm 107.

"O Give thanks unto the Lord, for he is gracious: and his mercy endureth for ever . . . .

"They went astray in the wilderness out of the way: and found no city to dwell in;

"Hungry and thirsty: their souls fainted in them.

"So they cried unto the Lord in their trouble: and he delivered them from their distress.

"He led them forth by the right way . . . . .

"O, that men would therefore praise the Lord for his goodness and declare the wonders that he doeth for the children of men!

"For he satisfieth the empty soul: and filleth the hungry soul with goodness.

"Such as sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death . . . .

"They that go down to the sea in ships, and occupy their business in great waters;

"These see the works of the Lord: and his wonders in the deep . . . .

"They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man: and are at their wit's end.

"So when they cry unto the Lord in their trouble: he delivereth them out of their distress . . . . .

"Then are they glad, because they are at rest: and so he bringeth them unto the haven where they would be.

"O that men would therefore praise the Lord for his goodness: and declare the wonders that he doeth for the children of men! . . . . .

"Whoso is wise will ponder these things: and they shall understand the loving-kindness of the Lord."

We pondered, and we understood.

Concerning Peace and War

Will America Profit in Russian Trade?

by Marvin B. Dress, Bluffton, Ohio

WHO would suspect that at this point in our contest with the Soviets our dollars, appropriated for the strengthening of our military machine, are finding their way into Russia? And who would ever guess that our own army was responsible for the Russian profits?

It is all "on the level" of course, yet it remains as an imponderable inconsistency (one of those things that appear with increasing frequency in the field of international politics) and it goes like this.

Manganese and chrome are extremely important in the manufacturing of the harder steels, and the United States has few of either as natural resources. At the same time Russia has considerable quantities of manganese and chrome ore which she has been exporting to us that we can build up our military stockpiles of these vital materials.

During last year, Russia shipped to us 48 per cent of our chrome, 37 per cent of our manganese along with quantities of undressed furs and platinum ingots. The first six months of this year showed even greater quantities of these war-vital materials imported by the U. S. from Russia.

Meanwhile, agitation in this country has sought to reduce and eliminate our trade with Russia. So effective has this been, that we have decreased our exports to Russia by one-third each succeeding year since 1946; thus, a balance of trade favorable to Russia, and Russian profits. Many person think that we should eliminate all trade with Russia, but little do they realize that we, not Russia, would be harmed the most by such action.

Yes, despite the cold war, Russia continues to send us strategic raw materials and our stockpiles keep growing, along with the Russian dollar supply. In this regard Russia is extremely naive if she thinks the dollars she earns now will protect or prevent the deathly return of the chrome hardened steel later on. At least, American scrap iron profits before Pearl Harbor offered little protection against Japanese shrapnel after Pearl Harbor. Kremlin, take note!

Of Your Pen Acquaintances

HERMAN J. ANDRES, Newton, Kansas, is administrator of the Bethel Deaconess Hospital and Home for the Aged; he served as MCC commissioner to Uruguay in recent months.

MALCOLM WENGER, Busby, Montana, is one of our General Conference missionaries to the Cheyenne Indians.

ELMER EDIGER, Akron, Pennsylvania, is in charge of MCC Voluntary Service, and former president of the Young People's Union.

RUSSSELL MAST, Wadsworth, Ohio, is pastor of the First Mennonite Church, vice-chairman of the Peace Committee of the General Conference, and member of the Peace Committee of the Middle District Conference.

Beyond Our Own

NEW YORK.—An interpretation of the basis for membership in the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, adopted six years ago by the Executive Committee, was affirmed by the Biennial Meeting at Cincinnati, attended by delegates of the 25 church bodies that are members of the Federation. It is as follows: "The Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. . . . records its understanding of the Council's position as being in full accord with that of the World Council of Churches. In the preamble to its Constitution the Federal Council avows its faith in Jesus Christ as 'Divine Lord and Saviour' which is an affirmation of the deity of Christ, in keeping with the historic faith of Christianity."

DES MOINES.—The Pentecostal Fellowship of North America was the result of the planning of two hundred delegates representing one million members of the Independent Pentecostal Churches. In Great Britain, Europe, India, and China, similar Pentecostal movements are under way. There is a strong possibility that there will be an international body of Pentecostal believers in the near future.

NIMES, FRANCE.—What is believed to be the largest rally in Europe since the Reformation was the Youth for Christ Rally which drew some 20,000 people and which resulted in three hundred confessions of faith.

NEW YORK.—CARE now has available two seed packages for shipment abroad, being offered at $4 each. Orders should be sent to CARE, 50 Broad Street, New York 4, at the earliest possible date to insure delivery in time for the planting season.

LOS ANGELES.—A judge here celebrated the anniversary of the Prince of Peace by sentencing four conscientious objectors to prison for three years the day before the Christmas holiday.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.—The forty-five members of the Methodist Minister's Association of Atlanta signed resolutions denouncing the Ku Klux Klan as, "A cowardly anti-Christian mob," saying: "We are scandalized at the Klan's desecration of the Cross of Christ." This came at a time when the Klan was staging one of its periodic attempts to recruit members.

COLUMBIA — Anti-Protestant demonstration forced the missionaries of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Duitama to leave the city. The missionaries had been stoned and their lives threatened over a period of six months. They were threatened at one time by 2,000 persons massed in front of the mission station. Police offered protection but withdrew for fear they would be killed or demonstrators shot.

Official Conference Announcements

The Emergency Relief Board will, God willing convene in its 1949 Annual business session at Bloomington, Illinois, on February 16 and 17. All members of the Board please note this and be in attendance if possible. Friends of the General Conference are urgently requested to remember the Board and the work in your daily prayers.—Yours in the work of the Lord, John C. Mueller, Secretary

OVER OUR SHOULDERS

Our Brethren in Fort Leavenworth

The Exemption Committee of the General Conference has received information from the Third Assistant Secretary of War, dated, December 28th, that the first steps have already been taken for a review of all court-martial cases of conscientious objectors now in the disciplinary barracks at Ft. Leavenworth. But the proceedings will necessarily take some time and those directly concerned will have to exercise patience.—J. W. Kliewer, Chairman of Committee, taken from The Mennonite, Vol. 34, No. 2, January 9, 1919.

THE DAY OF THE GUARDING OF THE DEAD IS NOT OVER. Occupation authorities in Japan have forbidden the publication of a last message by Tojo for the world. They have also cremated the remains of Japan's war-makers who were recently hanged and kept the ashes from relatives, scattering the same in order to prevent an enshrinement. Why are we afraid of the ideas of these men? Why are we afraid that they will be resurrected? Is it because we know that martyrdom only spreads a cause—a cause, which the very action of execution itself shows that we have not been able to improve upon? Force has never killed an idea—not for Japanese or Americans.

AS WE LIFT OUR HAND AGAINST OUR BROTHER a deadly cancer begins to destroy us. This fundamental law of life was illustrated again in the headlines during Christmas week. It was called to the attention of the editor by one of our young prophetic-minded preachers who preaches from the Bible and the daily newspaper. On Monday it was reported that five atomic scientists were losing their sight as the result of the research that was necessary to finally conquer Japan, which conquest was symbolized in the hanging of Tojo and six other Japanese war-lords reported just two days later.—JJE

WHAT KIND OF AN EDUCATION should a Christian worker have? On the one hand, some would say that Bible is all that is needed; after that the sooner you get out with the Gospel, the better. This sense of urgency is Scriptural and commendable, but more often than not it lacks wisdom. Others say that Bible is needed but much more—psychology, philosophy, language, sociology, etc. These point to Moses and Paul saying that their breadth of education made them more useful. In the attempt to stress breadth of knowledge there has, in the past, been a crowding out of Bible. This problem is not a matter of either-or. Recent emphases in the field of Christian Education point in the direction of a both-and. What does this mean? It means simply that we must both have something to say and we must be able to say it in such a way that this troubled old world will know beyond a shadow of a doubt that the Christian Gospel is the answer to her need. This is a "handwriting on the wall" for that type of education that spends all its time acquainting the prospective Christian worker with the culture and analyzing its problems without confronting him with Christ's answer for these problems. Such education only hastens the collapse. But it is no less an omen of doom for the education that concerns itself with the task of infusing only Christian witness without helping students of the Word to understand the society or culture to which they will speak. There may be a definite witness; but of what value is a witness if the world around does not understand what you are talking about. True, some will say that the world will not understand; but this must not be an excuse for laziness on our part more fully to understand so that we can say the word that will stab the conscience, bring another precious soul to Christ, and straighten out his relationship to others.—JJE

TREMENDOUS THINGS ARE HAPPENING IN CHRISTENDOM! The Federal Council of Churches, in its recent biennial assembly, has stated clearly its position on the deity of Christ in line with historic Christianity, thus placing it on the same docrinal basis as the World Council of Churches. Equally striking is the definite concern for Christian education that is developing in Fundamentalist circles. Just pick up a magazine like the Moody Monthly or Christian Life and notice the emphasis given to the application of the Gospel. ("Why Not Enter Christian Social Service," is an article in the January number of Moody Monthly.) All this is clear evidence of the inherent vitality of Christianity—the work of the Holy Spirit in the Church—to keep its message clear. relevant, and dynamic. On the one hand Christian conscience is demanding that the works—Christians re-examine their basis of operation and source of power. On the other hand, Christian conscience is demanding that doctrine-minded Christians ask themselves whether they are sufficiently concerned about using all possible channels to make their faith meaningful in an extremely needy world.—JJE

It may safely be said that the Judaizing of the Church has done more to hinder her progress, pervert her mission, and destroy her spirituality, than all other causes combined. Instead of pursuing her appointed path of separation, persecution, world-hatred, poverty, and nonresistance, she has used Jewish Scripture to justify her in lowering her purpose to the civilization of the world, the acquisition of wealth, the use of an imposing ritual, the erection of magnificent churches, the invocation of God's blessing upon the conflicts of armies, and the division of an equal brotherhood into "clergy" and "laity." —C. I. Scofield, editor, of the Scofield Reference Bible, as found on p. 13 of his booklet, Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth.

IT IS DIFFICULT TO IMAGINE what the Japanese people must think when after having abolished war constitutionally, they hear of people in this country—this country which brought pressure on them to take that position—they hear of people here saying that it may be necessary to re-arm Japan.—JJE

The Drama of a Volendam Arrival

by Herman J. Andres

On the sixteenth of October I arrived in Montevideo, Uruguay, in the interests of our immigration and resettlement work. I was joined the next day by Brother John W. Warkentin. Our work was to cover three phases. First, we were to prevail on governmental authorities to grant the proper authorization that a group of our people might be allowed to enter this country as permanent settlers. Secondly, we were to secure temporary housing facilities for the potential settlers. The third phase had to do with the finding of the right location and type of settlement program for permanent residence.

A Close Schedule

The first several days were spent almost exclusively with various governmental agencies all of which were most courteous and helpful but at the same time also extremely cautious. It was apparent that they did not wish to have anything done which might form the basis of undue criticism. The final decree allowing our people to enter was signed the evening of October 26, just one day before the arrival of the VOLENDAM. It was issued on the basis and understanding that our people present good conduct certificates from the country of origin and that they be settled on lands for agricultural purposes.

There was very little time to devote to the securing of temporary housing and after several possibilities failed to materialize, the use of two army camps was secured.

The VOLENDAM with her full load of 1,695 immigrant passengers arrived in Montevideo harbor at 6:00 a. m. on the morning of October 27. It was an eventful day, not only for the seven hundred and fifty immigrants who were to disembark here and make this country their new national home after years of homelessness and twenty days upon the high seas, but also for several other groups.

The governmental authorities, after taking a good look at our people seemed to proceed with less caution. The appearance and orderly conduct of our people made a distinct impression as did also the many children in the group. It was apparent that the governmental authorities looked upon them as good potential timber for Uruguay citizens.

An Answer to Prayers

The Mennonite Central Committee workers present saw in the arrival of these people the answer to many prayers and the result of many days and months of hard and difficult work in Europe, as well as the result of many generous and sacrificial gifts from people in the United States and Canada. If at such times our contributors could be present, it would prove a real inspiration and provide a large incentive to greater effort.

After proper documentation, our people were taken by special train and busses to the two army camps. Two hundred ninety-three to Colonia and four-hundred fifty-seven went to Arapey. Their one hundred sixty tons of heavy baggage was taken by trucks and special freight train.

Meat, Least Expensive!

At these camps they have lived quite happily but are very anxious for a home of their own. The food is wholesome and not too costly. Meat, bread, and milk are the basic foods with some fill-ins for variations. Incidentally, meat is the most inexpensive food in Uruguay.

While we have had some health problems, they have not been insurmountable. In addition to one immigrant doctor who has been allowed only very limited practice and two nurses, local medical help has been made available to us without cost to the extent that serious and emergency cases are taken by air for necessary hospitalization or surgery. Life also goes on in Uruguay. Three children have been born two marriage ceremonies have been performed, and we have had three funerals.

Many of our people, including whole families, have gone out to work on farms where work is available. Also, some of the women have found housework in the homes of Colonia and near by.

Problem: How to Resettle?

The large problem which is still with us is the manner and type of settlement program. Quite a bit of exploratory work and orientation has been done also, together with representatives of our people. To evaluate the various agricultural possibilities of a country with the attendant economic factors and implications within a few short weeks is not within the realm of possibility. Much valuable information has been gained through the agricultural attache of the American Embassy. Also, knowledge and data collected by the technical staff of the Institute of Colonization has been placed at our disposal. However, the most valuable information comes from direct contact and visits to the various fields and areas of the country especially during the present harvest season.

From information on hand thus far, it is evident that our greatest problem will be to plan the resettlement program within the framework of financial possibilities. Uruguay is an agricultural country and land its greatest assest. Therefore, it demands good prices.

It appears that this country offers good possibilities for the settlement of progressive agricultural people. The Uruguayans are a friendly people, the government is stable, transportation facilities are fairly good. The crops produced are wheat, oats, barley, flax, sunflower, peanuts, potatoes and the garden vegetables. In favorable seasons, the progressive farmers produce two crops annually from the same land. Our people have been used to a much higher standard of agricultural practices and with proper opportunities should be able to make a real contribution to the country.

In all of our work, all of the various governmental agencies have been most courteous and helpful. They have taken a special interest in the welfare of our people which is most encourging. It is, therefore, but natural that we should be anxious to fulfill all of the obligations on our part.

A NEW GENERAL CONFERENCE SUMMER BIBLE SCHOOL CURRICULUM FOR 1949

For many years the Board of Education of the General Conference and others interested the Summer Bible School Movement has been concerned as to what might be done to provide adequate materials for our own use.

In 1945 an attempt was made by the Western District Education Committee to provide supplementary material for use in the churches of the Western District. This work was also rcommended for use in other districts by the Board. In the summer of 1946 the Curriculum Committee, a sub-committee of the Board, began working on a plan whereby it might provide better materials for Summer Bible Schools. The Old Mennonite Publishing House was just then producing a new summer Bible school curriculum. The committee met with A. J. Metzler, manager of the Scottdale Publishing House in December 1947 to consider the possibility of coming out with this series to include our own mission- and music materials This was approved by both the Board of Education and the Board of Publication. Editorial work on this special edition adapted to General Conference churches was begun at once.

The Old Mennonite material is to be used in its entirety with the exception of Grades III, IV, V, VI, VII, VIII. In these units our own materials, presenting our own mission fields and a separate music section, is to appear. The editor-in-chief is Mrs. H. J. Andres, of Newton, Kansas, who was asked by the Board to act as the editor of the General Conference edition.

The material in alternating grades including Grades III, V, VII of our own, is ready for use this spring. Watch for other announcements concerning this new venture.

Evangelicals Take Hope

Another group which has taken a special Christian nterest in us and in our work are the Evangelical roups in Uruguay. Those of us who has been active ere are agreed that without their very substantial ssistance, the work here could not have been acomplished. They have told us that they see in the 'coming of the Mennonites" a source of strength and hristian fellowship for the Evangelical churches in ruguay. They further tell us that they need this dded strength to bring the knowledge of the living hrist to the people of Uruguay, which is their reatest need.

Are You Weary, Heavy Laden?

Next time you feel tired, weary, and exhausted, remember the story of Charlotte Elliott.

First get your MENNONITE HYMNARY and read song No. 245 to yourself, thoughtfully, "My God and Father, while I Stray." If you know it, sing it; if you don't know it, learn it.

Then read the following story about this song:

MY GOD AND FATHER, WHILE I STRAY
Charlotte Elliott, 1789-1871

A hymn written by one who had disciplined herself to accept with patience and resignation the bitter cross of ill health which was laid upon her.

She writes of her experience:

Oh, many struggles and apparently fruitless ones it has cost me to become resigned to the appointments of my Heavenly Father. But the struggle is now over. He knows, and he alone, what it is, day after day, hour after hour, to fight against bodily feelings of almost overpowering weakness, languor, and exhaustion; to resolve not to yield to slothfulness, depression, and instability, such as the body causes me to long to indulge, but to rise every morning determined to take for my motto: "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, take up his cross daily and follow Me."

The hymn is based on Matt. 26:42: "O my Father if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done." It is a hymn of humble resignation. Another hymn setting forth the will of God as demanding active co-operation, is found at No. 342. Some fine stanzas have been omitted here:

4. Though Thou hast called me to resign
What most I prized, it ne'er was mine;
I have but yielded what was Thine—
"Thy will be done."

5. Should grief or sickness waste away
My life in premature decay.
My Father, still I strive to say,
"Thy will be done."

6. Let but my fainting heart be blest
With Thy sweet Spirit for its Guest;
My God, to Thee I leave the rest—
"Thy will be done."

For comments on Charlotte Elliott see Hymn 233.

MUSIC. Hanford was written for "Jesus, my Saviour, look on me," another of Miss Elliott's hymns. The composer, who often stayed in the home of Mrs. Gertrude Clay-Ker-Seymer at Hanford, in Dorcetshire, wrote the tune there, hence its name.

For comments on the composer, Arthur Sullivan, see Hymn 113.

The above is the way the story of this great song will appear in the HANDBOOK TO THE MENNONITE HYMNARY when it appears very soon. That is just one of 618 write-ups, filled with interesting stories, inspiring experiences which will call back, all those who read it, to a truer, purer, and more perfectly Christian walk with God. When it appears, we believe that you will agree with us that it will do as much for our people as the HYMNARY itself did when it first appeared in 1941.

At the End of a Way of Life . . .

Which Way?

by Malcolm Wenger

The Cheyenne are a people who are just emerging from a tremendous change in their way of life. Dora Littlehawk still tells of the days when they lived in the tepees and roamed the plains in search of the buffalo. Old Man Risingsun as a little boy when the Sioux and Cheyenne wiped out General Custer and his men on the Little Big Horn river. But the coming of the white man and the disappearance of the buffalo has ended that way of life forever.

". . . . provoked by treachery . . . "

A first the Cheyennes did not resist the whites, but later provoked by deceit and treachery on the part of the whites they fought back until they could resist no longer. When finally settled on reservations in Oklahoma and Montana they were a beaten and poverty stricken people.

Mennonites Follow Quakers

Shortly after this in 1878 Quaker missionaries arrived among the Southern Cheyennes in Oklahoma and two years later turned over their work to the General Conference Mennonites. It was not until 1904 that work among the Northern Cheyennes, in Montana was started. How strange it must have seemed to the Cheyennes to have the white men who had deceived them and whom they hated now come with a message of love and salvation through the Son of God, the Lord Jesus Christ. Yet the Word of God slowly took root in Cheyenne hearts and bore fruit in changed lives.

Painted Lips and Permanent Waves!

Today many things in the Cheyennes' way of life have changed. Along with the braids and moccasins and blankets one sees painted lips and permanent waves. Many travel in wagons but some in cars. Near the primitive rums and songs of the peyote men may be the blare of jazz from the radio. Some of the sick may be taken to a modern hospital others are "doctored" with rattles and songs and incantations. Outwardly there many evidences of the white man's ways but in the heart are still the fears of spirits and black magic. What a joy that some have been delivered from fear through Christ.

" . . . a certain veneer of Christianity. . ."

The Sun-dance, an important ceremony of the old heathen worship is losing out to some extent but still draws a majority of the people. A new movement, the Peyote cult or the native American Church as it is called has attracted the majority of the men. This group uses the dried top of a cactus which grows in the Southwest. Their meetings which last all night consist mainly in drumming, singing, prayers and the eating of peyote which is said to give pleasant visions and a detachment from reality. A certain veneer of Christianity has been added which makes this group a particular pitfall for backslidden Christians. The non-Christian Cheyenne are a religious people but their religion has no connection with living and a clean and holy life or the righteousness which God demands.

Cheyenne Girls

Pray!

Now perhaps you have a little glimpse of the chains that bind the non-Christian Cheyenne and the temptations that face the Christian. Please include them in your prayers remembering especially the Christians that they may stand true and grow into the likeness of our common Savior. Reprinted from The Workers' Exchange of the Pacific District Conference.

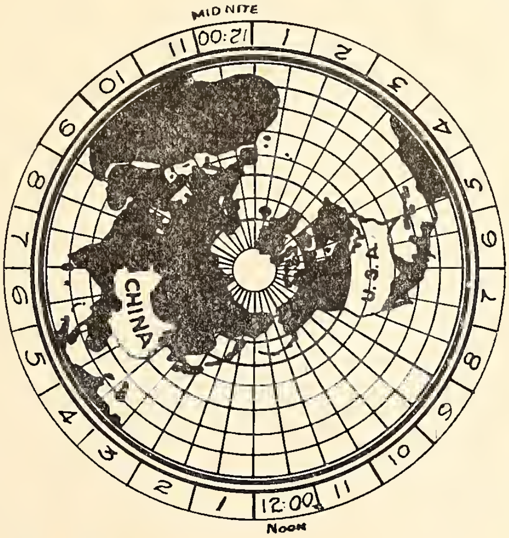
They Choose to Stay

NEW YORK CITY. Dec. 28—The overwhelming majority of foreign missionaries at present expect to remain in China, even though the Communists gain control of the government, a report released here today by the Foreign Missions Conference of North America revealed. The agency with headquarters at 156 Fifth Avenue is comprised of 108 foreign mission boards and agencies, representing major Protestant denominations.

Only 137 Have Withdrawn

In a report on 16 Protestant groups responsible for the bulk of Protestant mission work in China, the Foreign Missions Conference disclosed that the 1,758 Christian workers and missionaries, only 137 have withdrawn. A high percentage of this number were described as wives of missionaries with small children and missionaries scheduled for retirement.

Of those remaining, the report continued, 115 are in Communist controlled or immediately threatened areas. Approximately 10 of these are single women.



Boards Favor Staying

Except for Lutheran groups, the majority of foreign mission societies included in the report expressed a policy of favoring the continuance of Christian work in China, irrespective of the political outcome of the present struggle.

Dr. Lloyd S. Ruland, secretary of the board of foreign missions of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., expressed the general view held by missions boards when he recently wrote to members of his denominations that "True to the highest traditions of the missionary enterprise, even though some personal risk may be involved, it seems essential that we try to maintain our Christian program in cooperation wth the Chinese Christians in the areas facing Communist control."

Lutherans Alone in Withdrawal

The Lutheran groups in China have adopted a policy of evacuating missionaries from Communist areas, the report stated, and of sending missionaries to the United States, unless they can be found useful in other countries or in China areas not threatened by the Communist armies.

Two of the 16 groups covered by the report have taken an active policy encouraging field personnel to remain at their posts. These are the China Inland Missions with over 700 missionaries, about 50 of whom are in Communist areas, and the YMCA with six field personnel in Communist territory.

Matched Communist Offensive

Several groups have increased their missionary personnel since the launching of the Communist offensive. These include the China Inland Mission, which added 26 missionaries, the Congregational-Christian, the Baptists, the Reformed Church, the United Church of Canada, and the Free Methodists.

Chinese Urge Holding Posts

One reason a number of missionaries have decided to stay in China, according to Dr. Rowland Cross, executive secretary of the Far Eastern Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference, was a recent statement issued by leading Chinese Christians urging missionaries not to leave China. This statement, he said, helped to offset the impressioin among many missionaries that their presence might embarrass Chinese coming under Communist control. The names of the Chinese Christian leaders were not disclosed.

Older Missionaries Least Worried

The group described by the report as least worried by the Communists are the older missionaries. One of them is quoted as saying: "We have lived through many revolutionary periods and this situation in many respects is no different than the others."

In Communist Areas

Seven of the groups surveyed have missionaries now in Communist areas. These are the Congregational-Christian with 20; the China Inland Mission with about 50; the YMCA with 6; the Methodist General Board with 10; the Seventh Day Adventists with 10; the Foreign Department of the Women's division of Christian Service of the Methodist Church with 8 single women missionaries, and the Evangelical and Reformed with 11. The Presbyterians are thought to have missionaries in Communist areas, but no accurate report is available.

The majority of these missionaries in Communist areas are described as engaged in medical and educational work.

Personnel Breakdown of Boards

Mission and Christian groups, and the number of missionaries representing each, included in the report are the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., 235; The Congregational-Christian, 75; the Reformed Church, 39; Protestant Episcopal, 91; United Lutheran, 20; YMCA, 14; Women's American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, 37; Methodist General Board, 108;

Thank-You's from Afar

Gratitude — from a Parent in the Philippines

"We thank and praise the Lord for the beautiful package you gave to our dear son Romeo. We thank God for your kind hearts and thoughtfulness of the needy like the Filipinos. Yes, we suffered during the war, want of food and especially clothing. Our children were in desperate condition. But thank the Lord we do enjoy help from abroad. Members of the Mennonite relief in Bangued came and distributed these gifts in front of our Christian church to our children."

From a Children's Home Superintendent

"I had over three hundred children to take care of during these last four weeks in a home near Stuttgart. Out of these three hundred there were only ten who were not undernourished. We thank you for your gifts which my wife and I, and other members of the church could use to satisfy the hunger of the children each day.

It did my heart good to see your symbol of that handclasp while I was planning and figuring about my work. In this symbol you have helped many weak children to become strong and to return to the homes of their parents. I never grew tired of telling the children again and again how wonderful lasting love we find underneath the Cross. This is the only power which some day will possess the world."

From a Mennonite Refugee at Gronau Camp

"We are especially grateful for the Christmas packages which are giving our children such great pleasure. With thankful hearts we would like to cry out with the Psalmist: "Bless the Lord, O my Soul, and forget not all His benefits." I would like to wish you, dear brother and all your co-workers, God's richest blessing for your efforts."

From a Medical Student in Germany

"I know that it is not easy for you to help us and that you are not giving out of your abundance only, and yet if I would ask you today just why you are helping us I am certain you would reply that the love of Christ constraineth you to do so. Yes, He is indeed the only One who can work in us, both the will to do and the doing itself. May the Lord bless you and your work. May He cause it to bear fruit also among my classmates many of whom have not yet felt the power and love of Christ.

"Ever since I was 16 years old I have had a desire to become a missionary doctor. The same Lord which has given me this burden to go and serve His people in other lands also led me through the trials of the war, constantly drawing me closer to Him."

From a Widow in Germany

"Since I received a gift from you today, I wish to thank you with my whole heart. We were entirely bombed out and therefore one is thankful for every gift. I am alone with my little daughter, and we are dependent on the help of good people. However, we do not want to complain, for the Father in Heaven will show us the right way each day. Today when one is forsaken by man, the love of God gives us the only strength to live."

Happy children with Christmas bundles.

Jottings

—On January 10, the ministers and wives of the Eastern District will meet in the Bethany, Quakertown Church for an afternoon and evening of fellowship. Problems that will be discussed will include divorce, re-marriage, mixed marriages, etc.

—First Mennonite Church, Colfax, Washington: Rev. Herbert Tyler, evangelist on the Youth for Christ Rally, and who recently returned from Europe, was a speaker at one of our Sunday evening services. At our annual business meeting at which we elected new officers for the coming year, it was reported that a total of $8,523 was given for missions during the past year.—Mrs. Horace D. Rogers, Corr.

—Salem Mennonite Church, Dalton: Ohio: Sunday, December 19, Rev. Harold Gerber, a lay Methodist minister, challenged us to wait upon the Lord in expectation through faith and prayer in his sermon entitled, "Spiritual Progress." At a recent evening service, following a peace program including three orations, Reverend Richert showed slides taken in Europe at the time of his cattle trip abroad. The slides illustrated very graphically the utter destruction and futility of war. The young people going Christmas caroling on Christmas Eve decided to give all cash donations received to the cause of the Bluffton College station wagon.—Mrs. Ivan Badrtscher, Corr.

—Bethesda Church, Henderson, Nebraska: Grace Liu, Chinese student at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, gave us her interesting testimony in word and song, plus a report of conditions in China, on December 19. Recently Rev. Marvin Dirks, of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, held meetings in our church. Our pastor, Rev. Arnold Nickel, underwent a major operation at Rochester, Minnesota, December 17.— Clarence E. Friesen, Corr.

—Zion Mennonite Church, Donnellson, Iowa: At a recent special congregational meeting it was decided to adopt the 100% Plan. A number from our church sang in 'The Messiah," December 12, which was presented as a union service. December 5, at our evening service, Richard Bentzenger, member of the Methodist Church who became interested in MCC after 3½ years in CPS, gave us a first-hand report of MCC work in Italy. His encouraging and challenging report, stressing the efficiency of the MCC made us feel a greater responsibilty to support the work.—Mrs. Milton Krebill, Corr.

—Grace Mennonite Church, Enid, Oklahoma: The Ladies Mission Circle held an all-day meeting December 9, at which they quilted, sorted and repaired clothing for relief. Our Christmas program was December 19. Reverend Unruh recently underwent a major operation. We hope he can soon leave the hospital.—Mrs. J. F. Kliewer, Corr.

—Ebenezer Church, Bluffton, Ohio: At our recent communion service, eight new members were received into the church. Our oldest member Aaron Geiger, who is a faithful attendant at our services, recently celebrated his 90th birthday. At the request of the pastor, Mr. Geiger favored us with a piano solo during our service on December 5. Our recent clothing drive for relief brought in 16 cases of clothing and 68 pairs of shoes. The Living Links Class provided over 200 bags of candy and nuts, also books and gifts, for mission work in Kentucky.—Anna Landes, Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Pa.: Rev. A. E. Kreider, chairman of the General Conference Foreign Mission Board, and Marie Regier, missionary to China, were recent visitors of our congregation. Our pastor recently attended the Ministers' Conference and also assisted at the Dedication Service of the remodeled meeting house at West Swamp. At a special congregational meeting it was decided to build an addition to enlarge our meeting house for our Sunday school and Christian Endeavor needs, which will be started in the near future.—Mae Gross, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Chicago, Ill.: A recent wedding in our church was that of Betty Lorraine Argile to Edward George Prohaska, both members of our church and both engaged in active Christian work. Mr. Prohaska is leader of our young people's work, and Mrs. Prohaska is secretary of the Church Council.

—First Mennonite Church, Allentown, Pa.: We observed our annual White Gift Service on December 12, with the Sunday school classes giving a total of $339.12 for various causes. Three of the classes forfeited their Christmas gift from the Sunday school to send their money to the Mennonite home in Colombia, South America, for a Christmas treat for the children there.—Mrs. LeRoy K. Weidner, Corr.

—Mennonite Church, Richfield, Pa.: Reverend Schulz, of Quakertown, Pa., conducted a series of meetings closing December 10. Miss Marie Gehr returned missionary from China, was with us December 8.—Mrs. Albert Sheaffer, Corr.

—Hoffnungsau Church, Inman, Kansas: Our Sunday school recently sponsored a project called "Stocking Sunday," with each member bringing a pair of stockings in their own size. The children had a short service, after which a ladies trio sang, "Hear the Stockings Dropping," as the children dropped their stockings into a box. 335 pairs of stockings were collected, of which 110 pair were donated by children. At our mid-week Bible Study, a family night with classes for everyone, the young people have a series of discussions on "The Family," conducted by J. Winfield Fretz, Dr. R. C. Kauffman, and Mrs. Eva Harshbarger. On December 12 the cornerstone laying services of our church building were held.—Mrs. Wilbur Schmidt, Corr.

—Saron Mennonite Church, Orienta, Oklahoma: At our annual business meeting it was reported that we now had a membership of 120, an increase of 10 members over last year. Contributions for all purposes amounted to $10,000. The pastor preached 260 times, made 160 house visitations, and traveled 25,000 miles in his work. By unanimous vote, the pastor's call was extended for another two years.

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Missionary John H. Lohrenz, from India, of the Mennonite Brethren Church of Hillsboro, brought us the New Year's morning message on, "Three Prayers of Moses." These included the prayer for Thy guidance, prayer for Thy presence, prayer for Thy glory. Rev. J. M. Regier, representing the Home Mission Board, was in Chicago for the relief workers conference of the MCC, from December 30 to January 1.—Arnold A. Plenert, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: Harold Ratzlaffs, missionaries to India, were our guest speakers the first Sunday of the New Year. Our group of twenty students who attend Bethel College and Grace Bible Institute presented a program on the evening of New Year's Day. The use of a weekly church bulletin consisting of Sunday morning service program, announcements and activities of the week, was adopted at our annual business meeting. Our newly organized Choral Society presented Handel's Messiah for the first time in this church on Christmas night. It was conducted by Mr. Raymond J. Stucky. It is hoped that this may become an annual affair.—Ralph Krehbiel, Corr.

—Salem Mennonite Church, Munich, North Dakota: Recent guest speakers in our church included Rev. David Pritchard, Sunday school missionary, and Rev. G. W. Schroeder. The ladies of the Sewing Society gathered in the church basement on December 27 to tie comforters for relief. Rev. and Mrs. H. F. Ortman spent the Christmas holidays at Marion, South Dakota, where they visited Reverend Ortman's father, who is ill.—Corr.

—Salem Mennonite Church, Munich, North Dakota: Rev. Jacob Hoffman and the Lustre Bible School Quartet, all of Lustre, Montana, rendered a program on December 29. The Be Ye Doers Mission Society gathered shoes and overshoes for relief at the December meeting.

—First Mennonite Church, Colfax, Washington: The Missionary Society had an all day meeting January 6 to can lard and make comforts for relief. On December 27, Miss Marjorie Scott, of Spokane, and Melvin Unruh, of Colfax both students at Whitworth College, were united in marriage, with Rev. P. D. Unruh, father of the groom, performing the ceremony.—Mrs. Horace Rogers Corr.

—Spring Valley Church, Newport, Washington: Eight of the young people of our church are attending three different Bible schools—Los Angeles, Newton, and Omaha. During the past year our missionary society has made seven quilts, sewed dresses and mended for relief, sent bandages to Africa, layettes to American Indian stations, quilt blocks to Montana, and 250 pounds of clothes for relief.—Corr.

—Salem Mennonite Church, Dalton, Ohio: Outstanding among our White Christmas gifts were the contributions for the Seminary; the Junior Sunday school gifts to Africa; and the Christmas carolers gift toward the cause of the Bluffton College Station Wagon. Our annual congregational business meeting was held in the evening of December 27. December 26 Miss Ethel Amstutz and Mr. Harley Himes were married, with Rev. Irvin E. Richert performing the ceremony.—Corr.

—Tabor Church, Newton, Kansas: Recent guest speakers in our church have been Missionary Mary Becker, who related her experiences in the new mission field in Colombia, South America; Dr. Cornelius Krahn, who showed historic Mennonite history slides; and Rev. Abe H. Peters, of Geary Oklahoma. A farewell was held for Elma Voth, who is going to the mission field in South America. On December 30 Milton Tieszen and Helen Back, of North Dakota, were married in this church. We are expecting Arthur A. Voth, who has been doing relief work in Europe for the past several years, in the near future. Mr. Voth was married January 2, in the Deep Run Mennonite Church.—D. S. Thiesen, Corr.

—Herold Church,Bessie, Oklahoma: Our last speaker to serve us during the pulpit exchange program was Rev. Henry Hege, Corn, Oklahoma. On the evening of December 19, a program and reception were given honoring Rev. and Rev. Herbert Dalke, of Weatherford, missionaries to the Indians."—Mrs. H. B. Schmidt, Corr.

—Correction: Rev. Paul Roth, of Canby Oregon, is now president of the Pacific District Conference, succeeding Rev. Harold Burkholder, of Los Angeles. It was erroneously reported in a recent issue of the paper that Revened Burkholder still held that position.

General Conference Mennonite Missions in India

The Bethesda Leper Home, of Champa, India, began when in 1902 two lepers came to Dr. P. A. Penner as beggars. They found one who had pity on them, and soon others came. Today, due to a shortage of funds, the enrollment in the leper colony stands at five hundred. Must the others be turned away, or can we give a little more?

BEHIND THE 100% PLAN

ALEXANDERWOHL MENNONITE CHURCH

Rev. P. A. Wedel, Pastor

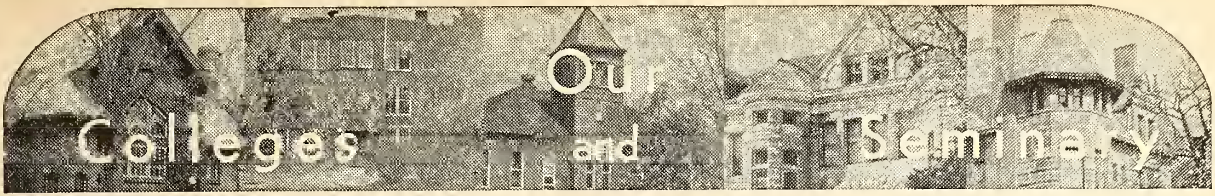
WE HAVE tried the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN for two years. The paper is sent to our people through the mail. It acquaints them with our Mennonite traditions and principles of faith which many of them would not get to read any other way. It also informs them of the Conference needs and a greater loyalty for our Conference boards is created.

The most difficult problem that confronts us as a large congregation is to get The Mennonite to the single individual who is working hither and yon in some city. We often fear that the paper does not reach those as it is not sent as first-class mail.

The HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN enables everyone to have the church paper regardless of financial ability, for the church budget provides for that.

One of the duties of the pastor, however, is to inspire his congregation to read the paper even after it has reached the home. Religious periodicals and church papers are so often neglected in our reading in the home. Even a free paper in a home does not insure the reading of it. Since the religious life of our people is greatly affected by what they read, we believe that the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN is one step forward in giving our people a chance to cultivate a varied spiritual type of reading which our church papers contain, and which is so necessary for Christian growth and advancement.

Churches coming on the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN in the last six months of 1948 are the Glendale Mennonite Church of Lynden, Washington; The First Mennonite Church, Sugar Creek, Ohio; Arlington Mennonite Church, Arlington, Kansas; First Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota; Zion Mennonite Church, Donnellson, Iowa.



BETHEL COLLEGE

The Pagannini String Quartet will appear at the Bethel College Memorial Hall on January, 18, 8 p. m. The group of four use Stardivari instruments once owned by Paganinni.

The MCC peace section called an inter-collegiate peace institute, Dec. 30, upon request of Mennonite college peace groups at Chicago, Ill. Bluffton, Goshen, Mennonite Biblical seminary, Hesston, Tabor, Grantham, Freeman, and Bethel sent representatives to the meeting.

Several faculty members attended national meetings during the Christmas vacation. Dr. Walter H. Hohmann and Dr. David H. Suderman attended the session of the Music Teachers National Association. Dr. H. A. Fast and Dr. J. Winfield Fretz took part in the annual MCC meeting, and Robert W. Tully attended the National Conference of Coaches.

Pres. Ed. G. Kaufman left on December 31 for New York City where he is visiting his son Gordon a student at Yale Divinity School and wife. President Kaufman will attend the meeting of the Association of American Colleges from January 10-14. He will visit the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago on his return trip.

Edith Claassen and Marjorie Linscheid recently, reported on the Christian conference they attended at the University of Kansas, from December 27 to January 1, sponsored by the United Student Christian Council calling together 1200 student and faculty representatives from colleges and universities in the United States. Students from foreign countries were also in attendance.

Among the speakers at this ecumenical conference were Dr. Elton Trueblood, Dr. John MacKay, and Dr. George Kellsey. The emphasis of the meetings was upon putting Christianity to work.

N. Paul Stucky, instructor of physics at Bethel College, was married to Lydia Pagan, Puerto Rico, on December 27 at the Eden Mennonite church, Moundridge.

Betty Regier, daughter of Mrs. A. J. Regier, North Newton, was married to Marvin Wasser, Bedminster, Pa., on December 31, at the Bethel College chapel. Mr. Wasser, former relief worker in Europe, is a student at Bethel College.

ULTIMATUM

By Charles A. Wells

January 8, 1949

There is much evidence that nuclear research has reached a climax,—bringing within man's grasp far greater atomic forces than used at Hiroshima. Not only are the atom bombs much larger and more powerful but the time is not far distant when such weapons will be much cheaper and simpler to make. Then national security will not be just a matter of U. S. — Russian relations, — for such little countries as Paraguay or Siam can have enough A-bombs to blast any big power into frightful collapse. Atomic power is no longer a secret to scientists everywhere. It has been the industrial problems of A-bomb production that has given America the monopoly of this weapon,—a monopoly that is rapidly fading as the industrial processes are simplified. The military men and politicians are saying little about this, but the nuclear scientists are expressing their fears as audibly and factually as they dare. This means that man has grown physically to the place where he has seized for his own use the physical powers of God,—the power of lightning, the flame and heat of the sun, the very forces that hold the universe together. Unless man is prepared to obey the moral laws that surround the physical universe, he will destroy himself. The truth of our day is as simple and as terrible as that.

TIME: One hundred years ago (but it might have been yesterday afternoon).

PLACE: One ocean away—on a London street corner (but it might have been the square in your town).

SCENE: Mr. Hoag, a middle-aged, slender man with a deep voice, is saying, "England should adopt the weapons of friendliness and love, instead of violence and war, in all of her international affairs."

HECKLER FROM THE REAR OF THE CROWD: "Well, stranger, if all the world were of your mind, I would turn and follow after."

HOAG: "So! You have a mind to be the last in the world to be good! I have a mind to be one of the first!"

God send us men and women who are heroic enough to be among the first generation to love their enemies.

II

TIME: Centuries ago.

PLACE: A dusty road in China.

SCENE: Mencius, the philosopher, is asked a difficult question: "Can the weapons of love succeed in a world that is full of violence and selfishness? Mustn't we be realistic?"

MENCIUS: "Love conquers want of love as water conquers fire. Men's deeds of love today are like pouring a cupful of water on a house that is burning. When the fire burns on, people say, 'See—water does not put out fire!' "

In a world where the fires of hate are hot and fierce, God send us men who will invest their lives in the faith that water can put out fire.

III

TIME: 1900 years ago (but too modern yet).

PLACE: A hill, which is called Golgotha.

SCENE: Jesus, the Man of Nazareth, is being crucified. Peter has tried to defend him, but Jesus has refused to crucify his faith in a God of love, by killing his enemies . . . . And even as he hangs on that cross, Jesus holds fast to the weapons of love: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

In a world where brotherhood is forgotten and swords are drawn, God send us men who, specialize in the tools of unselfish love and patient forgiveness which alone can build on earth the City of God.

—OUR YOUNG PEOPLE

Akron Training for Voluntary Service Unit

[The first unit of Voluntary Service workers has begun its long service program. The members of the unit were at M.C.C. headquarters at Akron, Pennsylvania for a month for the purpose of orientation into the service program. This is a report of their month's experience at Akron. Additional volunteers will be going to Akron each month for a similar orientation period. EDITOR]

Classes

The day began each morning with a period of devotion and meditation.

The first two weeks we studied and discussed "Life in the Kingdom," which was led by Glenn Esh. We also had discussions by the different Mennonite Central Committee departments in "Service" and "Missions."

"Individuals and Group Problems" was a discussion led by Wesley Ewert. We also had classes on the "Story of Our Church" or "Mennonite History," which was led by John Hess. Lotus Troyer led a class on "Living the Peace Testimony."

We enjoyed different illustrated lectures in the evenings in conjunction with our course.

All through our orientation we stressed the importance of nonresistance and love as a part of our Christian lives.

After our classes we gathered in the chapel room with the group of workers from headquarters for another period of devotion.

Voluntary Service

IS NOT
- a vacation
- just a job

IS MORE THAN
- social service
- an alternative to the draft
- an internship; it may be a gateway to a life of service
- a privilege

IS
- Christian love in action
- showing our faith by our works
- a positive Christian witness
- channeling consecrated youth's energies to human need
- it is a responsibility

Work

The work of the Voluntary Service group at the Mennonite Central Committee headquarters during the time of their orientation period was under the direction of Amos Yoder, a very likeable fellow from Oklahoma, who had previously spent a term of relief service in in Paraguay.

This work consisted of remodeling the old warehouse into apartments for married couples. The porches on several of the different buildings were painted.

Some of the fellows were found useful in the laundry and kitchen. They also loaded a railroad car with tools and machinery to be shipped to Paraguay. A few of the fellows helped bale clothing at the center in Ephrata.

Field Trip

During the past month of orientation the volunteers made one major field trip.

A short tour was made of the field where the Battle of Gettysburg was fought. At Brook Lane Farm we had a bountiful Thanksgiving dinner. Our next stop was at New Windsor, Maryland, where we visited the Church of the Brethren Voluntary Service group overnight. Our next major point of interest was a tour of Washington, D. C. Paul Goering, who is the representative of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, served us as a guide.

A visit to the Benjamin Franklin Institute, at Philadelphia, concluded a profitable three-day tour.

Recreation and Leisure Time

During our Voluntary Service orientation we had various activities. We had a recreational committee which consisted of four people of the Voluntary group. The most common indoor recreation was table tennis. Several tournaments were played during the month. We also had several games of volley ball with the Mennonite Central Committee headquarters group.

The last Friday night, Dec. 10, the Akron Fire Hall was rented. The Voluntary Service group played the Mennonite Central Committee headquarters group a game of basket ball. There were also several games of volley ball played.

Understanding Each Other

Four Mennonite groups coming from eight states and one province are represented in our service training group. Though varying backgrounds cause us to have individual beliefs, ideals, and customs, and soon came to realize that we have much in common. Christ is our Saviour, and His love in our hearts motivates our service. Through living and working together through discussions and group worship we have learned to know and understand each other as Christian brethren. In class we studied fundamentals of Christian faith, our Mennonite Heritage, and Christianity in everyday life. We have worshipped in churches of Old Order Amish, Brethren in Christ, (Old) Mennonite, and the General Conference Mennonite. All have learned how much we as Mennonites have in common, to respect our differences, and that we can work together to the glory of God as we serve our fellowmen "in the Name of Christ."

Racial Tensions and Gulfport

by Elmer Ediger, Akron, Penna.

If Christians are committed to the principle of brotherhood and they themselves in a situation in which strict segregation and discrimination is the social custom, what should they do? If they find segregated churches which have distinct racial cleavages and they find that to cross racial barriers is to jeopardize not only themselves, but the racial group being subjected to discrimination, what is the means of realizing Christian brotherhood? In an excerpt of a letter written by Elmer Ediger, this question is discussed as it relates to the Gulfport, Mississippi project. His reference to the Friends is in the light of the fact that they have had considerable experience along this line.—Editor.

Our aim in Voluntary Service projects is not, first of all, to rid the South of the racial segregation. I realize that some other groups place this highest on the list. It is interesting to note, however, that at the recent inter-denominational meeting, where we discussed these polices, the Friends pointed out that because they have had so many units closed in the South where they have tried to have inter-racial units and projects, they this summer tried to establish a work camp in South Carolina of only white members, which would serve a community where Negroes would benefit largely. Their aim was to have the community first of all accept the work-camp technique rather than immediately forcing the racial issue. They had to close this unit also, however.

The aim of our unit in Gulfport has been to meet human needs in a Christian way, to aid in the building of a good community, and with the hope that our work in deed and word would help in the spiritual revitalization of the Christians and churches which are now there and be a general witness for true Christianity. We have always tried to have clear in the minds of Southern people our attitude toward the colored people, but we have respected some of their traditions of segregation, because we feel that we have a purpose larger than that of bringing about racial equality. We have discovered, and I believe the Quakers will take that as their next step, that in order to do a job of reconciliation between the races we must first of all prove our basic integrity and message by having a valid project with the whites and then moving as nearly similtaneously as possible to serve the colored people in an equally valid way. From this center we encourage inter-racial activities as they come naturally into our total program.

During the last two or three years a number of inter-racial activities have been sponsored which are just as far or farther than any other group has carried out successfully as far as I know. For example, we have had training schools for Bible teachers in which both colored and white have been in the same class, sat on the same benches, sung out of the same songbooks. Thus far this is not a regular practice on our part; but when the occasion is natural for it, we will do it again. Within the past few months we have had colored and white boys in the same shop classes at the camp. We tried to set up a unit in a predominately colored community. Tylertown, Mississippi, where after a few days of helping colored people with canning and other home activities and living in a colored schoolhouse, we were threatened by the local sheriff and withdrew. We returned to the community after several days after things might have calmed down a little and tried to speak reasonably with the white people and also to speak to the colored people. As the Friends have learned and the reason they retreated we also have retreated because the danger is not only to ourselves but much more to the lives of colored people as we discovered very clearly this summer. We are not giving up on that type of a unit in a predominately colored community, but we will not force the issue in that particular place at this time. Our nurses working in the community hospital made several gains for the colored patients. For example, giving privileges to the colored physician to use the hospital operating facilities and to be called on special cases at night.

Middle District Young People Pledge $1930

by Orlin Frey

The Young People's Union of the Middle District Conference have pledged themselves to a budget totaling $1930 for the Conference year. This amount is distributed as follows: Support of Rev. and Mrs. Holliman, missionaries at Paint Rock, South Carolina, $1,000; Middle District Conference share of General Conference Y.P.U budget, $645; Traveling expenses $200; Publication of The Vine Press $85. (The Vine Press is the paper published by the Middle District Conference Young People's Union.)

The Middle District Conference, in session at Wayland, Iowa, April, 1948, approved a plan whereby the field secretary be remunerated from the Conference treasurer. The field secretary in turn is to visit as many of the young people's societies as possible, to counsel with them, and encourage them in their work.

Robert Amstutz, senior at Bluffton College, is president of the Middle District Conference Young People's Union and Orlin Frey, student at Mennonite Biblical Seminary, is serving as field secretary for the current conference year.

The Courage to be Different

by Russell Mast, Wadsworth, Ohio

THERE once lived a man in Concord, Massachusetts, whose name was Henry David Thoreau. He was eccentric, cynical, and in many ways decidedly impractical. In order to escape the shallow world of tinsel in which he lived, he decided to live by himself at Walden Pond. Yet, with all his eccentricities, Thoreau has much to say to those of us who consider ourselves followers of Jesus. For instance, he once said, "If a man does not keep pace with his companions, perhaps it is because he hears a different drummer. Let him keep step to the music that he hears, however measured or far away."

It is not difficult to put that thought into the language of the Bible and the Christian faith. To take but one of the many passages which might be selected, Paul, in writing to the Romans said: "And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind" (Romans 12:2). Both of these statements suggest that there are times when good living requires that we possess the courage to be different, that goose-stepping to the prevailing tune of the day is likely to lead us into blind alleys, and that again and again it is the best part of wisdom to be out of step with the passing throng. Certainly no one is suggesting that we be different only for the sake of being different. Thoreau would say that it is because we hear a "different drummer." Paul would say that it is because our thinking has been transformed by the Spirit of Christ. However you wish to put it, we have a loyalty that is not bound by the limits of this earth, It is transcendent, eternal, and spiritual in character. So to live as a Christian in an un-Christian world has, as one of its requirements, the courage to be different.

What Music?

Granting this, we proceed to ask, What is the music that we hear from the "different drummer"? What is the will of Him to whom we render our supreme allegiance? God has left us in no doubt concerning his ultimate nature. He has made it abundantly plain concerning that which he requires of us. He came to this earth in the person of His son, Jesus Christ. It is through His life, His teaching, His death, and His resurrection that we are brought into a sufficient knowledge of the way we are to live. There are many aspects to God's nature which have a bearing upon our behavior. That aspect, which in our world is perhaps most decisive, and which in the Christian revelation of God is most unique is borne in the simple statement, "God is love." The most distinctive quality of God, as we see it in Christ, is His outgoing, suffering, redemptive love.

At no point in His dealing with man does He even depart from His loving nature. He loves, even when our spirits are corrupted by sin and evil. "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." God hates sin, but He does not hate the sinners. God's way of overcoming sin and evil is to redeem sinners and evildoers. Hatred of sinners does not redeem them; only love is strong enough to redeem. In human history the ultimate expression of love is at the cross. Referring to the cross, Jesus said: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." It was the power of love to draw, to persuade, to win the hearts of men, that has been the secret of that strange power that the cross has had in human life. Had there been any power other than love, which could have won the hearts of sinners and converted them to a better way, we can feel certain that God in His wisdom would have used it. Love and the cross, symbolizing the outpoured life, stand at the center of our deliverance from sin and its power over us. In loving sinners and evildoers God is acting in a manner consistent with His nature—God Is love.

But to Live It!

Now it goes without saying that in the conduct of our lives we are under obligation to act in such a manner as is consistent with the compulsions of love. Even in our own dealings with evildoers and those whom we would call our enemies we are given no warrant to depart from the impulses of love. Indeed, God has laid upon those who call His son "Lord and Master" a commission to carry on a ministry of reconciliation, to become peacemakers in the total range of human life. It will mean that in every relationship of life they will work for mutual understanding, forbearance, tolerance, good will, fellowship. It will mean to renounce war, for war is essentially a question of dealing with evil and evildoers in our world.

To follow the way of reconciliation and peacemaking in a world where war and its methods are deeply interwoven with our total life, would mean that we would be very much out of step with the world. It would mean that we would be misunderstood, as all who have ever been out of step with the world have been misunderstood. We have no choice. We march to the music that we hear. There is a "different drummer" whose steps we follow. We cannot conform because our minds have been transformed to another way of thinking.

Yes, Very Different!

It is well to remind ourselves that those who have been on the front line in every forward movement, whether in religion, or science, or statesmanship, or reform, have been those who have had the courage to be different. They have dared to follow a "different drummer" as they cast their weight of their influence on the side of a small creative minority. So to live on the front line of some forward movement is to live with meaning, purpose, and significance. The hope of every generation always has been with a small creative minority who will not conform or compromise with evil. The time has come—according to an increasing number or people—when to be on the front line in the battle against evil, is to make a personal, final, and decisive break with war and all its methods. Is that not the distant music of the cross? Is it not true that the Mennonite Church started out to be just such a minority? The question is, Do we have within ourselves the courage to be different, to step faithfully to the distant music of eternity?

Japanese Women Seek a Christian Educatian

by Ruth Miller

WITH th daintiness and charm charactristic of her race, tiny,Japanese-born Miss Tokiko Kawagiri delighted everybody at the Committee for a Christian University in Japan when she visited the New York office recently. But Miss Kawagiri, former teacher in Girls' School in Kumamoto, Japan, and now a student at the New York Biblical Seminary, belies her "helpless female" appearance with a comprehensive knowledge of the educational system in Japan today, especially in regard to women.

It is well known that in the past Japanese women were completely shackled by convention, which dictated that they receive no education past the high-school level; they were being trained for marriage and motherhood. It is not so well known, however, that since the recent war many of the old restraints on women in Japan have been relaxed or completely removed, so that they are entering medicine, teaching, politics, and other public fields, and proving their worth to their country. According to Miss Kawagiri it is recognized now that women must receive a broad education if they are to be good wives and mothers; goodness does not spring from narrowness, nor is wisdom a hothouse plant.

But formal education, infinitely valuable in itself, is not enough. If Japan is to become a democratic nation, this present educational reform must include the opportunity for spiritual development. General MacArthur declared recently, "Only the Christian religion with its emphasis on Freedom, because it postulates Human Dignity, because it believes in Almighty God as Creator and Sovereign of all, can make democracy a reality in Japan."

The Committee for a Christian University in Japan proposes to build a great international, nonsecterian, Christian university near Tokyo, Japan, dedicated to the principles of Christianity and democracy. At first the university will consist primarily of a graduate school of education, to train the thousands of teachers needed in Japan today. A United States education mission to Japan in 1946 reported, "It is felt that Japan's greatest and most pressing problems of education derive from lack of the proper type of teachers" . . . . "Preparation for teachers is meager. Only certain types of teachers receive specific preparation. Professional preparation should be extended to all types of teachers, and to all teachers within each type" . . . . "A large proportion of teachers receive their education in colleges in which little training is given in professional preparation." Yes, the educational reform in Japan must start with the reeducation of the present generation of teachers, as well as the education of new generations of teachers. Later on it will embrace more categories.

Miss Kawagiri pointed out that Christian teachers especially are needed; there are not enough to supply even the Christian schools. Indeed, since Japan's future depends largely upon a change of viewpoint and attitude by her people, the Christian message must be brought to bear upon the highest levels of leadership, in educational circles, and in the professions—especially teaching—who will in turn bring their views to bear on those on less high levels. The youth of today will be the leaders of tomorrow; they must have Christian training, which they can get only with Christian teaching.

Perhaps you are wondering whether this message will fall on barren ground in Japan. The answer is an emphatic No. Miss Kawagiri declared, "The Japanese people are excited about this great new university, and they are eager to support it. The people are interested, also, in becoming Christians. There is great opportunity here—we must reach these people."

"Yes, we must reach these people. Only through better understanding brought about by higher education and by Christianity can Japan take a constructive role in the world family of nations. When the community-wide campaign for funds is held next spring, won't you show your willingness to help in this great cause? Won't you contribute something, however small, toward a goal of truly united nations?

Prepare for 1949 European Summer Service

Investigations are underway in Europe to choose locations for 1949 Summer Service Units. Present plans again provide for co-operative arrangements with the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges, similar to 1948. Students in these colleges will apply through their schools, for the college-sponsored tour and these Voluntary Service Units. Provisions are again being made for Mennonite students from other schools, and non-students, teachers, farmers, etc., to apply directly to Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania. All the expenses for this short service and visit in Europe need to be paid by the individuals. The applicants will be chosen early in the new year.

The Christian Missionary Creed

We believe in a Christ-like world. We know nothing better, we can be content with nothing less. We believe that men are made for Christ and cannot really live apart from Him. Our fathers were impressed with the horror that men should die without Christ—we share that horror; we are impressed also with the horror that men should live without Christ. Herein lies the Christian motive. We cannot bear to think of men living without Him. Since Christ is the motive, the end of Christian missions is nothing less than the production of Christ-like character in individuals and societies and nations through faith in and fellowship with Christ, the living Saviour, and through corporate sharing of love in a Divine Society. Christ is our motive and Christ is our end. We can give nothing less and we can give nothing more. (Int. Missionary Conference, 1928).—Reprinted from Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church Bulletin, Kitchener, Ontario, Canada.

BERLIN. — Reconstruction of the war damaged Protestant cathedral has been discontinued because of a shortage of building materials and lack of funds. This made it impossible to hold a Christmas Service in the cathedral as was originally planned.

Beyond Our Own

GERMANY.—The postponement of the execution of 139 Germans who were condemned to death by the AMG courts for war crimes has been asked by Evangelical and Catholic churches. A protest has been made to President Truman on the grounds that so far no legal examination of the sentences has been allowed.

CHINA.—The missionaries, both American and British, in Communist-held Tsinan, are reported "safe and well." "All foreigners in Tsinan are engaged in useful employment. There are no financial or food problems. . . . The Communists are continuing their new policy of protecting missionaries, especially medical workers."

SPAIN. — Inadequate properties and insufficient number of pastors hamper vigorous Protestant work in Spain, reports Dr. A. Stanley Trickett of the World Council's Reconstruction Department. The persecution of minority groups "continues to an alarming degree," stated Dr. Stanley Stuber, American Baptist leader, who urged the U. S. government to refuse cooperation with the present Spanish government.

CHICAGO.—The second convention of the World Missionary Aviation Council with men representing fifteen denominations, met December 7-9. Among topics discussed were makes of aircraft suitable for missionary work, maintenance on the field, and publicity for missionary aviation. The purpose of this Council is to pool experience and knowledge in the field, and co-ordinate aviation among missionary groups.

ITALY.—An International Association of ex-priests, meeting in Rome denounced clauses of a Concordat which denies all civil rights to around 4,000 priests who have left the Church of Rome.

BUCK HILL FALLS, PA. — To stay out of the projected National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. was the decision of delegates of the 61-denomination Foreign Missions Conference at its recent 55th annual meeting. This, the oldest and largest group invited to participate, rejected a move toward formation in 1950 of a Protestant super organization embracing virtually all interdenominational agencies.

LOUISVILLE.—"As far as I've been able to find out, I'm the only full-time resident County Jail chaplain in the country," said the Rev. Herman M. Janssen recently to the jail committe of the Louisville Council of Churches, the group of laymen who had helped make it possible.

ALTHOUGH THE ARMY REFUSED to name the men who are responsible for the execution of seven Japanese war leaders who were regarded as responsible for the recent conflict, it is known that Lieut. Charles C. Rexroad and Sarg. Martin Luther have performed previous executions and probably had some connection with the present ones. The irony of it all is that Rexroad, who has officiated in multiple executions on Guam, originally intended to be a minister, and the other executioner carries the name of the great hero of Christendom. Rexroad passed up the ministry because he drinks and smokes. —J.J.E.

SOME ARE ASKING THE QUESTION, when they hear so much emphasis upon the sin of war, whether we are not preaching a denominational gospel rather than the Universal Gospel. Are we not concentrating on that which is of secondary importance at the expense of that which is primary? That is a fair question and demands a fair answer. Throughout Scripture we see a pattern in which not only the prophets and the Apostles, but even the Lord Jesus Christ made it a point to attack sin just where it was the most obvious and deadly. For preaching judgment upon sin in its most clear manifestations sets off in that much bolder relief the mercy, love, and grace of God that can redeem from sin. Some one has said that it is precisely at the point of our deepest sins that conversion must begin. If this is true for individuals as such, how much more true for individuals in society! If the above is true, then there is involved in our preaching of the saving gospel the obligation to condemn sin wherever we find it. In fact, the hideous nature of modern war and the tremendous contrast between statism, the modern Anti-christ and the Living Redeeming Christ as witnessed to by regenerate men presents to the Church at large one of the most unique means of appealing to lost humanity. Let us not cheapen the Gospel by restricting it to the common sins. The Gospel will win its way into the hearts of more men only as we permit it to speak increasingly to our whole need.—J.J.E.

JOHN WESLEY HAS TRIUMPHED after two hundred years. The very church that had no room for Wesley's warm evangelical message is beginning to quake with revival. It is difficult to imagine a revival meeting in an Episcopal cathedral, yet that is precisely what happened some weeks ago in New York City's fashionable and world-famed Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Imagine 9,000 people packing the world's largest cathedral to hear a man preach on sin and judgment. Furthermore, he fearlessly applied the saving Gospel to the complex, but nevertheless ghastly, social sins of our time. Do we not have at this point the real revival potential of the future? If the saving grace of God is to be meaningful, it must speak directly to the sins of man. Modern man simply will not put up with the type of a gospel that produces Christians who are bold about speaking against little sins but fear being branded if they launch their attacks against the colossal sins of war, intemperance, divorce, crass materialism, and heathenish immorality within, not only the boundries of our "Christian" land, but, tragically enough, within the walls of our own respectable churches. John Wesley spoke directly to the evils of early England and revival broke out—revival that brought untold blessing to the world of his day. Thank God, his spirit which is the Spirit of God, is beginning to speak again in churches where he was silenced.—JJE

IT IS REPORTED that in the gathering mentioned above some 300 decisions were made. This brings up the much-discussed point, shall we evaluate a series of meetings, a church program, a relief program, etc., in terms of the number of decisions that were made? Well, to do so is certainly within the perspective of Biblical Christianity; for Luke, writing under the direction of the Spirit of God, recorded the number of new believers after Peter's great sermon at Pentecost. But having said that we must be quick to add that just because there have been no visible results, we dare not say that the Holy Spirit has not been working. Paul was certainly influenced by the witness of Stephen. Extreme care should be exercised on the part of Christian leaders that they do not fall into two common temptations. There is the temptation to assume that the outward result in terms of the raised hand, the going forward, and "inquiring" is sufficient to say a person has had a genuine experience. This assumption has often resulted in catastrophic neglect of Christian growth. On the other hand, there is the temptation on the part of others to say that Christian experience is simply not reducible to statistics (and they are surely right); but is it not possible for this point-of-view to neglect important opportunities to appeal directly to people as Jesus did when he knew they were ready for decision? In winning people to Jesus Christ only one rule can save us from either pitfall. That rule is to live so close to Christ that we will be led to speak the decisive word at the decisive time.—JJE

"A Christian church in 'pagan' Africa has sent an offering to their church headquarters in America to combat "the evils of civilization and the bad habits of some Americans in their neglect of Christianty." They have given twenty-five dollars out of their poverty to help save us. The gift is from an Episcopal Mission in Sierra Leone. Several millions of dollars have been given this year by Americans for missions in Africa. Christ still stands by the treasury. Have these African Christians, out of their penury, given more than all the rest? And for an equally urgent need?"—Taken from The American Friend, January 6, 1949.

World Peace Through World Missions

by Modena Studebaker, Gar Kida, Nigeria

Perhaps you have never even thought of missions as being a force for world peace. Actually, there is no other leaven working so consistently or so continuously for peace in the far corners of the earth, as Christian missions. Let us analyze that statement a bit. Is it actually true?

"Our purpose is simple and clear . . ."

What do missions go into the distant lands to accomplish? Our purpose is simple and clear, though the work may take many forms. Missionaries go out as Christ's ambassadors to carry the story of God's redeeming love and Christ's atoning death on the cross. The very essence and fabric of this wonderful message is love—God's eternal love and Jesus' sacrifical love. From this message of God's love comes the great commission, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations." So if we as ambassadors of Christ are faithful we are constantly preaching and living living the gospel of love and peace.

"How beautiful upon the mountains
Are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings,
That publisheth Peace."

At First, Distrust and Fear

This is the way the leaven of peace has been quietly working in our mission area in Northern Nigera. When the first missionaries came into this territory twenty-five years ago, the Africans regarding them with intense distrust and fear fled into the bush. A great barrier of suspicion and differences stood between the two races. As the missionaries remained and gradually won the confidence of the Africans, the barriers crumbled. Slowly the message of love replaced the veiled hostility and distrust of former days. Friendship began to ripen. Finally came the beautiful fruitage of Christian fellowship.

" . . . cementing peace . . ."

Is not this changing of fear to friendship, suspicion to love, the promoting of world peace in the truest sense? From being potential enemies behind barriers of racial differences our African people have become our Christian brothers. What a high and sacred privilege missions have in building Christian brotherhood and cementing peace and goodwill around the world!

" . . .in missions alone. . ."

Frank Laubach quotes a pertient statement from the 1945 Foreign Missions Conference of United States and Canada: "Thinking people are desperate. They want hope, and a plan, something they can do instead of looking on in helpless dismay. The church through her mission program has the only ultimate hope and it is the way of Christ. Our plan is to send many Christ-filled missionaries with technical training to try to heal all the festering sores where the next world war is breeding. In missions alone are the machinery, the spirit and the experience for this undertaking."

When we as missionaries gave our lives and our love to this challenging endeavor we probably did not consciously think of becoming ambassadors of world peace at all. But now, in this crucial age, when the world is longing for peace, we realize with deep satisfaction that we have been given a very real opportunity of being messengers for world peace.

May God forgive us that we have often been imperfect ambassadors of peace. May he grant us a clearer vision and deeper humility that we may more faithfully present the incomparable Christ of peace.—Reprinted from the Gospel Messenger official organ of the Church of the Brethren.

When we as missionaries gave our lives and our love to this challenging endeavor we probably did not consciously think of becoming ambassadors of world peace at all.

The Crusade of the Printed Page

by John E. Fretz

Twenty Million copies of the Scripture are needed now. Men and women are pleading for the Bible or Testaments, from all corners of the earth. Ten million Bibles are needed in Germany urgently. In China there were one thousand colporteurs before the present upheaval, now there are less than one hundred; the demand is simply tremendous among all classes. The Japanese need is so critical that it is being handled as "Emergency" item.

Once each year the American Bible Society invites the Protestant Churches of the United States to send representatives to an Annual Advisory Council meeting, held this year in New York City, Nevember 30 to December 1, 1948, where the Society presents its program of advance in distribution of the Scriptures; the aims and problems arising out of this great work.

Still the World's Greatest Text Book

Twenty million copies of the Bible needed this year can be produced, if we enable the work to go on by our contributions. Foreign and Home Missions go forward with the Bible and depend on the Bible societies constantly for assistance in translating native dialects. Were denominational mission boards to undertake such work, the cost in most cases would be utterly prohibitive. Apart from the Holy Bible and Testaments no mission work could be carried on. The Bible is still the world's greatest text book. It can go where missionaries cannot go and in numbers sufficiently large to reach multitudes now!

The Vacuums Will be Filled!

Time is of the essence in the distribution of the Scriptures. Changing conditions everywhere have created vaccums. These will not remain vacuums. Christianity has perhaps the greatest opportunity in its history to win these people; but if we fail now and if we do not act while the time is ripe, these vacuums will be filled by atheism, or in some cases communism. A sobering thought to ponder is "What if there were no Bible societies," and "Who knows but that the whole course of this world's history may be changed by the distribution and use of the Bible!"

A Press to Germany

On the other side, there was much to encourage one, too. In Germany, twenty Bible societies are uniting to carry on the work under extreme difficulties. A new printing press has been bought and shipped to Germany for the sole purpose of printing the Scriptures. Paper and binding supplies are furnished from the United States or bought outside the country.

Europe . . . . Japan

In Switzerland, the Scriptures are being printed for distribution in Europe, particularly to Hungary (this past year). The Netherlands and Belgium Bible Societies are getting under way with encouraging progress. In Japan, the Japanese Bible Society wants to make the Bible the first book of Japan. An interesting production this past year by the Bible Society was the printing of "The Sermon on the Mount" in Japanese. The demand for this little 1½c piece is tremendous. There are many smaller Bible societies doing fine work in the most unthought of places.

A number of denominations are assuming the responsibility of presenting the Society's program to their constituency, either as part of their own denominational program or for the Society, feeling that to support the A.B.S. is to further missionary activity in general.

The cost of Bibles and New Testaments is almost twice as great as before the war.

An interest in Protestantism and Evangelism in Brazil is also noted. There is much interest in buying and using Bibles. One representative in Brazil reports that whereas he used to be threatened for selling the Scriptures, he is now beseiged for copies on every side. Much effort and considerable money is earmarked for this area.

The average contribution per person for Bible societies in America is ½c; in England, 1½c; in Scotland and Canada, from 2-3c.

Visual Aid material is coming to the fore and should be made available to churches whenever our programs call for it. There are folders available describing it.

The Representative Evaluates

I should like to summarize or comment upon my impressions of these meetings as follows:

(A) A good feeling to sit down with other Protestants and in a common cause unite our efforts to carry our Lord's charge to the Church. Matt. 28:19-20 (Teach all nations).

Evangelist Packs Cathedral

NEW YORK.—One of the greatest triumphs ever scored by an evangelist in New York City occurred when more than 9,000 persons crowded the Cathedral of St. John the Divine to hear Bryan Green, Episcopal rector of Birmingham, England. Earlier sermons by Dr. Green in the Protestant Episcopal diocesewide mission sponsored during the past six weeks had drawn total crowds of more than 30,000.

"He preached about sin . . ."

The campaign culminated with a seven-day mission at the cathedral. On Sunday the British rector spoke for 40 minutes, his sermons interspersed with periods of prayer and hymn-singing. He preached about sin, and about the church as a "place for sinners." He warned his vast audience that "sin is corporate" and leads men on to acts they would not commit as individuals, citing atomic warfare as a "gigantic corporate evil."

Hundreds of young people accepted Christ

During the mission, Dr. Green held smaller meetings after the main sermons to which "no one over 30" was invited. Hundreds of young people accepted Christ and other hundreds made a new dedication of their lives to Christ. Bishop Charles K. Gilbert of the New York diocese explained the large turnouts which greeted the mission thus: "There is no stunting. Dr. Green believes in telling the truth, and he has no trombone."—Reprinted from the Christian Century.

(B) The impression that in supporting the American Bible Society one contributes directly to the far flung mission fields of the whole world. This need not rob one's own denomination of support, but the Bible Society is the servant of the Churches in that it seeks to distribute the Scriptures.

(C) A great deal of work is being done for a small amount of money.

(D) A more profound respect for the Bible itself, its power, its purpose, and its ultimate survival.

(E) A word should be said for the personnel, the secretaries, who are in charge of the various phases of this work. I was deeply impressed with the warm zealous spirit of these men as they spoke of the work and activities of the Society. Particularly the eminent Dr. Eric North, a good friend of the Mennonites, and more personally, Mr. Frank H. Mann. It seemed to me that each one considered himself or herself as a missionary indeed, and conscious of a holy calling.

(F) Mennonites were picked out for special mention since contributions from our people (all branches) was among the highest per member and the total contributions from Mennonites rose to an all-time high.

(G) After hearing the reports and discussions throughout the meetings and facing directly these needs coming from every direction, I felt somewhat like Dr. North when he said, "What shall we say or how shall we answer this plea for the Word of God? How shall we answer our Lord?"

"Newspapers Speak Peace"

by John T. Neufeld

A letter was recently received at the Mennonite Bible Mission in which the writer, a former Sunday School scholar, related that she had been down and out with a sick husband and other difficulties. A friend of hers handed her a copy of a Chicago newspaper which prints a Bible verse for each day, and this happened to be the verse which I had sent in upon the request of the newspaper. The Bible verse, together with the name of her former pastor, and the remembrance of her Sunday school days caused her to think and she said to herself, "I must come back to Him," (meaning God). She then and there knelt down and surrendered her life to God, and in her letter she expresses the joy and peace felt in her heart, adding "But why did I wait so long?"

In a Veterans' Paper

This was a case where the newspapers gave some free space to evangelism. However, the churches should not expect the newspapers to do everything free of charge, as printing at the present time is very expensive and the cost of distributing a newspaper, and other such items, runs high. Churches should be willing to spend some money on newspaper evangelism. May I cite some further experiences. A veterans' newspaper called the writer and asked for a Christmas greeting by our church in their annual Christmas magazine. This was to cost five or ten dollars. We said we would be happy to give this announcement, providing we might write the advertisement. Our message to the veteran's organization, together with the Christmas greeting, was "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." It was accepted and printed in their annual bulletin.

To Twenty Thousand

Again the local community newspaper called and asked for our church to join with other business men and churches in Christmas greetings. This would cost from five to fifteen dollars. Here again we said we would cooperate, but if agreeable, we would write a Christmas message. They were very happy to receive this, and a Christmas message in the form of a sermonette on the song of the angel's "Goodwill To Men" was inserted. As the newspaper gave us good space and an additional free announcement, we also inserted a New Year's greeting together with a short message. This paper reaches some twenty thousand people in the community.

Opportunity for Laymen

Some ministers find it possible to insert a short sermon each week and pay for the space to the local paper. This, I think, is a very effective way of bringing the message to the people. One church has a weekly message in one of the large Chicago daily papers which reaches over a million people. Sometimes newspapers will ask for sermonettes and will give free space or even pay for the message. Where it is necessary and possible to buy space, it is a good plan to have some organization of the church take

Great Need for Implements

Reports of great need for additional agricultural equipment in the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay and Uruguay were given by C. A. DeFehr and Herman J. Andres to the Annual MCC meeting held on December 30 to January 1. These brethren have been active in the Mennonite refugee resettlement program in Paraguay and Uruguay until their recent return.

In response to this need, as confirmed and clarified by these personal reports, a new appeal is being made among the North American brotherhood. Our Paraguay brethren who visited the United States and Canada in the last year commented on the good use to which they could put a large amount of abandoned horse-drawn farm implements which had been seen in most of our Mennonite communities.

A folder is being prepared and sent to each congregation giving details of needed items, as well as packing and shipping instructions. It is important that repairing and proper packing be done in the local communities. Any necessary further information may be secured from the MCC office at Akron, Pennsylvania.

Relief Opportunity in Sumatra

The MCC program has not been adversely affected by the recent extension of Dutch rule over the major portion of Sumatra. On the other hand, there are at present emergency needs for food, clothing and medicines among the people of newly occupied territory, which is now accessible to the workers. The Dutch government welcomes relief aid to those who are in need.

Material Aid Shipments

During the month of December the following shipments of materials valued at a total of $64,765.81 left port: To Austria: 10 tons clothing, bedding, shoes, and soap; To China: 42 tons flour; To Japan: 1 ton Christmas bundles; To Poland: 40 tons flour; To British Zone Germany: 2½ tons dried milk, 18 tons food and clothing, 7 tons lard; To American Zone Germany: 3 tons food and clothing; To Paraguay: 2 International trucks, 2 Farmall tractors, 500 reels of wire, 19 tons agricultural equipment.

In the Headlines

Charles Rickert, Presbyterian pre-theological student, at Bluffton, who had refused to register, had his hearing in Federal Court in Toledo on January 7. The case continues until the 13th. About forty Bluffton students and faculty members attended the hearing.

Austin Regier, also a non-registrant, whose trial at Minneapolis, Minnesota, early in December was put off until a later date because the judge wished to have more information, was sentenced Monday morning, January 10, to one year and one day in prison.

Jacob Kroeker Passes December 12 in Germany.—Rev. Jacob Kroeker, formerly of Wernigerode, Germany, passed away on Sunday, December 12, according to reports from his son, John J. Kroeker, at Newton, Kansas. Rev. Kroeker had been seriously ill for the last two and one-half years. He died in the home of his daughter, Mrs. H. Bartel, at Viesenhaeuserhof, Stuttgart-Muehlehausen.

Reverend Kroeker was well known through his writings to many people in this country. He was the director of a mission in Germany for many years. More detailed information about his life and work will doubtless be available soon.—Hillsboro Journal, December 23, 1948.

over this project and with the cooperation of the minister see that proper messages are ready for the paper. I believe that this type of evangelism is just as practical and effictive as radio evangelism.

they founded their whole life has been found wanting. They are hungry to learn how the rest of the world lives, thinks, and judges. They do not have the sense of guilt which their fathers have. They desire—and deserve—a chance to know and thus to establish their own standards. What a tremendous challenge for all of us who are convinced that in Christ—in a convincingly Christian life—they will find this answer they seek! These young people are seeking, testing, and taking nothing for granted. Every opportunity for contact with those beyond their own borders helps them in this search. International correspondence offers one bridge of understanding and appreciation. Nowadays many German young people are well equipped to read and speak the English language. This offers another avenue of contact—periodicals, books, and other types of publications. Student exchange is recognized as one of the best ways to serve this need. The relatively few who are able to study in foreign schools are privileged. One student made this suggestion: "It would be wonderful to have a number of foreign students studying and working and living among us here." The opportunities for mutual exchange and the consequent direct contact of young people from various countries offer one of the best ways to satisfy the hunger of the isolation German student, and it is also a means of building bridges of understanding and appreciation whose value cannot be estimated.

German young people have lost practically everything which meant anything to them at all. They deserve to be aided in their quest for truth, for faith, and for a sense of permanence and security. They are eager, alert, courageous. Because of the past, they are often inhibited and shy, but there lies a great promise for the future in them—if they are given a chance. As future leaders they look to us—will we serve them?

Not Without Honor

Imagine our surprise, recently, when the manager of one of our Conference book stores made the remark, "Not more than ten per cent of our total business is done with Mennonite churches." We could hardly believe our ears! Going back to our reports we discovered that during the last fiscal year our three book stores—Berne, Newton, and Rosthern—they had sold a total of $52,468.84 worth of merchandise of which, according to the opinion expressed, probably not more than $5,000—$6,000 came from Mennonites.

Is it possible that the words of Jesus apply, "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country"? Is it possible that our Mennonite churches, passing by their own Conference stores and their offerings, are purchasing their books, literature, and religious instructional materials through non-Conference sources? A pastor of one of our large city churches a few weeks ago wrote for a complete line of samples of our Conference publications—running the whole gamut from Cradle Roll to the adult level—and a few days later wrote us as follows:

> "After observing the school here . . . . for two years, I am more than ever convinced that our basic principles of faith are taught to and caught by the children in Sunday school or they are not taught or caught anywhere in the years of Sunday school training. I believe our time with the children is too short as it is, and then if that time is used to recount Old Testament war lore, we are surely misusing the time we have!"

Our Conference bookstores are able to furnish anything in the line of religious literature, reference books, instructional aids, and other literature needs in the church, the Sunday school, or the home. The least, we would suggest, that our people can do is to at least place your order through a Conference bookstore.

We believe you will agree that if the difference—90 per cent!—amounting to $47,221.96, were put into Conference publications, there might be a different story, both to be told and to be heard!

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

Don't let the children tell you, "Daddy, I've read all the story books."

Here is one little book they probably haven't read (neither have you!), and it has the advantage of being true. Stories which apeal to the children's sense of adventure, courage, spiced with the flavor of their times, is here at your fingertips—eighteen stories from the early Christian church, and, in particular, from our Mennonite history.

The name, please?—surely, the name is TALES FROM MENNONITE HISTORY, written by our good friend, Jacob H. Janzen, at Waterloo, Ontario, Canada.

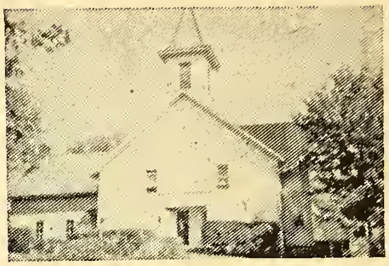
And the price, please?—yes, surely: only 98 cents.

BEHIND THE 100% PLAN

First Mennonite Church, Sugarcreek, Ohio,

William H. Stauffer, Minister

Serving 99 homes



This church voted to adopt the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN. They write:

"We think this is a real step forward.

"The First Mennonite Church was organized in 1926 under the leadership of Rev. Lester Hostetler. He served as its pastor until 1930, with one year of absence at Upland, California. From 1930 to 1935, the church had supply ministers. Mr. Wilbur Miller, of Columbus, Brother of Orie and Ernest, served for several years. Rev. Jesse Smucker served the last few years before 1935. Rev. and Mrs. William Stauffer came in February, 1935. They have two boys, Bruce, 8, and Billy, 4.

"Our church has three parts. The main part seats about 200. The left wing seats 100 and is used by the Men's Bible Class. The right wing is our religious Education Wing. We have 12 class rooms and a large basement with kitchen. The Women's Missionary Society has its own room. We have four women's organizations and a youth group. We have services each Sunday morning. In the evening we have a Bible Story Hour for the boys and girls, and young people's meeting. We have a robed choir of some 25 voices, mostly young people and young adults.

"The church was organized with 85 members. The present membership is 225."

LET'S GET ACQUAINTED

That's what one of our good ministers thinks is exactly what we need—to get acquainted.

In order to acquaint his church with the General Conference and its operations more fully. he has written to the Mennonite Publication Office requesting that for one month his church receives fifteen copies of THE MENNONITE. Now isn't that a splendid idea? Imagine a pastor sitting down with his young folks, or even with the older folks for an intensive study for a whole month of all the various Conference activities—textbook: THE MENNONITE, official publication of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America.

We say he chose a good textbook, because there is something in THE MENNONITE for everyone in the family, for young and old alike. It's a good family paper—providing the family takes it. That's true of a great many things, like good family dinners, fine family devotions, and good family discussions. Each is good—providing the family takes it—as a family.

The Campus Peace Witness

Mennonite Inter-College Peace Conference

by Dwight Platt

CHICAGO.—About twenty-five students, representing eight different Mennonite schools—Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Messiah Bible College, Goshen College, Bluffton College, Tabor College, Freeman Junior College, Bethel College, and Hesston College —met for the first meeting of the Mennonite Inter-College Peace Conference held on Thursday December 30, at the Mennonite Home Mission in Chicago. This Conference was called by the Mennonite Central Committee Peace Section after requests had been made by peace groups on some of the Mennonite college campuses for such a meeting.

Needed—Aggressive Peace Groups

The stimulation of a greater interest in peace among the student bodies, and thereby getting larger membership in peace societies was evidently one of the big problems in most of the schools as revealed by reports of the activities of the peace groups on the various campuses. There was also general agreement that these peace groups ought to send peace teams to speak in the churches to awaken in them an interest in peace.

On Becoming Evangelical About the Peace Witness

Speaking on "Our Witness to the Non-Mennonite World," Winfield Fretz said that the witness we are now giving to non-Mennonites is a helplessness in stopping war, a cooperating with the state in administering conscription, a divided witness, and a demonstrative witness. The witness we ought to be giving is production of literature for non-Mennonites, teaching those non-Mennonites among us peace principles more effectively, making our position clear in the newspaper, going directly to the supporters of war, and laying our burden before them, and becoming evangelical about our peace teachings. Other messages were given by Guy Hershberger on "Available and Needed Peace Literature," and Albert Gaeddert on, "Our Responsibility to our Own Constituency." Harold S. Bender and Albert Gaeddert, chairman and secretary respectively of the MCC Peace Section, led the discussions.

Spiritual Resources for a Peace Witness

Rev. C. N. Hostetter, in closing the conference, stressed four points in our spiritual resources for peace witnessing: adequate Christian experience, prayer, exercise of faith, and expressing Jesus' principle of love in our daily life.

This Resolved!

Peace work in Europe, the work of the Mennonite Central Committee Peace Section, and the peace teams that were sent out last summer, were the subject of further reports and discussion. Out of all this the findings committee of the conference, composed of one representative from each school and headed by President Ramseyer, Bluffton College, formulated twelve resolutions which were adopted by the conference::

1. That we emphasize work among the teenage groups.

World-wide Witness

2. That we help in establishing the Mennonite Central Committee peace center in Europe by gifts of books, money, etc., and also by encouraging some students to study in a European university and give part-time service to peace work at that center.

3. That we make greater use of foreign exchange students in our college peace socieities.

4. That we encourage those students who are corresponding with foreign students to choose peace problems as topics for their letters.

5. That we encourage those students who are planning to go to Europe next summer to study conscientiously the peace teachings of our church and specific peace problems.

The Local and Regional Witness

6. That we organize regional inter-collegiate peace meetings.

7. That we encourage the launching of a peace contest (peace oration and/or research).

An Integrated Witness

8. That we conclude from the reports of several college peace groups that definite link between the Conference peace committee and the college peace society is a very valuable thing.

Biblical Witness

9. That in our meetings we stress especially the Biblical basis of our peace conviction and non-resistance as a total way of life.

Plans for the Future

10. That we establish a mailing list of peace group officials of each Mennonite and affiliated college.

11. That a continuation committee be formed composed of one M.C.C. Peace Section representative (as chairman), one member of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges, and two or three students from college peace groups located in the same region (by rotation). That this continuation committee prepare another inter-collegiate peace institute for next year to which we invite students interested in active work for peace but not necessarily members of peace societies. Bluffton, Goshen, and the Mennonite Biblical Seminary were chosen to have representatives on this committee this next year.

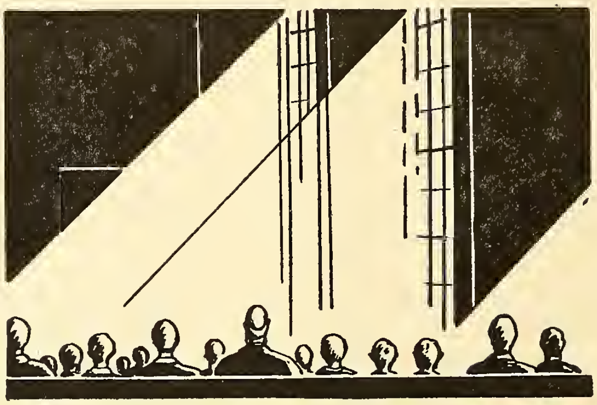
12. That a secretary be selected to pool ideas from the different college peace societies on all the campuses, circulate programs and minutes of the peace groups, and help in planning for next year's Inter-College Peace Institute. Emma Sommer, of Goshen College, was chosen for this post for next year.

Quiet in the House of God

by Ellis Graber

Sunday morning! What a welcome change from the hurry and confusion of a pressing week. With a sense of eagerness I prepared to go to church. I found myself walking along hurriedly in the brisk morning air. It must have been the strains of organ music that magnetically lured me on.

As I entered the church it seemed a haven of quietness and peace. The Spirit of God seemed very near waiting to be received by those who came into its presence. The usher led me to my favorite pew and I bowed my head with the prayer that this one short hour might accomplish its purpose.



— Harmon

The strains of the organ were soothing and majestic. One could just listen and feel the surge of inspiration that music in God's house can bring, preparing one for the scripture reading, prayers and the sermon . . . . What was that? ? Directly ahead of me and to the left, a red plumed hat and a green one excitedly moving back and forth—now one is quiet, now it flutters vigorously before me. Stubbornly I resolved not to look. Closing my eyes I tried to catch the spirit of worship from the music. Perhaps the piece had changed, maybe the organist was not at her best now—somehow the effect had been lost.

I was conscious of sounds that didn't come from the organ—hissy, breathy sounds of people whispering behind me—rather close—first one speaking, then another, then both. I shifted my position in the pew. One could close his eyes to distractions but how could one close his ears.

What had happened to the atmosphere of hallowed, calm undisturbed peace for which my soul sought and which answered when I came into the door? Why had these people come? Were they really seeking the presence of God? Were they not in God's house? Had they not learned "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength?"

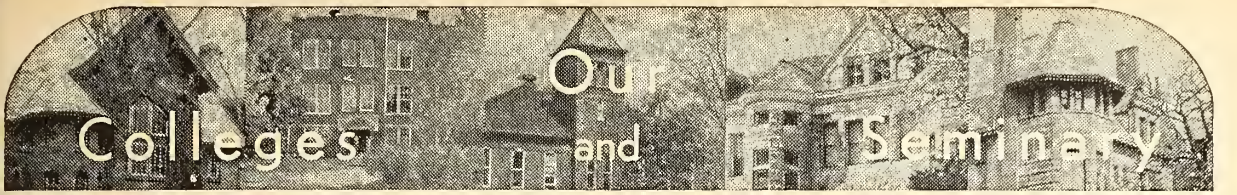
I looked about me, the pews were filled, the organ playing—but, here and there people were busy—busy talking. And from the back came actual voice sounds. My heart sank in utter disappointment. I had come to seek a Presence and to be filled with God's Spirit, but in the confusion I could not receive.

What could I do? What could I say? I know—I will pray. Yes, I will pray: Heavenly Father, grant that when I come into Thy house of worship I may never be guilty of distracting another soul from communion with Thee. AMEN.

FROM PASTOR TO PEOPLE

Ministers need a certain amount of time in which to work without interruption. It is of great help to them if there are no telephone calls, or calls to the parsonage study during the forenoon, and if Saturdays are kept as free as possible in order that they might prepare in heart and mind for the Lord's Day. We have suggested this in the bulletin previously and in various conversation. The cooperation has been wonderful beyond all anticipation. For this thoughtfulness your pastor is truly grateful.

We want to make it very clear, however, that you should feel free to telephone your pastor at any time you feel you should. He is always glad to be of service. For that reason he has a private telephone and for that reason he is always ready to make appointments with you for a time mutually agreeable He always has time to help members of the parish But it is our hope that whenever possible these things be done after 11:30 in the morning.—Taken from the Zion Mennonite Church Bulletin, Souderton Pennsylvania.



BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Nancy Carr, soprano, gave a concert in the college chapel on the evening of January 12. This was the second number on the College Concert Series. The monthy faculty religious discussion meeting was held Friday evening, January 14. Charles Richert, non registrant Presbyterian pre-theological student, had a hearing in Federal Court in Toleda January 7. The case was continued until the 13th. About forty students and faculty members attended the hearing. President Ramseyer attended the meeting of the Association of American Colleges in New York City January 11-12. Sessions of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges were also held at this time. Semester examinations will be held January 18-21, with the new semester opening January 24. A meeting of candidates for full time church vocations was held Thursday evening, January 6, Reverend Hamblen, an alumnus who is now pastor of an Evangelical United Brethren church in Lima, spoke on "God's Call."

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

College is again in full swing after the Christmas holidays. The winter term opened with six new students enrolling. The new students are: Rudy Goerzen, Starbuck, Manitoba; Elly Janzen, Winkler, Man.; Aaron Klassen, Homewood, Man.; Peter Krahn, Niverville, Man.; Jacob Warkentin, Headingly, Man.; and Arthur Wiens, Herschel, Sask.

The Bethel Mission Church observed the week of prayer from January 2 to 6 in which students participated. Various speakers took part in drawing us into a fellowship of prayer. The theme for these services centered in the Holy Spirit.

The College is anticipating the visit of Elmer Ediger for the fifteenth of January. He will be visiting the different Mennonite schools and colleges of Canada in behalf of Voluntary Service. A number of students are preparing themselves for work on peace teams, mental hospital team leadership and other forms of service during the spring and summer months.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The School of Missions sponsored by the Bethel College church held its first sessions on Sunday evening, January 9. Five meetings, based on the the theme, "China," have been arranged by the educational committee of the church. A fellowship hour with a light meal is held at 5:30 followed by discussion groups for all ages.

Mr. and Mrs. Azriel Pinskers, Newton, contributed 10 volumes of "The Universal Jewish Encyclopedia" to the Bethel College library. On Monday, Jan. 10. Rabbi Richmond, of Temple Immanuel, Wichita, dedicated the set of encyclopedias at the chapel services.

The Bethel College Octet presented programs of music in five churches during the week-end of Jan. 7-10. They traveled to Pawnee Rock, Kismet, and Hanston, Kan. Waka, Texas; and Turpin, Okla. Dr. David H. Suderman. accompanied the group.

The Bethel College A Cappella choir presented a concert in the Inman high school auditorium on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 16.

H. J. Andres, director of the Bethel Deaconess Hospital and Home for the Aged, Newton, spoke at chapel on Thursday, Jan. 13. Mr. Andres recently returned from Uruguay where he assisted in the settlement of Mennonite refugees.

A peace program was presented by the college Peace Club in Burrton, Kansas on Sunday evening, Jan. 16. Bertha Fast, Daniel Classen, Henry Poettcker, and Marvin Wasser were in charge of the program.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Two outstanding reports by returned relief workers were featured in the life of the school during the past week. At the Wednesday night prayer meeting, Ruth Hilty, Pandora, Ohio, gave a very moving message of her experiences in Europe. The other message was delivered by Melvin Funk of Hillsboro, Kansas, who has enrolled in the Seminary this quarter. He gave a report on his work in Mexico for the Mennonite Central Committee. This is one of the pioneer Voluntary Service projects. He declared that the principle of non-resistance was confirmed by the victory of these Mexican people over the banditry which characterized their earlier experiences in Canada. He also declared that the impact of these Mennonites on the Mexican economic set-up had been considerable. Describing the structure of Mennonite life as a "country within a country." In the Voluntary Service project there was work with both the Mexican and the Mennonite people, the help with a small German School, the development of a ten-bed hospital, an agricultural program to permit these people to raise crops more in line with Mexican conditions, classes in English, work in the churches of the community, Melvin Funk concluded with four points. First, the struggle which goes on to maintain a distinctive culture in the midst of the hostile culture; second, opportunity to appreciate the Mexican people and their fine qualities; third, the superabundance of the American people in contrast to the average Mexican who earns eighty to ninety cents a day; and fourth, the need for a genuine international Christian witness in Mexico.

The kitchen in the main building has been remodelled to permit more efficient cooking for the expanding number of students who take their meals there.

Jottings

—First Mennonite Church, Butterfield, Minnesota: Our church is promoting a Bible reading plan for the coming year. All members willing to read the entire Bible this year agreed to read 3½ chapters a day. As a congregation we plan to read the 1,189 chapter before next year. Some of the thoughts which we want to keep in mind as we work towards this Bible reading plan are: Pray for God's wisdom and grace as we read; seek God's will as we read, follow God's word as we read; and put God first in our daily program.—Mrs. Ted Linscheid, Corr.

—Beartrice Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: The Young People's Fellowship of the First Mennonite and Beatrice Mennonite Churches had their annual banquet on December 30. Parents were honored guests, with Mr. B. Bargen, of Newton, Kansas, as speaker of the evening. The children's Christmas Sunday Sunday school program was given the evening of December 26.—Mrs. Donald Claassen, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Halstead, Kansas: During January 16-23, our church will have its annual week of services, with Dr. J. E. Hartzler, of Bethel College, as speaker. Hulda Gaede and Harris Waltner both Bethel College showed slides at a recent Sunday evening program. These were slides which they had taken during their Student Exchange and Voluntary Service tour last summer. On December 19, the C.E. members gave a Christmas program, concluding with the cantata, "The Wondrous Story," by the church choir. Approximately 60 children, choir members, and sponsors participated in the annual Sunday school Christmas program on Christmas eve. A pageant of the story of Christ's birth was presented by the children. Several men of the congregation helped build a new garage for the parsonage recently.—Betty Jean Franz, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: A fellowship and worship service at our church on Christmas day began with a breakfast at the church at 6:00 a. m. This was followed by a worship service at 7:30 a.m. The evening of December 26 we had our White Gift service.

—Rev. and Mrs. Loris Habegger are the happy parents of a baby girl, Lorna Jean, born December 11. Reverend Habegger is pastor of the Halstead Mennonite Church.

—First Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Our church was the scene of two golden weddings during the month of December. Mr. and Mrs. John P. Duerksen celebrated their December 11, and Mr. and Mrs. John D. Harder, December 19. At our annual meeting we adopted the Mennonite Hundred Per Cent Plan. —Corr.

—Hereford Mennonite Church, Bally, Pennsylvania: Groups from our church took part in the following activities during the holiday season: conducted Christmas services at our Home for the Aged and also at the Eastern District Sunday School Service at the Home for the Aged; carolled for the aged and shut-ins; conducted a New Year's Eve service at the Home for the Aged in Fredrick, following which we attended a watch-night musical and candlelight communion service in the Eden Mennonite Church of Schwenksville. On January 10 we began our Training School for Sunday school teachers. This school is to continue for eight weeks on Monday evenings, using the book "How to Teach in the Church School," as a textbook.—Mae Latshaw, Corr.

—Walton Mennonite Church, Walton, Kansas: Due to generous gifts from two church members and a gift of $100 from the Walton State Bank, the church begins the year with a clear record. Lamont Woelk, member of our church and a ministerial student at Bethel College, brought the message on Christmas day. Mary Becker, missionary to South America, spoke and showed pictures January 7, as part of the Prayer Week observance.—Ella Voth, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: Dr. J. E. Hartzler will be in our community on the week-end of January 30, speaking in both churches in the morning and in the Beatrice Mennonite Church in the evening. The contribution of our church on Universal Bible Sunday entitled us to at least 40 free individual one-year subscriptions to THE RECORD, the American Bible Society periodical giving monthly information converning the work of Bible distributon.

—Bethel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: "Zum neuen Jahr den alten Vater." He has proven true in the past, therefore let us show Him our love by our humble obedience in the new year. Our church has purchased a station wagon for our missionaries in China. It will be sent as soon as it is safe to do so. Prayer Week was observed by our pastor speaking on Revelation. The entire community was saddened by the tragedy the Ted Janzen family met while on their way to California, where they had intended to spend Christmas. Two young sons, aged 21 and 17, were killed. They were sent home for burial, at the largest funeral ever held in our church. The parents and one daughter are still hospitalized in Gallup, New Mexico.—Helen Penner, Corr.

—Correction: Since the article, "The Magic Word for Mennonite D. P.'s" appearing in the December 21 issue of The Mennonite, was prepared some time before publication, it gave an inaccurate picture on one point—the number of Mennonites who had emigrated to Canada. The author, Arthur A. Voth, writes, "At that time. (the time of the preparation of this article) about 1,400 Mennonites had emigrated to Canada. By November 18, 1948, which is the last figure that I have, 3,983 had left."

—Menno Mennonite Church, Lind, Washington: We observed Universal Prayer Week in our church with meetings every evening. The pastor conducted "A Study of Old Testament Sacrifices and their Fulfillment in Christ," for these meetings. The congregation held its annual business meeting the afternoon of the first Sunday in January. A twenty-four voice choir, under the direction of Mrs. Arthur Franz, presented as its Christmas cantata, "The Light of Christmas."—Mrs. Willard Wiebe, Corr.

—Lehigh Mennonite Church, Lehigh, Kansas: Mary Becker spoke recently on her experiences as missionary in Colombia, South America. 329 cans of beef were canned for overseas relief. The young married women sent $175 to missions and gave $175 to local church support. The money was derived from a benefit sale. The church auditorium has been redecorated and a new furnace installed. Our church was one of four participating in Week of Prayer services.—M. E. Goering, Corr.

—Waldo Harder, Elbing, Kansas, is the new treasurer of the Education Committee of the Western District Conference, succeeding Mrs. H. J. Andres.

—Bethesda Mennonite Church, Marion, South Dakota: Rev. T. A. ven der Smissen our pastor, conducted meetings in the First Mennonite Church at Beatrice, Nebraska, January 1-4. Rev. Edmund J. Miller, president of Freeman Junior College, served our church during the absence of our pastor. The young people had a watch night service in our church December 31.—Corr.

What It Means to Be a Student in Germany Today

by Erna J. Fast Relief Worker, Hamburg, Germany

"May I trouble you a moment?" These words were addressed to me as I stepped into the car in front of the Studentenwerk (Student Welfare Center) of Hamburg University. A young man had hesitantly approached me and was waiting for an answer. For about an hour I had vicariously lived in such poignant need while discussing the distressing situation facing so many of the students in Germany with Frl. Steffen, the motherly woman who cares for the students' welfare. I didn't feel it was possible to grasp or hear any more, but of course I listened to the young man who wished to speak with me. "Can you do anything to help me get a room so that I will be allowed to continue my studies here at the university?" he asked. "I am a refugee from the East, have lost everything, and can stay here only if I find a room. How I wish I knew where to go!"

You can help give German students contacts with the outside. You can help by corresponding with a student. To get in touch with German Students write the Young People's Union correspondence secretaries, Helen Tieszen or O'Ray Graber, North Newton. Kansas. They will help you.

Yes, a place to stay, even if it is only a bed with a straw mattress in an unheated room, or a corner of a larger room in which many people must live together, or some other makeshift arrangement. Frl. Steffen told me at the beginning of our conversation that right now at the opening of the semester the need for rooms was her greatest concern. "It is like fighting with a dragon!" she exclaimed. With this comes the need for beds, linens, blankets.

Then through our conversation I learned about the refugee student who had just recently failed in his final examination because of overwork and worry. He has a wife and two children for whom he must care besides finishing his study. Now he cannot remain in Hamburg because he is no longer considered a student. Return to the Russian Zone is unthinkable, permission to settle in some other "land" almost impossible. The future is very dark and uncertain for this unhappy father.

Always clothing needs are a great problem. So many students are all alone in the world and have no one to turn to for help. The disabled veteran with artificial limbs finds that his clothes wear so much faster than before. Before the currency reform while their meager or even fairly substanial savings were available to them, students could not buy because the German economy refused to give them sufficient ration points; now these points are easily available, but there is no money to buy the clothes which fill the shop windows in every street and corner.

Three Major Needs of Students

Pastor Bannach, the spiritual father of the student congregation at Hamburg University and also at present the German leader of the Student Christian Movement, suggested three major areas of need which the students faces today. The first of these is the financial bankruptcy in which so many students, as well as their supporting agencies, have been plunged by the currency reform. Personal savings were wiped away. Reserve funds at the universities disappeared in like manner. Practically all students must work if they wish to continue their studies. In some localities work opportunities are numerous, whereas in other cities they are very difficult to find. Pastor Bannach stated that many church and educational leaders fear a general collapse among the students at the end of the present semester (February-March, 1949). This collapse will be due either to lack of funds, physical and spiritual exhaustion, or the disappearance of work opportunities.

The second great area of need is that of an opportunity for fellowship. Since almost all students live privately in homes or in single rooms, this enriching experience, which is so much a part of college or university campus life in America, is impossible here. But how much the students need it! Classrooms are in constant use from morning until the evening hours with lectures. This is due to the fact that such a relalively small part of the university buildings remains intact. There are few, if any, study halls. Where the student lives it is either too cold or too noisy to study. There are no quiet corners where the student may concentrate, or have a free and pleasant talk with fellow students, a place to read books and magazines, or to be alone for a bit. One students said to me one day: "If only we had a little room in which we could sit undisturbed and quietly now and then!"

The third need which is very obvious to anyone who has opportunity to meet students is their hunger for contact. Those who are now preparing to serve as future leaders of Germany were either preschool or primary grade pupils when Hitler came to power. They have lived in isolation. Now they live in a mental and spiritual vacuum because that upon which

Plans are underway to Unite Two Youth Movements

which are interdenominational

[The two large interdenominational youth organizations, the United Christian Youth Movement and International Society of Christian Endeavor, are considering the matter of uniting their forces in one organization. The following bases of agreement are those that the organizations are considering. Ed.]

CHICAGO—Agreement on "the goal of an inclusive, united evangelical Christian youth movement" in United States and Canada was reached at a recent meeting of representatives of the United Christian Youth Movement, International Society of Christian Endeavor, and the International Council of Religious Education, it was announced today.

Recognizing "the primacy of the organized Church" and outlining seven areas for further discussion and agreement, the joint committee adopted a statement which listed the bases for continuing consultations and which will be presented to the three organizations for approval.

The committee met Oct. 22 at Buck Hill Falls, Pa. The statement of the joint committee was released today by Dr. Isaac K. Beckes, director of young peoples's work in the International Council of Religious Education and executive secretary for the International Society of Christian Endeavor.

The text of the statement follows:

"Reaffirming our loyalty to Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour, and to the Christian Church as the visible expression of His body on earth, and acknowledging with humility the strategic need of this hour for a united ministry of youth, we, the members of the Joint Committee of the International Society of Christian Endeavor and the United Christian Youth Movement—International Council of Religious Education adopt the following bases for our continuing consultations:

1. We are agreed upon the goal of an inclusive, united, evangelical Christian youth movement, committed to Christ and His Church. This movement must serve the spiritual needs of youth.

2. We agree to and support the primacy of the organized Church in the development of this youth organization and program. This principle must be interpreted in the light of the varieties of denominational structure and polity and the growing ecumenical movement within the church, and provide for an expression of the interest and leadership of Christian lay people in the welfare of youth.

3. We are agreed that the governing body of this inclusive youth movement contain a majority of young people in its membership.

4. We recognize the following areas which must be explored in order to find bases of agreement:

a. The name of the inclusive organization.

b. A time schedule sufficiently lengthened to permit necessary consultation and understanding in order to reach common agreement.

c. Provision in this youth movement for the widest possible participation, including those groups in denominations, churches, and agencies not at present associated with the International Society of Christian Endeavor and/or the United Christian Youth Movement.

d. To preserve the heritage and contribution of Christian Endeavor in the main stream of the church, in accordance with the principles stated above.

e. To relate effectively this inclusive movement to the world outreach of Christian Endeavor, the World Council of Christian Education, the World Council of Churches, and to the urgent need for a great movement of Christian youth around the world, recognizing the responsibility of existing American organizations to youth groups in other lands.

f. To define clearly the relationship of the inclusive youth movement to the programs of children's and adult work in the churches.

g. To reconcile the principle of denominational responsibility for youth programs with the problem and need of those churches that have or may have Christian Endeavor societies and desire to retain their identity when they become part of this inclusive youth organization and may require continuing assistance in program.

5. We are agreed upon the urgency of finding means to mutual understanding, fellowship and cooperative action which will serve as a basis for the establishment of the inclusive youth movement.

6. We are agreed to name a continuing committee, to work in the interim between meetings of this joint committee and to develop proposals for the implementation of the above agreements.

7. We are agreed that during this intermin period the agencies represented here are free in good faith to conduct their activities and promote their programs."

IDEAS HAVE LEGS

Church attendance is being stimulated by an unusual campaign in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, where local dairies are capping milk bottles intended for home delivery with special tops bearing message. "Go to the church of your choice." The special caps are put on milk bottles for deliveries on Saturday morning only. Printing of the caps is financed by the local Kiwanis Club, and Yarmouth ministers say the scheme has helped increase attendance at Sunday morning and evening services.

And what do people say about the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament?

Here are the viewpoints of some

By Dr. J. Carter Swaim*

[Editor's Note: Dr. Swain toured the nation recently, speaking in 40 seminaries, colleges and universities and helping students, faculty members, and others become acquainted with the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament.]

At the end of February, 1946, the vice-president of a college was traveling on a bus in the South. It was after midnight and most passengers had their lights out and their seats in the reclining position.

Across the aisle from the college official, however, the light was burning. By its dim radiance a fellow-passenger was diligently comparing two books. One "looked like a Bible"; the other appeared to be a well-printed book, bound in blue.

"Does this light bother you?" asked the student. "No," said the vice-president. 'You appear to be studying the Bible."

"Yes," said the young man. "I am getting acquainted with the recently published Revised Standard Version of the New Testament. I have already memorized the Gospel according to Matthew in the new translation, and it is my aim to commit the whole New Testament to memory."

This was the first time the college official had heard of the Revised Standard Version—it was still then three weeks old! But he got one at the earliest opportunity and has used it ever since.

Bible-line Looks Like Nylon-line

In a college town of the Middle West the demand was so great that when a book store announced it would have copies of the new version on sale the next morning, the people queued up, so that—perhaps for the first time in history—the Bible-line looked like a nylon-line, and soap-line and the sugar-line.

A university president in the Chicago area found that in most department stores it was temporarily out of stock; he did succeed, however, in obtaining a copy at Sears. Roebuck and Company!

There are but three of countless incidents which, taken together, make the thrilling story of welcome that has been accorded "the most important publication of 1946." It is a story that takes in all parts of English-speaking America: Canada and the United States; North, East, South and West—and all classes of people: young and old, the educated and the uneducated, the professional religious worker and the layman.

Reads Copy in One Sitting

A retired professor reports that, immediately upon the appearance of the Revised Standard Version, he obtained a copy and read it through at a single sitting.

A minister on the West Coast gave his 93-year-old mother a leather-bound edition for a Christmas present. For years she had studied the Bible out of Dr. Scofield's edition, but wrote that she was increasingly using and loving the Revised Standard Version.

The president of a small denominational college said he had purchased it with some misgivings and for a while used it only for reference and comparison. In a few weeks it had become for him the English New Testament, and now he compares other translations with it.

But its use has not been confined to college presidents, retired professors and the aged and infirm! In the state of Washington, in a town of 9,000 persons, there is a church which has 600 members. The minister has himself sold 125 copies to these members.

One church sent copies to all of its men who were still in military service at the time it was published.

Use it for Group Bible Study

One college student, now studying under the G.I. bill, reported that he became acquainted with it soon after publication; his "buddy" had once studied at the Moody Bible Institute and received one from friends there. The two of them were members of a small group which met regularly for Bible study and prayer. "It was wonderful to have this new version," he said. "It made so many things clear that had not been clear before." Now he is using it professionally, in training for the ministry.

Another college student, planning a 48-hour train ride, took the Revised Standard Version with him and read it through en route. He said it came to him with all the vigor of a new book; it was as if he had never known the New Testament before.

Not only in institutions of higher learning has it been received with gladness, but also in the church school, by pupils and teachers alike as well as by parents. A junior boy exclaimed, "I read this—I can understand it!" A 12-year-old girl, upon first looking into it, asked, "If that is what the Bible means, why didn't they say it long ago?" An intermediate teacher said, "For the first time in my life I can read the New Testament with understanding and with unrestricted delight." One mother spoke for many, "I just love the Revised Standard Version." Said another, "I never before read more than a chapter or two of the Bible at a time. Now when I read I find myself unable to stop, and I read whole books at a time."

Ministers Use it for Public Worship

Ministers have welcomed it as an aid to worship. On the Sunday when the Revised Standard Version was a year old, a Lutheran Clergyman reported that he was using his second copy, having already worn out one. A minister in rural Canada stated that he had used it in the pulpit every Sunday since publication. Many pastors have echoed the one who said he liked it because it made the pulpit reading of the epistles so much easier. He said that the involved sentence structure of earlier official versions always gave him a sense of frustration. He tried hard to read them effectively but always had the sense of failure. The revised Standard Version enables him to make what he believes is an effective and intelligible public reading of the epistles.

Many pastors read from it each Sunday and under "Scripture Lesson" on the printed order of worship indicate that the reading is from the Revised Standard Version. One has heard it used in worship at a regional convention of the Church of God, in the devotional service at a plenary session of a state council of churches, and at the baccalaureate service of a theological seminary.

A young minister said he regularly takes the Revised Standard Version with him in his pastoral calling. "I am inexperienced," he said, "and I wouldn't always know what to talk about. This gives me something which opens up helpful conversation."

Nor is appreciation of the new version confined merely to format or more intelligible English. A saintly woman who had been widowed early in life expressed great relief upon learning the true text of Roman 8:28. The King James Version has it: "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." I have always wanted to believe that," she said "but I never could see that it was true. All things in my life have not worked together for good. I thought perhaps it was because I didn't fulfill the second condition. I knew that I loved God, but decided that I must not be among the 'called according to his purpose.' " Her faith has been enriched and her theology corrected by the more ancient Greek text recovered in the Revised Standard Version: "We know that in everything God works for good with those who love him, who are called according to his purpose."

[A copy of the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament is available from the Mennonite Book Concern, Berne, Indiana, Mennonite Book Store, Newton, Kansas or Rosthern Saskatchewan. Prices: $2.00 $3.00 and $5.00 for a cloth, leatheroid or leather binding.]

*Dr. Swaim is Educational Representative, Revised Standard Version of the New Testament, for the International Council of Religious Education. He is also professor of New Testament literature and exegesis, Western Theological Seminary, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

THE READER SAYS

"Every year about this time I come in the same predicament. I want to send a gift for missions, relief, seminary, etc., and don't know the proper address to send to. It seems to me if one little corner of every issue of the Mennonite would contain this valuable information it would pay for itself many times over. I am sending this time to 722 Main, Newton, Kansas. I hope that course will forward to or send each gift to the proper place and mark it down for the year 1948. Attitudes of Youth in Austria

by Bert Smucker, Chicago, Illinois

Nihilism is the philosophy of "nothingism" which has gripped the heart of European youth who bitterly know the fruits of destruction.

It is almost becoming trite to utter the oft-repeated phrase, "European youth is sunk deep in a philosophy of nihilism." This is probably just another way of saying that they have strayed away from God, which after all is pretty much a universal malady of today. Nevertheless the time-worn phrase does have a great deal of truth in it. Nihilism and Godlessness is greater perhaps in Europe simply because there the war was more intense and more terrible. The terrible shock of war with its physical suffering, disruption of training for many years, and destruction or jarring of every institution has left European youth in a daze—many with a deep inward bitterness about life in general. As a natural consequence and reaction, therefore, young people are on a continuous search for beauty and for pleasure. They want to breathe deeply of life while they may, not knowing when another catastrophe may again throw them into a world of pure misery and ugliness.

Many Austrian youth are happy to participate in club work and a variety of recreational activities. However, there still is a tendency for the group to seek out the most capable leader and to let him take over the main organizational responsibilites for an indefinite period of time. Democractic techniques are slow to take hold.

Serious discussion and thought on Christianity is to many Austrian youth considered to be a "damper" to their quest for a good time. For a really effective presentation of Christian ideals it seems to be that work camps are the best medium. It is first of all necessary to have Christian youth in the camp who definitely know what they believe and why they believe it. Secondly, it is also important that persons in key positions in a camp be familiar with the democratic principles upon which a camp is run. These people must have patience and grace to carry them through the many small personality "scraps' which arise. They must realize that their example as American Christians is being closely watched and tested.

Through devotional periods, religious meetings, formal discussions, the many informal discussions at work and at play the Austrian youth has an opportunity to learn anew about the Christian faith. From such close fellowship in the summer months a nucleus of young people should be really challenged to dig deeper into the Christian faith. It is my hope that the MCC will continue to develop the work camp scheme in Europe to even a greater extent. Properly conducted, it is my belief, the most effective missionary work in Europe can be carried out through the work camp pattern.

Official Conference Announcements

The annual meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions will be held in Bloomington, Illinois, February 15 to 18. We solicit the prayers of the members of our Conference in behalf of the annual meeting. There are many weighty problems that need attention and we need the definite guidance of the Holy Spirit.—Howard G. Nyce, Exec. Sec'y.

Beyond Our Own

ALLAHABAD, INDIA.—A conference of Asiatic nations to consider joint action on Indonesia was called recently by the government of India. Thirteen nations have accepted India's invitation—Egypt, Turkey, Syria, Lebanon, Irak, Saudi Arabia, Afghanistan, Iran, Pakistan, Ceylon, Burma, Siam, and China. New Zealand and Australia have also been invited. The only omission—so far unexplained—is the Philippines.

MEMPHIS — Herbert L. Hedman has been commissioned as the first lay missionary in the foreign field by the Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church.

NEW YORK CITY.—There are now 104 ministers for each 100,000 Americans compared with 137 for each 100,000 in 1940 a recent study by the Federal Council of Churches' commission on the ministry indicates. The median age of ministers is 45.8 years, as compared with 44.1 for doctors and 33 for research scientists.

GENEVA.—A disaster relief project to aid Arab refugees in the Middle East was given assent by the committee for the World Council's refugee division at a recent meeting in Geneva in a resolution welcoming the United Nations action to set up this project. The committee decided to urge national Christian relief agendes (e.g., Church World Service in the U. S.) to press their respective governments to make contribution toward the project.

NEW YORK.—A call for 100 American Christian youth to volunteer for reconstruction work in Europe during the summer of 1949 has been issued by the World Council of Churches. Applicants should be over 18 years of age and prepared to meet either personally or through a church or student group, total expenses of $600 or more. A working knowledge of either French or German is desirable.

NEW YORK.—Food, clothing, medical and religious supplies evaluated at $12,280,000 was shipped by Church World Service to 40 countries in Europe, Asia and Africa during 1948. Shipment of 37,252,655 pounds of vital supplies to help sustain war-ravaged and under-privileged people was made possible by contributions of goods and cash not only from denominational organizations and individuals but also other relief organizations. The shipments included 65 pre-fabricated churches, mission homes, and schools, sent to Japan.

True religion is a burning passion, not a dull habit!

JESUS CHRIST, THE FOUNDER OR CHRISTIANITY, was a young man who appealed to young men. Whenever the Church forgets that fact it will invariably lose its vitality. Jesus geared his program to the circle of twelve young men about Him with the confidence that if He could win them, He could win the world! And He did! It is true, of course, that he neither ignored the children nor the aged; but there is no question at all concerning which group he concentrated upon. Neither is there any question but what he concentrated upon the most difficult age-group to reach due to the fact that while young people by nature are adventurous and independent, they still appreciate the kind of counselling that is understanding yet stimulating—never condescending! Has the church ever learned this aspect of Jesus' plan of action? How often has the Christian Church felt responsible to do the very same thing that the Jewish Church tried to do to Jesus—try to keep Him in line, try to force Him into the mold instead of letting him release to the full the power of His redemptive personality. The Church has made Christianity a religion of and for the middle-aged and aged. Consequently the real Pentecostal vitality of the Church has sought impression in other fields of endeavor. In a recent averaging of the ages of ministers in this country it was found that they were averaging forty-five years of age as over against the professions which averaged forty-four and the research scientists which averaged thirty-three. Now while there may be some questions as to the interpretation of these statistics it is obvious where the preponderance of attraction for our best young men is. The Church must put teeth into its oft-repeated platitude that in the young people lies the future of the church. Would it be amiss to go so far as to add in the young people we have not only the future but potentially the very essence of the Church—a vigorous, hopeful redemptive conception of life?—J.J.E.

Peace comes when we give God all the pieces of a broken and contrite heart.

To worship is to get such a good look at God that we cannot stand any more sin in ourselves.

There are only two kinds of people in the end: those who say to God, "Thy will be done," and those to whom God says in the end "Thy will be done."—C. S. Lewis.

The faith that will weather every storm arises out of love and obedient service to God because of what He is rather than because of what we want or wish to become.

BOTH-AND RATHER THAN EITHER-OR is the guiding principle in another area of our church-life that bears particularly upon the ministry of the church to youth. It is possible to become so concerned about missions—and we must have this concern—that we neglect the proper provision for the Christian education and evangelism of our youth. In a recent church bulletin, which the writer observed, under five per cent of the entire disbursments went for Christian education! That is probably the case in many of our churches. Well, it is not difficult to predict the dark future even of a mission-minded church that so sorely neglects the very young from which it hopes to recruit its "ambassadors for Christ." After all, Jesus found it ecessary to give three intensive years of training in the form of a Gospel-laboratory course before he sent them forth at Pentecost to report the glad-tidings. Can we of the Twentieth Century, then, expect to make disciples on a shoestring of effort and contribution?—JJE

"Speaking of Displaced Persons, New Zealand is admitting one thousand persons with the definite provision that they shall be aged people, widows, and orphans who will be of no economic value to the country. Selah!—Taken from The American Friend, January 6, 1949.

WHILE IT IS TRUE THAT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE along with the various conference-members of MCC has suggested that our young men involved in the present Selective Service Act express their conviction as conscientious objectors after registration, it should nevertheless be a matter of sympatetic concern to keep informed as to the experiences of those of our members like Austin Regier, Charles Rickert, and Larry Gara, of the faculty of Bluffton College, whose convictions make them stop this side of registration. In the last analysis the fundamental conviction for both ways of action are the same. If that is true it would seem that every one who holds this conviction should make special effort to keep open to the leadings of the Spirit of God as to the specific action implied in the convicton.—JJE

For Youth's Growth

by J. H. Langenwalter

Jesus was always suggesting growth. He told of growing things and tried to interest people in the growth of things. His parables and His talks with individuals and groups move one with interest because of the changes which He suggested, changes related to growth.

He encouraged growth in people. He called His followers disciples which means learners, people preparing themselves to become disciplined persons. He referred to people as the Children of God, their Father. He looked upon those who were members of the Kingdom of God as a fellowship. He placed spiritual relationships above physical or blood relationships.

All of these were suggestive ways of indicating the possibilities of growth within human beings.

The realm of growth is within. We learn from each other by suggestion, but what we can really use develops within each one of us by a process which we call growth. For that reason we need to study for ourselves in order that we might find the truth that really makes us free.

The following suggestive study may be a guide to the individual to find himself in a larger way by learning to know Jesus as He thought of Himself.

Why did Jesus call Himself "Son of Man"? Reading Mark, Luke, Acts, Matthew, and John thoughtfully will help one to become acquainted with the thought life and the ways of Jesus casually and with an increasing understanding of His meaning to human kind. In this process one will also meet with human problems as they have existed throughout time. This leads to better and more meaningful understanding of the solutions which Jesus has to offer for our problems.

Marking one's Testament and taking notes are helpful. Discussing the things which one has learned with others is stimulating. Careful, thoughtful study builds one gradually until one finds how much is offered to us through these five bits of literature of the early Christian church. These letters now called books were written in a time of great human stress. They offered a wonderful solution to the problems of that time. Whenever in later times of stress and strain they have been used by individuals or groups, they have proved remarkably helpful. Perhaps there has never been a time in which people were in greater danger of meeting life with fears than now. What was good in other days of difficult situations is equally good today. Every one has an opportunity of using the early books of the New Testament for his own development and for his guidance toward the end which God has in mind for them. That is the reason for this suggestive study.

THE READER SAYS . . .

ANOTHER CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR TO COMICS

Dear Editor:

The article in the September issue concerning comics must have stirred a mutual cord in a large number of people who read it. I wonder, however, what are we as Christians doing about it! Are we continuing to allow our children to read them, or perhaps have we acquired the habit of reading them ourselves? Are we willing to take any action to rid America of this trash? Or does it seem proper to us to let our youth absorb such degrading things?

We, as Americans, spend millions of dollars each year to educate our youth, to develop their thinking capacity, to lift them to a higher level of living. And then we allow the children to read these comics in their spare time! It is a sin! To see mothers give their children a stack of them and send them to another part of the house, so they themselves can continue their work or entertainments undisturbed, is certainly a far cry from proper motherhood. Let us, as Mennonite parents, form a pact to pledge ourselves to a God-like viligance over our children's well-being—spirtually and mentally. Let us recognize the fact that our chidren are a great heritage! A great field to be cultivated, watered, and nurtured. We will be repaid by a harvest of God-fearing children, grown into manhood willing to do the will of the Lord.

Pray, parents, pray! Daily see the good that God has implanted in your children. Take time to enjoy fellowship with them. Have fun with them so there is no time or desire left to read the stupid, ugly, vulgar things in comic books. Soon the time of their childhood will be past, and you will be unable to bend the twig when it has become a tree.

Serving Foreign Youth

More foreign students were enrolled at Bethel College in 1947-48 than in any other higher institution of learning in 18 states of the Union, according to the 29th annual report of the Institute of International Education just released from New York. On a percentage basis, according to this report, the number of foreign students at Bethel in proportion to American students, is considerably higher than in most universities in the country regardless of size.

Bethel, with a total enrollment of about 425, had 36 foreign students; the University of Kansas, with an enrollment of about five or six thousand, had 47 foreigners on its campus; and Manhattan State College, with several thousand students, 42 foreigners.

Twenty colleges and universities in Kansas had a total enrollment of 172 foreign students, of whom 36, or approximately 20 per cent, were at Bethel. The combined enrollment of the other schools in Kansas having foreign students was well over 12,000, with 132 foreigners among them, e.g., 1 foreigner for every 100 Americans. On the Bethel campus every 12th student came from abroad.

This puts a heavy responsibility upon the administration, the teachers, and the individual American student at Bethel. They are being charged with a greater task of interpreting America and American ideals than most other schools of the land.

'U' Draft Defier Gets Prison Term

Austin Regier, 25, graduate student in economics at the University of Minnesota, was sentenced to a year and a day in a federal prison today for refusing to register for selective service.

Sentence was passed in Minneapolis federal court by Judge Gunnar H. Nordbye, who took the occasion to expound his views on the stand which Regier had taken.

The university student was arrested Nov. 17 at his rooming house, 1057 Thirteenth avenue SE.

Previously he had written President Truman advising him that he would not register because he objected to "any action in connection with preparing for war or in support of the war machine."

"This defendant takes the position that pacifism should be the policy of our government," Judge Nordbye said. "But, until a system of world security is established on which we can safely rely, we cannot escape the burden of creating and maintaining armed forces sufficient of deter aggression."

The judge pointed out that the "difficulty with Regier's position in regard to registering is that he refuses even to permit the government to accord him the consideration which his religious concepts apparently demand."

Regier declared he is a member of the Mennonite faith which is opposed to war. Reprinted, Minneapolis Star, January 10.

It is reported that Larry Gara, of the faculty of Bluffton College, was arrested for openly advocating non-registration in connection with the present Selective Service Law.

The case of Charles Rickert, non-registrant pre-theological student at Bluffton College is still pending.

EDEN MENNONITE CHURCH ENLARGED

Moundridge — Approximately 10 of the 30 classrooms in the addition to Eden Mennonite church here have been completed to the point where some were used for the first time Sunday.

Work on the ambitous church enlargement project has been in progress several months. Services have been held in the old structure while work was in progress.

Bulk of the labor is being done by members of the congregation. Basement walls have been completed and most the outside walls are enclosed.—In the Hutchinson News-Herald, January 6, 1949

Church-Wide Backing for Missions

Sometime ago a member of the First Mennonite Church, Pretty Prairie, called at the parsonage and said to the pastor, Secretary of the Mission Board, "Dr. Nyce, how much did you say it would cost to put a bathroom in Miss Baerg's mission house in Arizona? I have some money here that belongs to the Lord." The pastor replied, "It is estimated that it will cost about four hundred dollars." The good brother replied, "You write out a check for the amount and I'll sign it." We are grateful to God for such loyal mission supporters.

Sunday morning January 2, one of the teachers of the same Sunday school handed the secretary a check and said, "This is from the 7th and 8th grade classes and we want it to be used for the Mission School in Colombia, South America." The check was for one hundred dollars.

The second Sunday a young woman handed the secretary a check for $33.05 and said, "This is from the 6th grade Sunday school class and we would like it to be used in the Arizona Mission." Another check of $55.37 from the Girls Class No. 2, was also given for mission work in Arizona.

The Young Men's Sunday School Class of this church raised $434.03 during the year to pay for the shingling project of the Oraibi Mission house. While Brother Nussbaum of Berne, Indiana, visited the mission last February, he said that would help to keep the mission house comfortably warm. We do praise God for the many people who are interested in the cause of missions.

Colombian Mission Front

by LaVerne Rutschman

Cachipay, Cundinamarca, Colombia, South America: January 6, 1949. Our work in Colombia is twofold: the home for untainted children of lepers and evangelism in the heavily populated area which surrounds us. Fortunately we live in a politically liberal area where Protestants are tolerated if not solicited. Since my primary responsibilty is that of evangelism in the area in which we live, I shall give some idea of what faces us.

Here in Cachipay interest is small. We have a great many friends, but to become so clearly identified with the evangelicals as to attend their services is to them too great a social sacrifice. There are, of course, encouraging exceptions. Indifference describes most aptly the attitude of many.

In June Miss Bachert moved to Anolaima, a neighboring village. Here the situation is similar although a faithful group of interested men and women as well as children attend the Sunday evening evangelistic meetings. Among them is the man who holds the chief political position in this area. A group from the the mission usually attends and I am responsible for the evening message. Miss Bachert has carried on a very effective program of personal work which has been well rewarded.

For the Gospel—a Seedbed

By far the most encouraging meetings are those held in a farm house (rather two farm houses, alternating from week to week) near La Esperanza, another village some seven miles to the south of Cachipay. A lone believer heard of our Mission, visited us, and arranged for meetings in his brother's house. For several months meetings were held there only once in two weeks but now we go every Sunday. Many are illiterate, humble country folk, yet in their lives the Gospel is finding a seed-bed. Desipte the ever-present language barrier these people listen readily. Some 16 have made a confession of faith. Were it possible to spare a missionary couple to live among these people, open a school for their many children, teach their illiterate, I have no doubt that the effect would be of far-reaching value for the Kingdom of God.

Missionary Circuit-Rider

In order to be able to increase the effectiveness of our work in rural areas, we have purchased a horse with money from special contributions. The trip by horse to La Esperanza takes about two hours each way due to the mountainous character of the terrain. The car can be driven within a mile or so to the farm houses.

Opportunity Unlimited!

As to schools, hardly a day passes without some anxious parent asking us to take his children. The number of children who would attend, if school facilities were available, could doubtless be reckoned n the hundreds. The main difficulty connected with uch a program is lack of teachers. Perhaps missionaries, although contrary to the general custom, could make a greater long-range contribution to the cause of Christ in Latin-America were they to open such schools and teach themselves.

A Young Missionary's First Year

For a few weeks following our arrival here we spent considerable time each morning in private language study. In the afternoons Eduardo Quinones, a young convert, and I did rural visitation work.

According to the accepted plan for Colombian missionaries, one full year is to be spent in formal language study in the Medellin center. However, due to an allergic condition which made concentrated study quite impossible for Harriet, we, with the consent of the other missionaries, came to Cachipay on May 11 instead of September as originally planned.

We cannot say that we have mastered Spanish. But as time passes it becomes increasingly easy to carry on a conversation as well as prepare messages for our three weekly preaching points.

During May, June, and July, in company with Eduardo Quinones, I usually spent several afternoins

—Harmon

Our South American Neighbors

each week in visitation, both in the town and rural areas. We distributed literature, at times played gospel records, taught illiterates, etc.

In July we became the parents of a baby boy. His coming and care have, of course, demanded most of Harriet's time.

In August we rented a house in Cachipay, the garage of which serves as a meeting place. Here we have two meetings each week. The Saturday evening meetings vary in the type of program. For it we usually utilize visiual aids in the form of slides. Sunday mornings the children from the Mission come in for Sunday school. This is taught by Gerald Stucky. Attendance at these meetings varies, at times the room is full but other times the group of listeners is very small.

English—Point of Contact

During the last few weeks of the school term I relieved Rev. Gerald Stucky of certain of his teaching responsibilities at the mission. Here in Cachipay, as a point of contact, Harriet and I teach English to a group each Monday evening. Thus far efforts to have weekly hour of Bible study have met with little response. Despite numerous efforts we have been able to do little about their problem, due to lack of interest on the part of the illiterates. We hope, however, to approach this with more success in the year that lies ahead. A Christian without his Bible is an anomaly.

It would be false to insist that we are satisfied with the accomplishments of the past year. We are grateful, indeed, for what God has done. But we need Him, so that each year can be worth more than the one that has passed.

Confidence for a Big Task

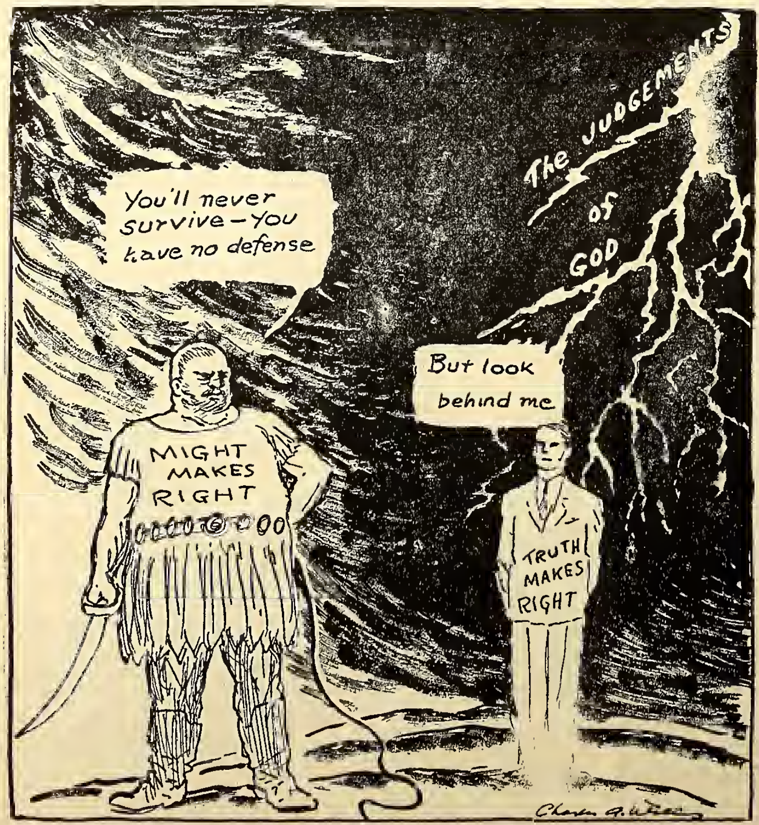
A small boy appeared at the door with a huge basket of soap. "Please, will you buy a cake? I am raising five thousand dollars for our new church?"

"But you are not raising it alone, are you?" inquired the housewife.

"No, God is helping us—and Jerry took the the other side of the street."

There are several things we can learn from this little lad peddling his soap. First, he had the courage to tackle what could easily have seemed to him an overwhelming task. Five thousand dollars and a small boy!—what an absurd disproportion, we think. But there is something fine and ennobling in getting under a heavy load and in doing a big work. The ant has served as an object lesson for many a generation. No, the disproportion between the size of the task and the size of the tackle is of little consequence if he who works on it is armed with an unquenchable confidence, enthusiasm and faith in his task.

Secondly, the boy was bound to succeed because he knew the right method. He couldn't garner in the whole of $5,000 but he could see the price of a bar of soap! How often we are so overwhelmed by the immensity of the problems that face us that we become too paralyzed to meet them. We do not see our way through to the end, so we do not bother to walk the few steps ahead that are open to us. We suddenly feel very small, very humble, very inadequate. But to solve one problem at a time with God—and with Jerry on the other side of the street—that is the confidence that moves mountains.



THE GREATEST DEFENSE

By Charles A. Wells

How many centuries of observation must man have before he realizes that strength based on physical might is in the end — weakness. How many political and economic empires must we see rise and fall before we discover that the only enduring power we can build upon is the power of truth and justice. Many men have been laughed at, mocked and tortured because they would not be a part of the crumbling, sordid systems of "might makes right." They seemingly stood alone and helpless. But they were not alone and they far from helpless. Human progress has not been made by guns, brass, braid and banners, as necessary as these have sometimes been in defense. Progress has been made by the brave and lonely who stood for truth when it was unpopular. But they stood with a strange and serene strength, for behind them was the lightning of God's mighty judgments.

Should My Church Have a Bible School This Summer?

by Paul Shelly

A little early to think of summer! No, many ministers, Sunday school superintendents, and parents, are already making plans for next summer. The question of having a Summer Bilbe school in your church should be given serious consideration. I would like to suggest six reason why every church should have a summer Bible school.

1. The church should make use of every opportunity for teaching.—In Matthew 28:19-20 we read: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." We know that our children go to public school from eight to ten months in the year for thirty hours a week to learn reading, writing, arithmetic, history, etc. The Sunday school has them in a class situation for about thirty minutes on Sunday mornings. We should also be aware of all of the forces at work in our world to influence the minds and hearts of our children. One-half an hour a week for teaching our Christian faith is not enough! It is true that there are added activities in some of our churches. I am convinced, though, that the church must make use of every opportunity that God gives it to present the claims of the Gospel to our children.

2. The longer sessions are advantageous.—Most of the Summer Bible Schools are conducted for two-and-a-half to three hours each morning. This is helpful for a number of reasons. It gives the teacher the opportunity to cover the work much more thoroughly than in the regular Sunday morning sessions.

Then, too, the program is varied on each morning in the Summer Bible School including worship, the Bible lesson, expressional work, play, music, and a missionary story. This means that through all of these activities the teacher can learn to know the child much better than simply in a class. The child at work and at play provides a very good opportunity to learn to know him personally. This varied program is always enjoyed by the child and gives him a new appreciation for the Sunday school and the total church.

3. The consecutive sessions help to intensify the interest of the children.—One of the big problems of the Sunday school as an effective instrument to teach is that it is held only once a week. A child forgets so much within the week so that it is extremely difficult to keep his interest and relate the material to the previous Sunday's lesson. During Summer Bible School there is the opportunity to build up the interest and to relate each day's lesson to the one of the previous day and to the series as a whole. It is for this reason that much more can be taught during a Summer Bible School session than in the same number of hours spread over a much longer period.

4. Summer Bible School gives the opportunity for the church to use the total time for the child.—During the winter months the school dominates much of the time of the child. This is true of children of all ages but becomes more and more true when the child is in junior high school. The program of the church too often is given the time that is left over. This is harmful from two approaches. On the one hand, it is difficult to do effective teaching if the pupils have this attitude. In the second place, since the church receives so little of his time, the pupil may get the idea that the public school is more important than the church.

In the Summer Bible School this is reversed! The church for at least a two-weeks period has the supreme place in the life of the child. His mornings are taken up at the school itself. All of us who have taught Summer Bible School know that not only are the mornings occupied, but many times the afternoons and evenings are also taken up partially by Bible school activities. The children sing songs and hymns they have learned. They look for various pictures and other things of interest for their notebooks. They are busy with their memory work. For these weeks at least Christ and the Church are given the place that rightfully should be given them at all times.

5. Summer Bible School provides an opportunity to reach those who do not attend any Sunday school. There is a large number of children in every community who do not attend any Sunday school. It is far easier to get new children to come to summer Bible school than it is to get them to come to Sunday school. The attitude of the child on Sundays is largely determined by the attitude of the parents. Many of the children are very glad to have something to do during at least a few weeks of vacation time and invariably enjoy the summer Bible school. In many cases this experience has introduced them to the Sunday school, and later they have accepted Jesus Christ as their Savior, and then went forth to serve Him.

6. New material is available for Summer Bible Schools. The Old Mennonites introduced their new curriculum for summer Bible schools last summer. This summer we are introducing three units: Grades III, V, and VII which are adaptations of the Old Mennonite material. More complete information on this will be available shortly and will be sent to all of the Sunday schools. If you want to be included on the mailing list send in your name and address to. Mennonite Publication Office, 722 Main St., Newton, Kansas.

In many cases part of our problem in Christian education has been that we have not had material that is comparable to that which the children have in the public school. This NEW SUMMER BIBLE SCHOOL SERIES provides a workbook for each child, which is similar to that which he has in school. It also provides the teacher with a book that is also equal to that which is provided in the public school.

"If Each Congregation . . ."

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA The North American Mennonites are confronted with a large task of Christian mutual aid. For the next year this task may be divided into four parts: the necessity of seeing through the job rehabilitating those 5,499 brethren who in the past two years were assisted to Paraguay and Uruaguay; the urgent need for providing a continuous program for spiritual ministry and Christian nurture; there are still 8,000 Mennonites in Europe looking for a new home, half of them Russian and half German background; and provisions for those refugees who can come to the United States.

Large Amounts Now!

The Mennonites in Paraguay are not rehabilitated just because they are in a new land where they can enjoy freedom. Because of the extreme scarcity of materials, the high cost of obtaining them, the impoverished condition of the refugees, plus the fact that so large a number of refugees have come in so short a time, it is very necessary that a very large amount of material aid be brought in from the outside. The sooner we can help them establish basic industries, the sooner will they become self-supporting.

" . . . hand in hand . . ."

It is highly important to provide strong sympathetic and understanding spiritual leadership to a generation of uprooted, robbed, and abused people who have been denied normal private and public worship experience. Spiritual and material aid must go hand in hand.

" . . . Sigh and Ask . . ."

The fact that there are still 8,000 Mennonite refugees in Europe looking for new homes after nearly 10,000 have been moved in the last two years, may cause one to sigh and ask whether we can do any more. However, two years ago it would have seemed quite impossible to move 10,000 brethren in two years time. Whether the additional 8,000 will need to be moved this year is not yet clear, but if such should be the case certainly the Lord will show the way it can and should be done.

The Problem Strikes Home!

The people in our congregations have already expressed their willingness to open their homes and provide work for such as are immediately ready to enter the United States. Additional homes will be needed as the full migration of displaced persons gets under way. If each congregation on the average assumes responsibility for one refugee family, the problem will be made much easier to solve. (From the report of J. Winfield Fretz, chairman of the Mennonite Aid Section)

Hungary Relief Unit Closes

Due to certain governmental restrictions in Hungary, it has become impossible to distribute our relief goods according to the policies which have been followed and which are essential to relief "In the Name of Christ." It has therefore been decided to close this unit, transferring the workers to other areas of Europe.

Relief Worker Personnel

On January 10, Boyd and Welma (Graber) Nelson and Ralph Gunden returned from Europe.

Carol Schertz of Washington, Illinois sailed on January 13 for Germany. B. W. Vogt of Falfurias, Texas left on January 10 for Uruguay where he will assume directorship of the refugee resettlement program, succeeding Herman J. Andres.

Cornelius J. Dyck of Rosthern, Sask. and Orie O. Miller of Akron, Pa., left on January 12 for South America. Brother Dyck, who already served for a number of years in the relief and refugee program in Europe, will begin his service as director of the MCC program in South America. Brother Miller will spend a short period in the Mennonite colonies in Brazil, Paraguay, and Uruguay helping to lay plans for the continuing refugee resettlement program.

Service in Europe

Espelkamp in North Central Germany is gradually becoming known as the base of continuing Voluntary Service sponsored by the MCC in Europe. Last summer's two units initiated our Voluntary Service program in Europe This fall a short-term unit was sponsored at Sembach in the French Zone. All of these have been units of about a month in length except Espelkamp. This camp, a former munitions factory, is being converted into a community of church institutions—for juvenile delinquents, orphans, aged, and school for Christian workers. Voluntary Service will provide workers and help in this reconstruction. There will be a continuing staff, a group of longer-term volunteers from America, and short-term volunteers from Germany, Switzerland, Holland and France. Volunteers make their contribution through the physical help in rebuilding Germany and through the personal fellowship with young Europeans who have been given help and hope through our gifts in the Name of Christ, and who hope Christ is the answer for their lives. They come to serve in the units to serve and learn.

YOUNG PEOPLE NOTE!

As we look into the year 1949 which lies before us, we can visualize certain personnel vacancies which will present themselves at the MCC Headquarters. We will be needing secretaries, bookkeepers, and clerical help which would include both switchboard operators and filing clerks. We have immediate need for two secretaries. By June 15 there will be several other openings and in September several more.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLEGE

Mr. Ernest Lichti, former director of music at Freeman College, visited the campus last week-end. He greeted us by giving a short talk and singing a few songs during a chapel period. Mr. Lichti came here from Souderton, Pennsylvania, where he was music director in a church and is going back to California where he plans to attend U. S. C.

Mr. Bill Gering represented Freeman College at a meeting of the Peace groups of the Mennonite affiliated schools and colleges. This meeting was held December 30 at the Mennonite Home Mission in Chicago.

Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz from McPherson, Kansas, was a guest speaker in chapel January 13. She spoke on the importance of making decisions in line with what we believe. As an example of this she related to us the the story of Mr. Austin Regier of Moundridge, Kansas, who was sentenced to one year and one day in prison because his conscience did not allow him to register. Mrs. Regier was along with Mrs. Lohrentz.

The College music, art, and dramatics department will present the operetta "H.M.S. Pinafore," by Gilbert and Sullivan, January 26 and 27 in the College Gymnasium.

Due to blizzard conditions and closed roads many of the out-of-state students had a hard time getting back to school after Christmas vacation—all are back by now.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Rev. Ernest Bohn led the faculty discussion meeting January 14 on the topic of personal and family devotions. Rev. Earl M. Jensen, evangelist conducting the tri-county evangelistic services in this community, was the chapel speaker Wednesday morning, January 12. These meetings are being conducted in the St. John Mennonite church and the latter half of the series will be in the Bluffton High School auditorium. Rev. Harry Yoder spent the week of January 16 in Eastern Pennsylvania in student solicitation work. Dr. J. S. Schultz attended an educational meeting in Columbus, Ohio, January 13. New lighting was installed in the library reading room during the Christmas vacation. The new lights which give more than four times the foot candles of illumination on the tables that the old lights provided, also eliminated shadows. The installation was financed by a gift from Allen Smoker of Goshen, Indiana.

Dr. Jesse Ziegler, of the Bethany Faculty, has begun a series of lectures on "Child Psychology" sponsored by the Seminary Women's Fellowship, conducted at the Seminary home, and continuing two hours each Thursday evening during the next ten to twelve weeks.

Rev. Earl Newton, of the National Holiness Society, presented a message on missionary work on the Mexican border as part of a city-wide campaign conducted by his mission. The speaker was personally acquainted with Dr. Pannabecker and Marvin Dirks in China where he formerly carried on missionary work. He is now located on the border of this country on the Rio Grande River, just across from Mexico.

Melvin and Frances Funk are now doing their field work with the young people at one of the Salvation Army Settlement Houses. Each student at the Seminary is required to have a practical work assignment in some Christian institution.

Plans have been completed for the new course by Dr. Franklin H. Littell, of the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan, starting the third quarter, on March 8. This course will be called "A Seminar in Anabaptist Studies." The area under study is the beginning of the Protestant movement from which the Mennonite church came in the sixteenth century, and Dr. Littell will attempt to analyze the unique contribution of the Anabaptists to the theory of the church and the contribution of these people to later church history. Advance inquiries indicate that other people outside of the Mennonite group will be coming to take this outstanding addition to our curriculum. The school welcomes inquiries from those who would be interested in coming to take this course.

ANNOUNCING THE ANNUAL BETHEL COLLEGE BIBLE LECTURES

Bethel College takes pleasure in announcing its annual week of Bible lectures, March 13-18. The meetings begin on Sunday night, March 13, and continue Monday through Friday with afternoon and evening lectures.

Two outstanding speakers have been secured, Dr. Rockwell C. Smith, professor of Rural Church Administration and Sociology, Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Illinois, and Rev. J. H. Janzen, Waterloo, Ontario, long-time teacher and pastor. Dr. Smith is a keen student of rural life and of the rural church in America and a challenging lecturer in this field. Reverend Janzen is widely known and highly appreciated as a writer, as an able Bible teacher, and inspiring preacher.

The October meeting of the Western District Minister's Conference encouraged its program committee and the college to cooperate in arranging for a three-day study conference for the spring meeting. In response to this recommendation Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday forenoon, March 15-17, have been set aside for this purpose.

Please reserve these dates, March 13-18, on your calendar so that you may be able to participate in the activities of this Bible Week and Minister's Conference. By all means let us remember these meetings earnestly in our prayers.

Jottings

—First Church, Caldwell, Idaho: In November our first Ladies Aid was organized in the church with the women of the church packing and shipping two boxes of clothes. We had a cooked food sale and bazaar in December. The church is now planning to build a new chimney so the basement can be heated.—Mrs. Leonard Schmidt, Corr.

—Calvary Mennonite Church, Barlow, Oregon: Twenty-five people were received into the church during the year 1948. Fourteen were received by baptism, five by letter, and six by reaffirmation of faith. The total membership now is 109. It has more than doubled since 1944 when the church first started in a new field. A New Year's Eve wake party was held at the church from 9:00 p. m. until midnight. The first hour was spent in choir practice, then a social hour with a Bible quiz and refreshments. The last hour was spent in Bible study, worship and prayer.—Mrs. Rachel Learfied, Corr.

—Zion Church, Elbing, Kansas: On December 15 the portable canner was in our community. Members of the church helped in the canning of six hogs and two beeves, totaling 1,155 cans of meat and lard for relief. Rev. Arnold Regier of Winnipeg, spoke at our Sunday morning service on December 26. On January 2 Miss Marie J. Regier, missionary to China, spoke to us about the Chinese church. On the same day her sister Charlotte, a relief worker, gave a brief talk on her experiences in Europe. Miss Leonore Friesen, teacher at Grace Bible Institute, addressed the women of the Sewing Society on December 2,, telling about migrant work.—Dorothea J. Dyck, Corr.

—Bergthal Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas: Rev. W. F. Unruh of Moundridge brought the message of December 26. The annual all-day business meeting was held on December 29. Ralph Buller was elected Sunday School superintendent to follow Max Smith who has served the past 21 years. On January 7 a program and fellowship dinner was held in honor of Rev. J. B. Schmidt's 79th birthday. The morning message was given by Rev. W. F. Unruh and the afternoon program consisted of talks and musical numbers. The Reverend Schmidt has served here for 38 years. The Bethel College octet gave a message in song the evening of January 7. The church has received electricity from the R.E.A. Since January 7.—Mrs. John K. Friesen, Corr.

—Grace Mennonite Church, Enid, Oklahomo: On January 2 Reverend Unruh preached his first sermon since his major operation December 7. The New Year was ushered in by a watch night gathering and program held in the church. Installation of church officers took place on the morning of January 2.—Mrs. Kliewer, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: Consecration services for all teachers and laymen were held on January 9 in the church. At this time the new deacon, Alvin Frey, was installed; the church extends a hearty welcome as he serves in his capacity.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—Deer Creek Mennonite Church, Deer Creek, Oklahoma: Holy communion was observed on December 26 with Rev. Richard Ratzlaff officiating. The cantata "Christmas Bells," directed by Reverend Ratzlaff, was presented December 26 with 35 persons taking part. The cantata was given again at the Medford Mennonite Church on Sunday evening, January 2.—Mrs. Harold Bechtel, Corr.

—Zion Mennonite Church, Donnellson, Iowa: During the holidays two German students presented talks in the church. On December 19 Herman Neff from Regensburg, Germany, who is attending Bluffton College, spoke of his experiences. Albert Galle of Alzey, Germany, a student at Messiah Bible College, Grantham, Pennsylvania, brought the message on December 26. Keith Lowenberg and Marilyn Gaylord were married in the church on December 29. On New Year's Night the girls gospel team from Bluffton College was with us for services.—Mrs. Milton Krebill, Corr.

—Walton Mennonite Church, Walton, Kansas: On Wednesday, January 5, nine men and five women went to Hillsboro where they canned 550 pounds of beef. This makes a total of 266 cans for relief as a part of the contributions from the Walton Mennonite Church. A farewell party was held for Harry Friesen who left for camp on January 11. Friday Miss Mary Becker spoke and showed pictures of the work in South America.—Ella Voth, Corr.

be their first home, and they are as thrilled over these crude huts as if they were spacious mansions. They appreciate most of all a land of freedom where they are free to go and do as they choose without fear from secret police agents and spies.

These, then, are the two classes of young people in Paraguay today. The new refugees are bringing in new ideas, new talents, new enthusiasm which will be very helpful and inspiring to the old colonies. In turn, the experience and conservatism of the old colonies will be a stablizing influence on the new refugees.

What of the Future?

We may ask, "What future is there for Mennonite youth in a country which has so little to offer its settlers?" It is true that Paraguay will never be a wealthy country. Its culture will probably never rise above today's level. Agriculturally, its inhabitants may always be faced with adverse climatic conditions. I believe our Paraguayan Mennonites will always have to work hard for their living. But we young people here in North America can do a great deal to make their lot easier, and that by remembering that we have been greatly blessed, through no merit of our own, and by sharing what we have with those who have been less fortunate than we. Much has already been sent to Paraguay in the line of industrial equipment and machinery, tools, and even clothing. But it is not enough. For years to come, we will need to give our assistance and support to the Paraguayan colonies if they are to become self-sufficient. Especially is this true of the newly organized immigrant settlements. They had to leave Europe practically empty-handed, and have so little with which to begin their new life in a new homeland.

Paraguay, however, has one thing to offer which we must not forget, and for which we must remember to be grateful. That is its open door to our Mennonite people, rich and poor, healthy and sick, crippled and lame as well as the hale and hearty. No other country has been found which would equal this offer of generous hospitality. Paraguay has also admitted these people, granting them military exemption and the right to operate their own schools for the years to come. What, after all, is more important than religious freedom?

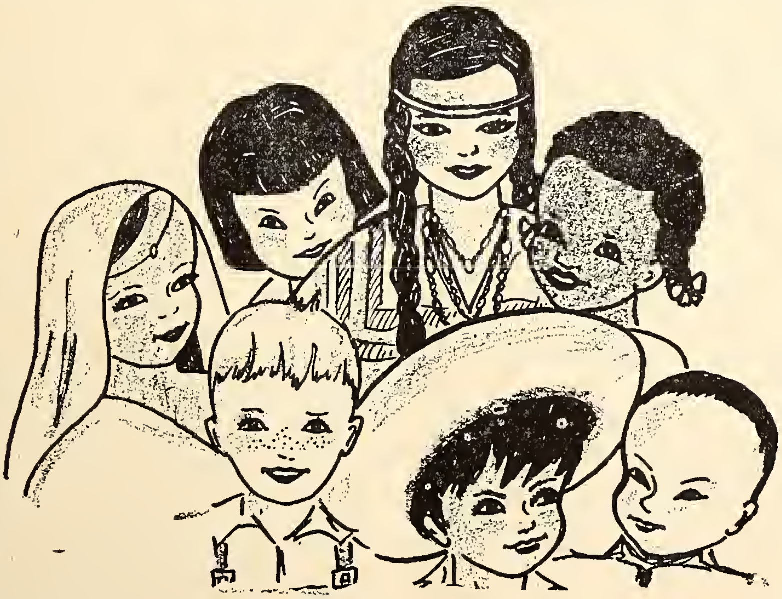
What Are Our Racial Attitudes?

By Wesley Prieb

"No man can drag me so low as to make me hate him." This inscription on the statute of Brooker T. Washington shatters the fallacious idea of white supremacy. Such a noble statement could come only from a suppressed race. It reveals the peculiar nobility and honor of a humiliated race and places an inglorious crown on the suppressor. Engraved in stone it remains as a memorial of the stupidity of white supremacy.

Racial discrimination is the immediate concern of the church and Christian during this Brotherhood month. It is through the avenue of the church that this problem be attacked. Not churches of God but churches of men, of custom, of tradition, of mores have often failed to realize that when members of any racial group cross the threshold of the House of God, he is subject only to the law of God. The church is obligated to go further than hotels, restaurants, social clubs, theaters, governments, and political parties. Can any church be basically Christian that denies fellowship or membership on the ground of color or race? The church sets the pattern for other institutions of society and, therefore, assumes a responsibility in living above color lines.



It is pathetic that this montrostity has gained entrance into the Mennonite Church. Guy F. Hershberger in his book, War, Peace, Nonresistance, states that although in theory Mennonites have been against race-prejudice actual cases reveal that they hestitated to receive those who did not have the Mennonite ancestry; others of non-Mennonite background have lost out in the faith after coming into the fellowship. Prejudice against negroes has been common among Mennonites.

The nonresistant Christian certainly must remain free from these prejudices and attitudes. The very basis of Christian nonresistance implies a love for all races. Departure from nonresistance leads to racial discrimination. A militant state finds dscrimination inevitable. Racial prejudice is fuel for war. The militant church is in the same dilema. Compromise with this satanic race-hating warfare does not reflect Mennonite love for all people.

Something is needed to destroy this poison that is weakening the Church. We cannot allow ourselves to so approve of this system of white supremacy that gives us so many compensations that we are willing to see children of other races hurt daily, humiliated, bruised, and subjected to a psychic brutality. Our complacency allows these things to go on and on, because we are afraid to tackle our own feelings and love for our own skin.

The unique position of a historic peace church lends itself to making a real contribution in facing this problem, Economic, social, and political factors undoubtedly play a large part in every case of race conflict. In the last analysis the problem is moral and spiritual. The church can, if it will, furnish leadership and spiritual motivation for this big task. The Church is a representation of God on earth. However informed many may become, he will continue to need the Gospel that calls him to repentance

Program and Action Suggestions on Race Relations

Ora I. Huston

Do you have a racial problem? Is there one in your heart, church, or community?

Before you answer this, read the followings questions.

Is there a migrant labor group in your territory? Does it include Mexicans, Latin Americans or Orientals? How are the laborers cared for? Do they attend your church?

Are there Jewish businessmen in your shopping center? How does the community look upon them? Do you trade with them readily? Where do they build their friendships? How are their children treated in school?

Are there Orientals in your community? Is there a Chinese laundry or restaurant there? Do Japanese work in your community? Where do these people build their friendships; where do they worship; what are their problems?

Are there any Negroes that live in your city, county or state? How are they treated? What laws, practices and customs set them aside as a separate group?

How does your church look at the racial issue?

How close do other races live to members of your church? How close are the members willing for them to live? What do the children think of Negroes, Japanese and Mexicans? Are members willing for other races to attend their schools, belong to their clubs, work at the same jobs, attend the same Sunday schools, become members of the same church? How many of them know persons of other races? How many of them have friendships with other races? How many would like to have friends of a different race?

How does your community treat members of other races?

Ask your real estate dealer whether he would sell real estate in your community to an Oriental or a Negro. Ask him whether real estate agents can get around the recent Supreme Court decision outlawing restrictive covenants. Call up your local police or county sheriff and ask him what proportion of the crimes committed are by members of another race. Find out what lawyers plead their cases. Are equal sentences given for equal crimes committed by white and black and yellow?

Check with your own hospital and see if they admit patients of other races. If not, find out the nearest hospital that will. Are Jewish and Negro doctors permitted to practice in your hospital? What hospitals will permit them to carry on their profession?

Do local labor unions offer their membership to other races? Do your principal labor-using agencies discriminate? Will your local stores hire without racial discrimination? Are wages the same for white and colored workers? Are the better jobs kept for white Americans?

Are social institutions open for other races to become members? Can they join the local Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., or ministerial associations? Can they eat in your restaurants and sleep in your hotels? Will your barber cut a Negro's hair?

How do minority races in your community feel about the race problem?

Do they feel they are discriminated against in employment? Do the Negroes feel they have equal opportunities for health and sanitation? Do other racial groups feel they secure equal justice in the courts? Find out what minority groups experience in securing housing. Check to see whether members of other races feel they would be welcome in your church. Talk with individual members and leaders of other races and get their feeling and convictions on the race problem.

Check the New Testament to see whether you have a racial problem.

Does God approve of discriminations? Do we look at other races through his eyes? Is his gospel for all? Have we given it to all? Is the soul of a black man in America as valuable as the soul of a black man in Nigeria? Do our practices harmonize with our answer?

Is there a racial problem in our hearts, in our church, in our community, in our state, our Brotherhood or our nation?

If so, let's work at it. Begin now to plan for a Brotherhood Month emphasis in February.

A. Find the facts on race! Know your community! Share your hopes, feelings, attitudes with your group! Determine God's will! Act upon it!

B. Observe Race Relations Sunday, on Feb. 13. Invite a minister from another race to fill the pulpit.

C. Get copies of the report of the President's Commission on Civil Rights for individual reading, group study and community forums. These copies can be secured from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C., for $1.00.

D. Build up your library with a few good books on the race problem. Suggestions are:

Racism a World Issue, by Edmund D. Soper.

The Christian Way in Race Relations, by Wm. S. Nelson.

The Races of Mankind, by Ruth Benedict and Gene Weltfish.

E. Get acquainted with the "most foreign" of another race in your neighborhood or community. Learn to know them as individuals, build a friendship, visit their homes, and have them to visit you.

and to complete submission to God's will. The mind, the heart, and the will of man must be changed. This is the power of Gospel of Christ and the task of the Christian ministry. The Mennonite Church must also realize that we have moral obligations to all men. We must make sure that in our church those of every race and people shall be welcome to full membership and fellowship. Our institutions of education must open their doors to all races. Gestures in this direction have already been made. Colleges have made arrangements for students from various races to enroll. Missions, churches, and schools have been established in communities of Negroes, Mexicans, and Indians. These things must be continued until all traces of racial discrimination are removed from our church and our individual hearts.

Life Is Different Among

Youth in the Paraguay Chaco

Mennonite Colonies

by Mr. and Mrs. Gerhard Buhr, North Newton, Kansas

When we think of the young people of Paraguay, we must now consider two rather distinctive classes: the children of the original Mennonite settlers who came from Russia in 1930 and 1931 and the many young people who came during the past two years with the refugee transports. In a decade or so, these individual differences will undoubtedly have disappeared to a large extent; but today there is a marked contrast in the two groups, resulting from the differences in their experiences during the past twenty years or so.

Having spent approximately two-thirds year in Paraguayan relief service prior to the arrival of the first refugee transport, we first had the opportunity of learning to know the old settlers, to understand the remarkable courage with which they are facing problems and trials which to us Americans seems quite depressing.

A Colony in the Jungle

Upon first viewing the Fernheim Colony in the Paraguayan Chaco Jungle, we would all be impressed with the primitiveness of existence there. The mode of transportation is the horse and buggy; the houses are very simply constructed of mud bricks; the methods of farming are the most elementary, there being few simple machines the soil between the village settlements is uncultivated and covered with wild-growing brush. It is only through hard work, from early until late, day after day, that the Mennonites in Paraguay are able to make a bare living. Having to depend entirely on agriculture for their income, they are constantly struggling against drought, locusts, dust storms or several of these combined. To make living more difficult, they have to transport their products by horse and wagon for 75 miles to the nearest railroad station from where it is sent by rail and boat to the capital city and a market. This means, first of all, that much time is lost in transportation of their products, and the expenses involved decrease the income from their products.

Paraguay Is Home to the Youth

But the young people aren't discouraged or pessimistic. They either came to Paraguay as children, or were born there, and Paraguay is "home" to them. They love the thorny bushes all around them and find great enjoyment in taking walks through the jungle growth, following Indian and cattle paths. They hunt cactus berries and wild flowers, and some of the cactus blossoms are truly beautiful to see. These excursions are usually made on Sundays, for during the week they have little leisure time. Because Paraguay has no real winter, the people work all the year round and don't have the relaxation our farmers enjoy when snow covers the ground and the soil is frozen.

The Way the Youth Look and Dress

In appearance the colony young people have no distinctive features, but you would notice the general blonde color of hair, and the dark brown skin. The sun has played a large part in bleaching the hair of especially the children; and, of course, that powerful tropical sun can transform the lightest-colored skin into a deep brown. It is not at all unattractive. The girls wear their hair in long braids. When working, of course, it is practical to have their braids pinned tightly around their heads, but when the young girls go out on a nice evening, they like to have the braids hanging loosely at their side—very becoming. They don't worry about facial make-up, and are spared the discomforts of permanents.

The young people in the colony dress much as we. They are interested in new-style patterns and greatly enjoy fashion leaflets. And how they would study a copy of the Sears Roebuck catalog! There are some fine seamstresses in the colony, and most girls take a kind of apprenticeship in sewing so to be able to sew clothes for themselves and other members of their families. The girls mostly wear dresses of washable material. Since much of the year is hot, these are coolest and easiest to launder. Women wear no hats. The adolescent boys often wear knee-length trousers which are much cooler.

A Limited but Happy Social Life

The social life of the colony young people is rather limited, to our way of thinking. The slow method of transportation makes visiting from one village to another an hour- or an hour-and-a-half ride. Young people get together for social evenings whenever there is a wedding in the colony, and at church youth gatherings. One of the favorite pastimes of the young people is the informal sing-fest. On such an occasion they seat themselves in a circle, and to the accompaniment of a guitar they sing the old familiar hymns and folk songs. They sing with a spontaneity which is refreshing to hear.

Because the Fernheim colony is so secluded in location, far in the interior of the Parguayan Chaco, the young people have very limited cultural opportunities. Most of the young generation have never been outside the colony although some have gone as far as the "End-Station" which is the railroad station from which the colony products are sent to market by rail. Few have ever seen a mountain, or even a low hill, a river, or a city. The industrial center of the colony is Filadelfia, which consists of three stores, the brick factory, the Industry-works, the slaughterhouse, the cheese factory, central and elementary schools, hospital and about 80 residences. This is the largest city most of the young people have seen.

This more or less sheltered, secluded life has influenced the personality of the young people. We would find them a bit shy and retiring in the midst of stranger to the colony. They are well aware that their life is much simpler and less progressive than life here in North America, and it gives them an apologetic attitude. Yet, one doesn't find them dissatisfied or unhappy. As a whole, I believe they are more contented with their lot than most of us North Americans who have to run here and there to be entertained. The colony young people find pleasure in the simplest things and seem perfectly happy.

Church Strongest Organization in Colony

The church is the strongest organization in the colony, and is responsible, no doubt, for upholding its high moral standards. There are very few young people who don't become church members, and after they are once members they generally take active intest in church affairs and remain devout workers in the same. The choir plays a prominent part in the church service, and seldom sings fewer than six numbers at one service. Many young people are members of the various colony choirs.

Refugee Immigrants Have Different Experience

In contrast to the quiet, peaceful life in the Paraguayan colonies is the background of the new refugee immigrants who arrived during the past two years and who are settling in Paraguay to make their future home there. These people have come through great trial, hardship and suffering such as we can't even imagine. The young people don't know what it means to have freedom of religion, most of them never having been inside a church in Russia. The persecution of the Mennonites in Russia had been going on in sections for many years but after 1935 the real purges began when men and women were banished, without a trial, to hard labor in northern Siberia, being called "enemies of the Communist government." And so families were torn apart, and the children grew up in an atmosphere of fear and violence. Many were eye witnesses to their own parents' violent death at the hands of the Russian police. During the war, when the Germans were forced to retreat, they took the Mennonites with them, and then began many months of flight through great hardship, into Germany. Most of the young boys were drafted into the German army. And so for years these refugees were homeless, wandering here and there in search of lost members of their families, and eventually they landed in UNRRA and MCC displaced persons camps from which they then emigrated to Paraguay.

The restless, difficult background of these persecuted people has left definite marks on their personalities and character. The young people were brought up under the communistic regime, and often reflect the spirit of distrustfulness taught so effectively by the communists. They were told to trust no one—not even father, mother, sister or brother. The religious background of the young people has been varied. In many cases, the mothers must be greatly commended for their spirit and courage in teaching their children religious truths in the home in spite of being strictly forbidden to do so. But even at best, it has been a very meager and interrupted education, and many young people are totally unfamiliar with the Bible stories we learned as small children in the home and in Sunday School. The young people are starved for religious instruction, and there is a desperate need in the newly-settled colonies today for Biblical instruction and for personal spiritual counselling. The code of morals among the refugee young people might seem shockingly low to us, and it is true that values of right and wrong have become somewhat distorted as a result of their years of wandering during which they sometimes had to steal food for their bodies in order to survive.

Refugees Looked Healthy

In spite of their past suffering, most of the new refugee immigrants looked surprisingly healthy when they arrived in Paraguay. They were fed well in the MCC camps and also on the transport ships which brought them from Europe. The clothes they wore were practically all from relief shipments from America. Clothing was distributed on board all transport ships while en route. So the old Mennonite settlers in the colony were rather surprised to see these refugees looking so well often dressed better than they themselves were. The refugee young people are not shy as those of the old colony, but the reason for that is also quite evident. Through their wandering from place to place, they have seen more of the world than most of us ever will see. They were used to seeing new faces, making new friends, and living together in a room full of people with no privacy of any kind.

The new immigrants are an independent people, but are united in their common determination to make a living in Paraguay. They show remarkable courage in attacking the problems of pioneering, women working with men, side by side, in clearing jungle forest land, in building their first crude homes, in planting the crops. It is very strenuous work, and many are working too hard, but their enthusiasm is wonderful to see. For most young people, this will

Announcements

A position as secretary-stenographer is open with the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, 941 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C. This agency is maintained by the Brethren Service Commission and the Mennonite Central Committee. Bookkeeping skill is desired; salary will be arranged. Applicants should apply to the above address.

Beyond Our Own

SHANGHAI, CHINA.—"Thirty-nine students were baptized in the course of the last academic year, and a number of students have already come forward asking for instruction this year," stated one university president in China, who attributes this interest directly to present conditions in China. The students of nine of the thirteen Christian colleges have increasingly been showing a deepening of interest in Christianity and the Christian way of life.

MINNEAPOLIS.—At a recent meeting of the American Lutheran Conference it appeared probable that closer affiliation of around 4,000,000 Lutherans in the United States will be effected. A federation type organization will very likely be formed among the eight church bodies in the National Lutheran Council, which represents about three-fourths of the Lutherans in the U. S.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—The Roman Catholic Church, in order to spread its teaching, schedued for pubication in national magazines beginning in January a series of ads to explain their position.

NEW YORK.—Over 200 church leaders, representing 23 major Protestant home mission boards in United States and Canada, attended the annual meeting of the Home Missions Council of North America, to be held January 11 to 13 at Buck Hill Falls, Pa. Included in the program were field reports on agricultural migrants displaced persons, and southern share-croppers, as well as recommendations for missions work in Alaska and Puerto Rico.

BURMA.—The ruling Buddhist forces in independent Burma have again begun to show their opposition against Christianity. This was evidenced when the University of Rangoon decided not to permit Judson College, the only Christian college in the land, to be re-established.

GERMANY.—General Lucius D. Clay, U. S. Military Governor of Germany, and General Geoffrey Keyes, American Commander in Austria, have requested the start of a campaign to bring food and warm clothing to 3,500 children attending the 280 German Youth Centers, established to reorient young people.

CARE has undertaken two fund-raising campaigns for these children in response to this request, announced Paul Comly French, recently. General Clay said that these CARE packages "would be of real assistance to the United States military government in Germany."

EASTON, PA.—A new monthly high of 268,383 of receipts of relief goods last year at the Easton, Pa., warehouse of Lutheran World Relief was received in November. During the month the federation sent 81 tons of steel bars to Finland where they will be used to reinforce and renovate the concrete in rebuilding of church institutions there.

THIS ISSUE carries the executive secretary's annual report on our giving as a Conference. Generally speaking only two-thirds of the entire proposed budget came in and this in a year of all-time highs in income! The implications of this are clear; it means a cut-back in personnel and effort in this most important task of winning men to Jesus Christ! Are we becoming "weary in well-doing" at the very moment when the fields are "ripe unto the harvest"? Do we think we have given enough and that a return to the status quo automatically implies a decrease in our giving? Our conception of the status quo is a Godless one. For the true Church of Christ there is no status quo; there is either growth in grace or deterioration. And continued growth in grace means continued growth in giving, not cutbacks!—JJE

ONE-TWELFTH of the total contributions to foreign missions were ear-marked. Ear-marked means those funds were not available to the Board in terms of carrying out its planned program for which the budget had been set up. What should increase concern is that even with the ear-marked moneys we fell far short. This should make churches think long before they take up special projects outside of the planned work. This should make churches inquire from the Foreign Mission Board what specific projects within the budget they may take up.—JJE

THE RELIGIOUS BELIEFS of our American people give cause for concern and alarm. The nation-wide survey sponsored by the Ladies Home Journal used opinion-poll methods to get a cross section of what Americans believe. The findings are disturbing. They reveal how far "off the beam" we are. Ninety-five per cent of our people think that they believe in God; but it is what they think of God that is disturbing. About three-fourths of our people regard God as an impersonal abstract intellect. One of the theologians who analyzed the findings of the poll says, "I find little indication of any compulsion to obey God. People apparently do not associate God directly with their own behavior." What else could be expected when people do not think of God as a person? The theologians who analyzed the results of the survey consider pride our greatest sin, and by pride they mean self-sufficiency. People want to live independent of God. They do not want to take God into their "scheme of things." Pride was the devil's downfall. Pride has been the downfall of multitudes of people. Pride always leads to ruin. In refusing to reckon with God and in trying to make himself secure through his own resources alone, man rebels against God. This type of rebellion against God so prevelant in America should cause concern. —WFU

EIGHTY PER CENT OF OUR PEOPLE hold that adherence to the law of love would solve all our problems. And eighty per cent of our people claim that they obey the law of love. Evidently something is wrong. Self-satisfaction and self- righteousness has taken on the proportions of a national malady. Our high opinion of ourselves places us into an unfortunate class of people. God cannot help the self-righteous. People must humble themselves before God can do anything for them. One is reminded of what Jesus says to the Laodicean church in Revelation 3:17, "Thou sayest, I am rich, and have gotten riches, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art the wretched one and miserable and poor and blind and naked." We need to realize that our condition is very difficult. As long as a sick man refuses to believe that he is ill not much can be done for him. How shall we get our American people to realize the danger in which we find ourselves because of our self-righteousness? Should we not take up the message of Jeremiah again, "Return, ye backsliding children, I will heal your backsliding"? —WFU

THERE ARE TWO POSSIBLE REASONS why the Church is not persecuted. Either the world has become so much like the Church or the Church has become like the world. In view of the fact that the world is anything but Godly, the Church should be doing some heartsearching self-examination. For Jesus taught that the servant will suffer no less than the master.—JJE

IN THE CHRISTIAN'S spiritual warfare against the forces of secularism and paganism, he must be on guard against the very force that inhabits that paganism—namely, hatred. For the true Christian huge antagonisms will arise because the Christian by nature must be different. Do we have the resources in terms of a completely consecrated life to be able to love those who hurt us and pray for those who persecute? Only a converted radically Christian life has such resources.—JJE

A Call to Intercession!

The Board of Home Missions has been deeply concerned about the health condition of Rev. Andrew Holliman, Pastor of Grace Chapel, Paint Rock, North Carolina. For some time Rev. Holliman has been under the care of a local doctor. Since there is no serious organic trouble, the doctor has advised a period of complete rest from all responsibilities connected with the mission work. On Wednesday, January 19 Rev. and Mrs. Andrew Holliman and three children, left their home, to go to Oklahoma. Arrangements are made to carry on the work.

The Board of Home Missions desires the prayer interest of all Mission friends, that, if it be the Lord's will, Brother Holliman might in due time be restored to full health and strength.—A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary, Home Mission Board, Quakertown, Pa.

Numbered with the Transgressors

An Eye-Witness Report of the Trial of a Non-Registrant

by Erland Waltner

THE SCENE was Court Room No. 1 in the U. S. District Court Building in Minneapolis, Minnesota. The time was 9:30 a. m. on Monday morning, January 10, 1949. The principal actors were judge Nordbye, a bank robber and his legal counsel, a Mennonite conscientious objector and his legal counsel, and a room full of interested spectators. Among the latter were the Mennonite youth's mother, an aunt, a delegation from the not-too-distant community of Mountain Lake, a number of Twin Cities ministers and some university students.

Bank Robber Sentenced First

The bank robber received his sentence first. Pleading for a lenient sentence, the counsel for the defendant portrayed the domestic financial crisis which had led the youthful criminal into an awkwardly executed crime. The accused, when given an opportunity, had nothing to say for himself but his expression pled for mercy. The judge sentenced him to eight years in federal prison.

The Young Mennonite Next

The young Mennonite received his sentence next. It was the case of the United States vs. Austin Regier. Because it was contrary to his conviction of conscience, Regier had refused to register for the draft though he informed authorities of his action. This had led to his arrest and an earlier trial in December. Now his legal counsel, Chester A. Bruvold, a member of the Minnesota bar and a former Civilian Public Service man, gave the court a brief resume of the defendant's personal and religious background, stressing that his forefathers had left Russia to escape militarism and conscription, and that the young Mennonite's refusal to register was based upon a strong religious conviction. He suggested a probationary sentence, or at least a lenient one.

". . . expected no special concessions . . ."

The defendent was then given an opportunity to speak for himself. Having previously explained his views to the court, his statement now was brief. He thanked the court for the considerate treatment which had been given to him and made it clear that he expected no special concessions to be made in his case.

Probation Only for Impenitent

Judge Nordbye, recognizing the unusual character of the case, felt it expedient to make a rather lengthy preliminary statement before pronouncing the sentence. In this he stressed the privileges which the United States government had granted to conscientious objectors in the present as well as in previous draft laws, referred to the fact that Mennonites had not officially encouraged non-registeration, recognized sympathetically the splendid personal character of the accused who stood before him, but concluded that as a public servant charged with the responsibility of law enforcement he could not do other than pronounce a sentence. He explained that a probationary sentence could only be given to one who was penitent for his transgression of the law, which Regier obviously was not. It would, therefore, have to be "a year and a day in federal prison." If the prisoner should change his views, the judge explained, a commutation of sentence might be considered. As Regier walked back to his seat, witnesses in the court room saw a satisfied and courageous smile on his face.

Handcuffed to a Bank Robber!

For many of the witnesses the most dramatic moment came when the two convicted men were led out of the court room. As they stepped through the doors, the sheriff snapped a pair of handcuffs on one wrist of each man, linking the bank robber and the Mennonite youth together. One was there because he had taken a gun and by violence had attempted to get away with that which belonged to others. The other was there because he had rejected all use of violence, even to the extent of non-registration for this country's first peace-time draft. As they walked down the corridor together, in the face and bearing of the former there was dejection and fear. In the case of the latter there was courage and a victorious spirit.

Witnesses of the above scene differed on the particular issue of non-registration for the draft, but they agreed that they had seen an unusual demonstration of "the courage of conviction" even at the price of being "numbered with the transgressors."

VETERANS IN NEW WARFARE

TOKYO. Studying the Bible in a Nanking jail meant the conversion and the difference between trying to kill Japanese people as a member of the Doolittle bombing mission and trying to convert them to Christ. Rev. Jacob Deshazer recently preached his first sermon in Japan.

This new missionary had spent but a few seconds over Tokyo with Doolittle at his earlier visit, now expected "to stay longer." For forty months he had been a prisoner of the Japanese after having crashed in China. Though sentenced to death he was spared at the time by Emperor Hirohito.

BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA. A theological student and a navy veteran of the World War II. Robert MacInnes was sentenced to prison for refusal to register.

Only One Plow

“Yes, we hope to plant a crop but we must wait until the other five families have used the plow before we can begin.”

Are these the words of a Mennonite farmer in the United States or Canada? Indeed there is among Mennonites a spirit of brotherhood which enables a number of neighbors to share peacefully their respective resources. But scarcely in our land of plenty does a case exist where an essential tool such a plow must be shared by as many as six families. Gripping reports of such needs do come from our brethren in Paraguay and Uruguay. The scarcity of plows is only an example of similar need for many other items.

This need in the Mennonite colonies constitutes a challenge that we as North American brethren participate in their sharing experience by ourselves sparing and sharing what we have. The horse-drawn implements which are found in great abundance in our Mennonite communities, and which have become less essential to us through the change to power farming; these very tools are precisely the tools which will be a priceless asset to the colony farmers. Therefore instead of allowing such tools to stand idle in our barnyards or sheds, or selling them for junk, their value to the South American colonies should be considered. When such items are sold at auctions for practically “a song,” a much-needed relief service can be done by someone willing to purchase, recondition and contribute them to this cause.

“ . . . Not charity, but an investment . . .”

The colonists do not desire charity. They are very thankful for their land of freedom, and willing to work hard to establish themselves. They desire resources with which to work and earn a living, rather than to have someone support them. They do lack equipment with which to work efficiently. Contributions of such equipment therefore are not of the nature of charity but an investment. They will be used over and over to produce food and other necessities. Among the colonists there are numerous craftsmen who are skilled in maintenance of tools; thus any equipment in substantially good condition should serve a useful purpose for a long period of time.

The collection of needed agricultural equipment will be at specific collection centers in the United States and Canada. Individual churches and communities are encouraged to organize local drives for collection and repair of equipment before shipping to the nearest collection center. Farmers will wish to act at once in the collection and repair of equipment in order to have it completed before the spring work begins. It is hoped that all contributions will be received at the collection centers by March 15, 1949.

The Standard — “Worthy of Distribution”

The collection and packing centers are not equipped to do any repairing or painting of the equip-

These Items Are Especially Needed

PLOWS: Walking plows; 1 or 2-way sulky plows; disc plows, sizes up to 3 disc; 2-bottom gang plows; ALL HORSE-DRAWN TYPES AND SIZES NEEDED. Include supply of extra plow shares with each machine. Recondition completely. Tear down and bind all parts together securely.

DISC HARROWS: Horse-drawn disc harrows, all sizes up to 8 ft. widths. Recondition, tear down, pack discs flat together disc-to-disc, bind securely with heavy wire or long bolt, attach remaining parts and packed discs to frame. (A limited number of spike tooth harrows can be used. Spike teeth without frame are especially requested.)

PLANTERS: 1 or 2-row corn and cotton planters. Include all sizes seed plates. Recondition, tear down, bind all parts securely together.

CULTIVATORS: “tooth” or “orchard”; 2-horse walking: 2-horse, 1-row riding, disc or shovel; 2-row riding cultivators. Replace worn discs and shovels, recondition completely, bind all parts together securely. (In most cases, entire machine can be packed within the span of the wheels.)

USED IRON & STEEL: All sizes rod-iron, angle-iron, U-iron (and steel). Special emphasis on heavy bars and rods 1½" x1½" for wagon axles. Pack in bundles and bind with heavy wire.

WAGON PARTS: There is great need for all metal parts of wagons including skeins, tires, sway bars, and other smaller irons. Complete sets of all the iron needed for construction of a wagon would be an excellent contribution. Good wheels should be left intact. Other wood must all be removed. All-steel farm wagons would be welcome contributions.

STUMP PULLERS: Horse-drawn pulley type; horse-drawn drum-and-ratchet type.

SCRAPERS: Recondition and pack into smallest space possible.

FRESNOES: All sizes needed in building road and moving dirt.

SEWING MACHINES: There is need for many treadle-type machines. Good machanics in the colonies will be able to make repairs if spare parts are included. Pack in stout wooden case.

OTHER ITEMS: There is also need for some of the heavier industrial type machines and equipment such as generators, metal turning lathes, wood planing mills, and jointers. Special arrangements with the Akron office to determine the need for such equipment and the praticality of shipping, should be made before contributing any such items. (Smaller hand tools are not being requested in this program, because the appeal a year ago supplied this type of items in sufficient quantity.)

A Summer "In the Name of Christ"

MCC Summer Service Units for 1949

MCC Summer Service units are being planned in areas of need in parts of the United States, Mexico, Canada and Europe. Most of the units will begin the second and third weeks of June. U. S. hospital units will be ten weeks in length, other units eight to twelve weeks. European service units will be four weeks in length, but as part of an eleven-week period.

HOSPITAL SERVICE

Patients of three mental hospitals in Canada and four in the United States will be served by Christian young people through the channel of MCC service units. Canadian units will be located in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario. Possible state locations for U. S. hospital units include New Jersey, Washington, Ohio, Kansas, and the West Coast. Members will work as regular attendants, sharing a "plus" service of Christian love and kindness as they endeavor to make the lives of the least of these more meaningful while cheerfully doing menial, routine tasks "In the Name of Christ."

BOYSTOWN FOR DELINQUENTS

This private home and school in Colorado for boys ages four to seventeen is operated by a pacifist couple who believe Christian love is the best means of rescuing the lives of those potentially delinquent boys and preparing them to live normal, useful lives. Members are "father, mother, and teacher" to boys as they work, worship and play with them each day.

GULFPORT, MISSISSIPPI

Volunteers will supplement one-year workers in serving the colored and white of the community in areas of recreation, family welfare, home repair, and Summer Bible Schools.

CUAUHTEMOC, MEXICO

This unit is primarily one of study and internship, but has a strong secondary service emphasis. In this Mexican city a unit will study Spanish and Mexican culture. The group will also render service to the natives of the surrounding community.

MIGRANT WORK

Conditions among the migrants, who annually follow the harvest from south to north, are among the worst to be found in our country. This summer volunteers will bring a spiritual ministry—particularly counseling, and a recreational and educational program to the children of the colored and white families working near Utica, New York.

EUROPEAN SERVICE UNITS

In three sectors of Germany units will be working on needy and worth-while projects of a repair and reconstruction nature. European and American young people will share work, worship, discussion and recreation as they live and serve together.

ment contributed. The contributions should come completely reconditioned and as nearly ready for export as possible. Painting of equipment is recommended. This program will be carried out "In the Name of Christ" and it is important that contributions be worthy of distribution under such a slogan.

Local churches or communities may wish to provide the cash to move their contributions to South America. If some churches cannot give equipment but wish to assist through cash contributions, such funds can be used to move equipment contributed by others.

Rule for Packing

A rule for packing should be—"Make the smallest package possible." Shipping charges are usually computed on the number of cubic feet contained in the outside dimensions.

The collection centers in the United States are listed as follows:

MCC FOOD WAREHOUSES, BURKHART STATION, LANDISVILLE, PA.

MCC FOOD WAREHOUSE, 314 MAIN STREET, NEWTON, KANSAS

MCC FOOD COLLECTION CENTER, KALONA, IOWA

MCC FOOD COLLECTION CENTER, EUREKA, ILLINOIS

MCC FOOD COLLECTION CENTER, GOSHEN, INDIANA

MCC COLLECTION, REEDLEY, CALIFORNIA

People in Canada will receive instuctions concerning centers directly from their provincial relief committees who will notify their own supporting groups.

All of the collection centers are operated with a comparatively small staff of workers. It is important that packing and repairing be done in the local communities before the equipment is taken to the collection center. Volunteer help from those who live in the communities where the collection centers are located will be much appreciated.

All implements should be put into first-class working condition by the contributor. Only horse-drawn equipment is wanted.

Any further inquiries should be addressed to the Mennonite Central Commitee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

Have we thanked God enough for a Christian home and our Christian heritage? In India there is no word for "home." But in fifty years of teaching, the Christians are gradually changing their thinking and their customs. Such things do not change over night.

Do you know that in India too there is an annual Mennonite Conference where problems are dealt with and programs given? This year they also were meeting in the middle of October.

Giving Reality to Visions

by Helen Hiebert Mueller

Retreat Scene at Camp Wood

Almost twenty-five years ago far-seeing leaders in the Western District Conference arranged for the first retreat for young people in this district. Since that time, with one exception, at least one retreat has been held each year. During the early years retreats were held on the Bethel College campus. Then the desire to get farther away from towns, into a nature environment, caused the shift to Camp Wood, a Y.M.C.A. camp near Elmdale, Kansas, just fifty miles from Newton. Here our young people gathered each summer for more than ten years. Here it was, at the time of the 1944 Young People's Retreat, that to some of the leaders came an awareness of the limitations of going to a rented camp for the very short period of five days and trying during that time to carry out a well-rounded and integrated program of Christian camping.

". . . You will never realize . . ."

The natural question was: "Why not have a camp of our own?" The Camp Wood staff members said, "You will never realize what you can really do for your young people until you have a place of your own where you can develop your program as you see fit." This idea became like leaven in a lump of unfilled dreams. Individuals talked over possibilities for such a project. At the 1945 district C.E. Convention the following resolution was presented and adopted: "Whereas we feel the need for more time for retreats than is allotted to us by Camp Wood, Be it resolved that we authorize the executive committee to investigate the possibilities of acquiring our own retreat grounds; that they set up a fund for this purpose; and that they enter into negotiations if it seems advisable."

". . . no tangible results . . ."

That was the "go" signal, and the committee spent many hours driving many miles to look at available sites. It was tedious work, and for a number of years there were no tangible results. In 1947 Mr. Ed. W. Graber of Pretty Prairie called the attention of the committee to a place on the south fork of the Ninnescah River near Murdock, Kansas. This place had been visited before but had not seemed particularly desirable to those who saw it. After looking it over again and exploring the possibilities more carefully, the group decided that this was what we needed, so the agreement to purchase was entered into with the owner.

". . . vast possibilities . . ."

There is much to be done to develop this farm into a camp. The place has vast possibilities, and there are many who are interested in giving time

"So We Do

by Walter H. Dyck, Exe

"Therefore, being engaged in this service by the mercy of God, we do not lose heart." Thus the Revised Standard Version renders 2 Corinthians 4:1. And thus we regard our aims and accomplishments of the past year. Our calling into this service "by the mercy of God" is beyond question. Our courage depends on our conscious reliance on the Lord of the harvest. Our accomplishments depend on our application of the Word of God to our lives and to the various areas of service: Our harvest, as the Apostle Paul affirms, depends on the liberality with which seed has been sown. We now stop a moment for inventory. Have we been faithful in these assigned tasks?

Our General Conference of The Mennonite Church of N. A. is a voluntary association of congregations bound by the common purpose of sharing in the above areas of service. Although we attempt to set goals, we make no assessments. Through our headquarters office we receive, receipt, and disburse these funds as directed by the various boards and committees of conference.

The accompanying report, admittedly, is only one of many areas of service appealing for the "stewardship dollar" of the individuals in our congregations. It does not cover any local church expense, district-conference-sponsored projects, the support of colleges, academies, or Bible schools, nor gifts to local charity, the Red Cross, hospitals, homes for the aged, orphan homes, or mission enterprizes outside of General or district-conference sponsorship.

Explanations in Order

There are a number of explanations which we feel are needed in order to fairly represent the income of the above groups.

The Board of Emergency Relief, for instance, anticipated a need for nearly $400,000 in cash for the year, most of this to be used for general war sufferer's relief and refugee resettlement. A little over $100,000 came in for general relief and about $80,000 in gifts and loans for refugee resettlement. Over $8,000 came in for CARE packages, and nearly $20,000 was passed through our treasury for wheat or flour for relief. Note, too, that this total received does not include the cash value of wheat, canned goods, CARE, clothing or gifts sent directly to MCC or to Europe or other areas of need. Neither does it include any of the generous relief contributions made by Canadians through their various relief organizations. Totals in relief giving will be given in financial reports for which statistical blanks have just been sent to the pastors.

Foreign missions gifts for the year total almost $240,000 or about $90,000 short of the budget. Several times during the year orders by the board secretary and chairman "scraped the bottom" of the treasury. Besides, about $20,000 of the $240,000 came in "earmarked" for purposes not included in the budget. In other words, actually only $220,000, or 66% could be applied to the $330,000 budget. Our relatively small reserve built up during the war years is being used up. On the basis of the income in this, and a number of other treasuries, this year, we will not be able to expand our work. "With every member in our churches tithing," as Brother P. H. Richert so often used to say, we would be able to advance in all areas. It can be done!

From its beginning the Lord's definite blessing has been upon the Mennonite Biblical Seminary. Our people gave 94% of the budget. In the meantime, however, applications and hence also the need for additional facilities have increased.

". . . plans will have to wait . . ."

For the first time in a number of years, the income of the Home Mission Board fell below the budget figure. The Board of Education budget has been unduly inflated due to the CPS tuition fund deficit which is being carried on its books. The Board of Publication is winning a larger and a deserved place in our church life. Since a little less than one-third of the budget came in, many of the project plans will have to wait. As we have repeatedly emphasized, “Our Mission work is helpless without the printed page.” The work of the Peace Committee has need for a double support. Only one-half of their needs were met. Other smaller, but equally important committees and auxiliary organizations, were given varied votes of encouragement. The fiscal year of the YPU, it should be noted, ends June 30. Opportunity for meeting its budget is still at hand. The General Conference treasury percentage is somewhat inflated. The Potential Maintenance and Improvement Fund of the headquarters, and a number of temporary fund tranfers were included in the total receipts.

at the close of 1948. The graphs at the left attempt to show the areas and the extent of our giving.

We have endeavored to honor the Lord with our substance, and with the first-fruits of our increase.

Demands have been heavy on our giving to the local church, to the district conference, and to other worthy causes, as hospitals, schools, old people's homes, etc.

Our giving to General Conference work, expressed in approximate percentages of 1948 budgets, are:

Emergency Relief	52%
Foreign Missions	72%
Biblical Seminary	94%
Home Missions	81%
Education Board	87%
Publication Board	28%
Gen. Conf. Treasury	99%
Peace Committee	50%
Young People's Union	22%
Mutual Aid Board	88%
Doctrine & Conduct	68%

Gifts during the year totalled about $620,000. The Goal set was nearly $950,000. More detailed explanations concerning the above percentages are being made in accompanying article.

Pensions

A further word of explanation should be given in regard to the Minister's Aid Fund. With the creation of the Pension and Ministers' Aid Committee, a two-fold assignment was given to it. Provision is now being made for younger ministers who can, assisted by their congregations, begin laying up a reserve which will provide a minimum of up to $50 per month at the age 65. We trust that many churches will take steps now to join this plan. Those who are now too old to enter the regular pension plan, and who are in need, will be assisted to the extent that the “Minister's Aid” treasury permits. The Pension and Ministers' Aid Committee would like to consider giving help to a large number in need. A balance of less than $3,500 remains in this fund. It is to be used exclusively “to aid needy ministers or needy widows of ministers.” For some time to come, this fund will need our liberal support.

In this connection, you may ask, “What about the Missionary Pension Fund?” This fund is in the hands of the Board of Trustees. It is a permanent Trust Fund, the interest of which is to be used for the pensioning of missionaries. The Women's Missionary Association has been a steady contributor into this fund. Details of a plan are now being worked out whereby the Pension Plan which is already being used for ministers, may also provide “a guaranteed monthly pension” for missionaries forty-five years of age and under. The source of funds needed for these missionary pension-premiums will need to be determined. Either it will come from our general foreign mission budget, or from some other source. Judging from quite careful study we find that for every five or six dollars given for missionary support on the field, one should be put aside for missionary retirement. Our Missionary Pension Fund will probably be never large enough to provide for retirement needs. It could, however, be used to supplement our Pension Plan, especially for those who have passed the age at which adequate provision can still be made.

These are only a few of our concerns which we must share with you. On the average, for every three dollars which our 1948 Council of Boards saw as definitely needed, ONLY TWO DOLLARS CAME IN. The 1949 Council of Boards hopes to meet February 15-17 at Bloomington, Illinois. Your fervent prayers are requested. Every member of each of the boards, committees, and auxiliary organizations, which will be meeting, are in need of your prayer for guidance, and that God's will may be done by our General Conference in 1949.

Let us remember that “he who sows sparingly will also reap sparingly, and he who sows bountifully will also reap bountifully.” Even the Psalmist knew the promise of harvest. “They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing seed for sowing, shall doubtless come again with joy, bringing his sheaves with him.” (2 Cor. 9:6; Psalm 126: 5-6)

Food the Difference Between

Snowpants and Polo Shirt

by William Keeney

"He became cold quickly, for his body temperature had dropped about one degree. He seemed never to have enough blankets on the bed at night." This account from one of the diaries of the "guinea pigs" at the Minnesota Semistarvation Experiment is from the book MEN AND HUNGER by Getzkow and Bowman. I had read or heard that statement a number of times, but it was only recently that I began to realize a part of the meaning of this to the people here in Germany.

". . . it seemed peculiar . . ."

It has always seemed rather peculiar to us that the people bundle up with clothes as much as they do. Even on a sunny day when we would be comfortable with short sleeved dresses and polo shirts, the German people would have on coats and sweaters. One day in particular I saw a girl about six years old wearing knit, "snow pants" and a winter coat. I had on a polo shirt.

This probably reflects the inadequate diet of the German people over a long period of time. Even though food conditions have improved, the supply of food still is not sufficient. It won't be for at least another year—and probably longer.

". . . a briefcase full of sticks . . ."

With winter here again, this means that the people do not have enough food to maintain a normal body temperature. Food is important, but in the light of the above statement, clothes are also important to the comfort and well-being of the people. Fuel is scarce and expensive. We learn daily of families who cannot buy fuel to heat their dwellings (one cannot call them houses because they usually are not; they are cellars of destroyed buildings, air-raid shelters without windows, and barracks.) They bring home a brief-case full of sticks which they have picked out of the rubble that lies everywhere about them. This is their fuel supply and it must be preserved for cooking.

Since the currency reform, clothes are available for Deutsche Mark but the prices make an adequate wardrobe prohibitive for all except the well-to-do. For example, a coat for a six year old boy costs eighty Deutsche Mark. One DM is worth 30c or $24.00 for such a coat. The young and strong worker earns about 150 DM a month. This allows him $20—$25 for a month to care for a family with food, fuel, other clothing and rent proportionately high. Most people could at least make out if they had something to start with but many are using borrowed furniture, wearing all the clothes they have, and living today on what they earn today.

". . . . one point of hope . . ."

The prospect is not good. The need for clothing—especially warm clothing and blankets is still acute. The relief goods are still flowing into our warehouse, and out to the people. The German people hope that supplies are still flowing into the relief centers in America. For many it is one point of hope in a very dismal looking winter.

A NATURAL DOOR

Yes, we certainly have a place in Germany, and how fortunate we are when we hear that other missionary enterprises are not allowed in Germany. with disdain and disgust. Then we were the ignorant through a natural door, and we have many opportunities at every hand to make a testimony to these people and help them find their way to the Greater Way of Life.—Norma Jost

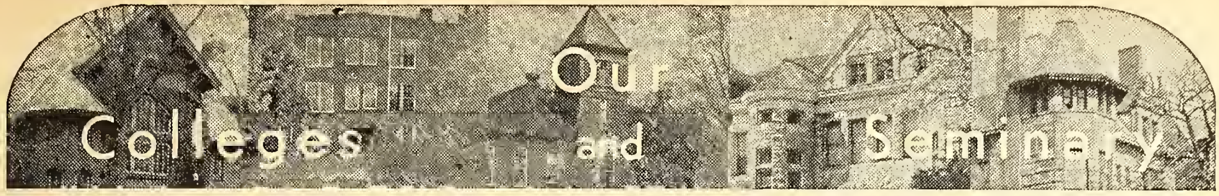
Nothing Short of Miracle

Considerable rejoicing has taken place at the Seminary this week with the announcement that the total gifts for the year of 1948 reached $64,453. This amount comes just a few hundred dollars short of the objective of $65,000 for the seminary year of 1948. Half of this amount was for operating expenses and half for expansion and indebtedness. This Institution is a very young school, having been started in September 1945 by the late Dr. Abraham Warkentin. Therefore, everything had to be puchased in order to give our Conference its third start in thological education. We thank Almighty God for His abundant grace and goodness in giving us this victory at the level of our financial needs. Pres. Pannabecker also pointed out various other areas of growth. Housing space, for example, has been made available; we have twice as much room as we had a year ago. The student body has increased fifty per cent and the total number of people living in this little Mennonite community within the large city has grown from fifty-seven to eighty-nine. During the past year we have started a Sunday school which by now has become a vigorous institution with four classes. We have continued our weekly prayer meetings and our bi-weekly vesper service in the worship life of the seminary community. As we move into the year 1949 the Seminary prays for the continued support and prayers of its people. There is still some indebtedness to be liquidated and the constant need of new equipment as we build solidly for the future. Perhaps the simple statement of our business manager, John T. Neufeld, is typical of many remarks made here. "The progress that has been made in these few years is nothing short of a miracle. We are grateful to God and the church for this."—Reported by Don Smucker.



BLUFFTON COLLEGE

A number of faculty members have been attending state and national education meetings. Professors Lantz and Holtkamp attended a national meeting of music teachers in Chicago during the Christmas vacation. Mrs. Myers attended a meeting of college librarians in Chicago January 21 and 22. Dr. J. S. Schultz attended the annual educational meeting called by the Ohio State Department of Education in Columbus, January 21.

Dr. Howard H. Long, Dean of Administration, Wilberforce State University (negro) and a chorus of eighteen singers from the same school will give a Vesper program in Ramseyer Chapel, February 13.

Laurel A. Dirks, graduate of Bethel College, has been employed to teach mathematics and physics in Bluffton College next year. He is now doing graduate work in Kansas.

Charles Rickert, senior ministerial student, was sentenced to eighteen months in federal prison for non-registration. He called at the registration office on the day he was supposed to register and explained why he could not conscientiously do so. Charles was president of the college Y.M.C.A.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Fourteen Bethel college students were in charge of an all-day Peace program at Tabor Mennonite Church, Newton, on Sunday, Jan. 23.

The group conducted the morning Sunday school classes and the worship service was in charge of Harris Waltner and Leo Miller. In the afternoon classes were held for Sunday school and young people's leaders while Mrs. Henry Buller spoke to an assembly. Eldo Neufeld and Wolfgang Fieguth were the main speakers on the evening program. Music was in charge of Charlene Unruh.

An anthem "Bless Thou the Lord," written by Dr. Walter H. Hohmann of Bethel College, has been published by Hall and McCreary Co., Chicago. Based on Psalm 103, it is written for a cappella choir in eight parts.

The dramatics department of Bethel College presented the junior class in "I Remember Mama" a play written by John Van Druten on Friday evening, Jan. 28. The play was directed by Prof. Wm. T. Wilkoff.

Several debate teams attended the invitational tournament on Jan. 29 sponsored by Ottawa University, Ottawa, Kans.

The Paganini String Quartet presented a special program at chapel on Wednesday morning, Jan. 19. This presentation of music followed the Memorial Hall series concert on Tuesday evening.

The Bethel College basketball team participated in a Newton polio benefit game, Tuesday, Jan. 25, playing Emporia State Teachers' College.

Helga Kemnitzer, exchange student from Germany, and Mrs. Anna Baumgartner left on a tour to the Pacific states on Jan. 27. Miss Kemnitzer is a senior at Bethel College and Mrs. Baumgartner is the college alumni secretary.

Dr. Douglas Steere, director of the American Friends Service committee, of Haverford college, Philadelphia, presented a lecture on Monday, Jan. 17. A meeting was also held in the afternoon for the student body. Dr. Steere is one of America's outstanding pacifists.

Ferdinand Ediger, a junior from Drake, Sask., was ordained to the ministry while he was at his home during Christmas vacation. Mr. Ediger serves as a student minister at the Faith Mennonite Church, Greensburg, Kansas.

Another major recent event was the large reunion of Bethel College alumni held here last Sunday evening. Jacob Goering was general chairman of the program, Orlando Waltner led the devotional service, Marvin Dirks sang several solos, and special remarks were made by Paul Voth, Marie Regier, and Paul Albrecht. Then came the feature address of the evening by Pres. E. G. Kaufman, who was returning from the meeting of Mennonite College presidents at New York City. He gave an extended review of the needs of the college and the current building program, and then gave the philosophy of liberal arts education for Christian college The group of about sixty was the largest Bethel alumni meeting ever held in the city of Chicago.

John T. Neufeld was the Vesper speaker for January 16, and Alvin Franz Brightbill, head of the music department at Bethany, will be the speaker on February 6.

Hanno Klassen preached at the First Mennonite Church of Nappanee, Indiana, January 16. Rollin Moser, one of our students, is pastor of this church which was formerly led by Jacob Enz, now editor of THE MENNONITE and teacher at Bethel College.

Among our recent visitors was Edythe Lovejoy Pierce, of Evanston, Illinois, well known for her poems expressing Christian convictions of non-resistant concerns. Other visitors include Mrs. Rollin Moser and son David, of Nappanee, Indiana, who spent the week here; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dick of Eureka, Illinois, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Sawatzky and son of Bloomfield, Montana.

—Salem Mennonite Church, Dalton, Ohio: Sunday, January 2, Rev. Howard Raid, a member of the Bluffton College faculty brought the morning message. The Women's Missionary Society sent approximately 60 quarts of canned goods to Bluffton College with him. Mr. and Mrs. Delvin Kirchhofer showed a few slides of Brook Lane Farm at the January 2 evening service. Mrs. Hugo Wanner of Navarre, an associate member of our church and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Menno Gerber of this community, met a tragic death in an automobile accident on her way home from Sunday school (with her children) on January 2. Surviving are the children ranging in ages from 5 to 10 years of age, and her husband who was originally from Switzerland. In the absence of a full-time pastor at the church, Rev. A. R. Keiser, a former pastor here, from Greenwich, Ohio, was called to officiate at the funeral. Orlin Frey, representative of the Young People's Union of the Middle District Conference met with our group Sunday evening,, January 9. Rev. William Stauffer and young people from Sugar Creek were our guests and furnished the music of the evening.—Mrs. Ivan L. Badertscher, Corr.

—West Swamp Mennonite Church, Quakertown, Pennsylvania: Rededication services were held recently, marking the completion of an enlargement and renovation program in the church that began in the summer of 1947. An enlargement was added to the front of the building which provides new vestibules on the first and second floors and new stairways at each end of the vestibules. A basement under the enlarged part provides rooms for an oil-burning, hot-water heater. The old part of the building was completely replastered and repainted, and the floors refinished. New pews have been placed in the church auditorium. On the first floor a completely equipped kitchen, a nursery, and rest rooms have been provided. There is also a new lighting system and also Acoustion has been added to use on occasions when needed. An outdoor bulletin board has been erected. A pipe organ, and pulpit furnishings, both installed about 10 years ago, remain an excellent part of the church facilities. The rededication services were in charge of the pastor, Rev. Arthur S. Rosenberger. was represented at the afternoon service by the Rev. J. Herbert Fretz, president, and by the Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander, former pastor at West Swamp. —Mrs. Arthur S. Rosenberger, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Summerfield, Illinois: The Girls' Gospel Team from Bluffton College visited our church on Wednesday evening, December 29 and presented a program of singing and speaking. We are still without a pastor but services are being held regularly each Sunday by Roland Oswald, a senior from the Eden Evangelical and Reformed Seminary in Webster Groves, Missouri, David Habegger, a senior from the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, or by A. S. Bechtel from Summerfield. A New Years service was held here on the morning of January. 1—A. S. Bechtel, Corr.

—Bethany Church, Quakertown, Pennsylvania: On January 9 the rededication services following completion of the renovation and enlargement of the church were held. Taking part in the service were Rev. A. S. Rosenberger, former pastor here who is now serving at the West Swamp church, Rev. George S. Stoneback of Fairfield, Pennsylvania, and William Mohr, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. Music was furnished by a brass quartet, a junior chorus, and singing by the primary chorus. The offering for the building fund amounted to $145.—Mrs. Ed. R. Stoneback, Corr.

—Topeka Church, Topeka, Indiana: Sunday evening, January 2, Samuel Yoder of Goshen who recently returned from doing relief work in Europe for 2½ years, showed slides and told of relief experiences in Holland and Germany. The catechism class, taught by Rev. Esko Loewen, is taking a course on the "Faith of the Christian church" in preparation for church membership. Fifteen young people observed a watch night service New Year's Eve at the parsonage. Games were played and refreshments were served. At midnight a candle-light service of dedication was held ending with the Lord's Prayer.

—Meadows Mennonite Church, Colby, Kansas: The annual church meeting was held on January 2 when Brother Edward Regier was installed as our new deacon. Many persons have not been able to attend church during the last few weeks because of blizzards, bad roads, and an epidemic of mumps.—Mrs. Peter J. Franz, Corr.

—First Church, Paso Robles, California: The new addition to the church building consisting of three Sunday school rooms and folding doors to enlarge the auditorium, are nearly completed. Our annual business meeting was held on January 23.—Mrs. Edwin Schroeder, Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Deep Run, Pennsylvania: A program by Deep Run students was presented in the church on January 2. Topic for the meeting was "Following Christ on the Campus." Three of our members were married over the holidays. They are Ida Charles to Anthony Pousley, Marvin Wasser to Betty Jane Regier (Kansas), and Anna Mae Gross to Arthur Voth (Kansas). Our congregation took charge of a religious radio program conducted by A. C. Rosenberger of the Perkasie-Saucon charge over WBUX. The Reverend Fretz is giving a series of sermons now, entitled "Job lives again."—Corr.

—Deer Creek Church, Deer Creek, Oklahoma: Two church leaders were installed at our annual church meeting on January 9. Otto Reusser is the new deacon and Willard Reusser trustee. Plans were also discussed at this meeting for enlarging our church. Ladies Mission Society met with Mrs. Erhardt Krehbiel on January 6, following the theme on China. Reverend Ratzlaff is planning a family Bible Study group to be held on Wednesday evenings each week.—Corr.

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: Mr. Zimmerman, field secretary of the Northern Bible Society, gave a talk on the work of the Bible Society at services Sunday evening, January 16. Miss Mary Becker presented the program on January-30, telling about the mission field in Colombia, South America.—Ralph Krehbiel, Corr.

Into the Beyond

ELLA RICHERT FRETZ, Bedminster Township, Pennsylvania, housekeeper, member of the Deep Run Church, born October 22, 1862, and died January 13, 1949. She was the last of the fifth generation and lived a quiet life of humble service.

AMANDA L. ROSENBERGER, Allentown, Pennsylvania, home maker, a member of the Allentown Church was born March 13, 1876, and died December 16, 1948.

AMANDA FRETZ, wife of Allen M. Fretz of Unionville, Pennsylvania, a member of the Deep Run Church, was born on September 11, 1864, and died August 29, 1948.

DAVID A. HARMS, a farmer from Bessie, Oklahoma, and a member of the Herold Mennonite Church, was born July 29, 1876, and died December 20, 1948.

ANNA D. SUCKAU, Elberta, Alabama, a missionary to the neglected colored and white people in the south, born on August 14, in Newton, Kansas, died January 12, 1949.

Young People's Union Council Meets

EACH YEAR, in February, a Council meeting is held by the Young People's Union. Representatives from each of the District Young People's organizations, from the colleges, and special committees of the Young People's Union attend the Council meeting. At this meeting the year's events are reviewed, plans are laid for the year ahead, a budget is adopted, there is time for the sharing of experiences, ideas, and inspiration.

Pictured above is last year's Council which met at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago. A similiar group will gather again at the Seminary this year, February 11-12. They will work to make the Young People's Union a more effective agency in the life of youth in the Church.

To make the church-wide youth organization more than a name, to make it a living, vibrant instrument in the life of the Church, a means by which each young churchman may see and feel himself an active, working member in the larger Christian fellowship—to accomplish all that is a difficult task. The concern and prayers of the church, young and old, are needed for the year's Council meeting. May it not be said that our church has neglected its youth in any way.

What about Catholics and Protestants?

by Viva Reedel, Philadelphia, Pa.

HERE is a view of the Catholic church by one who was herself once a Catholic and now is a member of the Mennonite church. She raises an issue we could well discuss. Where are we prejudiced in our attitudes toward Catholics, where are Catholics prejudiced in their attitude toward Protestants? Wherein are differences soundly based and sincerely held? Certainly there is no room for self-righteousness condemnation of another faith—which in weaker moments we tend toward doing. Read this article, think it over, and discuss it with your group. Ed.

I HAVE BEEN ASKED time and again why I object to a speaker downing the Catholic faith.

Well, the reason is—I was one. That is, my father was, although my mother was not. There was constant conflict in our divided home.

I know what it is to rise early in the morning on "holy days" and go to Church and then to school. We were expected to bless ourselves before the various statutes of saints and also when we met the priest on the street.

We didn't have the complete Bible, but such as we were intended to have. It never mattered whether we read that or not, just so we did what we were taught in church and school.

I wish it were possible for Mennonite young people to observe Catholic young people in their school-lives and also their reverence for the church There would be a lesson for our believers to learn—that of praise, gratitude, and reverence to the One who died that we don't have to do anything to merit our salvation. Christ's death and our acceptance of the forgiveness of our sins make our salvation a finished work. All we are to do is to believe and we have eternal life.

Catholicism teaches that you must do, do, and do, to be saved. One of their members told me something I'll never forget.

"If yours is a finished work and you believe it, why then aren't you happier and more content and, above all, more reverent in your services and around your church after services? Although the church is just a building, it is also a place where God has promised to meet His people. So, therefore, you should come to it awed and in a worshiping mood. But I have stood on the corner and listened to those who enter your church door. And I'm made to think and feel that if yours is a finished work, why must your members be so burdened with the problems of this world and talk about how much they must do in order to exist? Where is your faith?"

What questions! What accusations about us who know and feel our love for the Saviour.

Why am I not a Catholic today? Let me tell you. I'm not one because someone had enough of the love of Jesus in him to love me, to work with me, and to teach me by his life, as well as by the Word, and bring me to the foot of the cross. Thus it is I'm not a Catholic today. I just hope I have brought from that faith the reverence that is truly His—the same reverence that is held for the priest—and belief also.

Oh yes, you say, Catholics do violence to their belief also.

They dance all night Saturday, go to five o'clock mass in the morning, and then go home and sleep all day Sunday—and, in all probability dance Sunday evening again! This is true of many Catholics; it was true in our family, for my father played at such dances. While my family knew this was wrong, they also thought that confession and paying forfeits (that's what it amounted to) to redeem oneself were all that was needed.

I grew to love worship and reverence which all Catholics hold so dear. When you feel like talking about some other church, first think—are we Mennonites taking advantage of our privilege—the privilege of being joint heirs with Christ, our High Priest? Second, are we as sincere in our love and devotion to the One who has saved us, as those who do not understand Christ's atonement as we do? Are we talking about our neighbors and friends of other churches just because we want to justify ourselves. If we aren't taking advantage of our blessings, then let us pray with the humble penitent, "God be merciful to me, a sinner." Then when we speak of the Catholic faith it will be done in love; for that is the only way to win Catholics to Protestant Christianity.

Thoughts on Race

OUR AMERICAN ATTITUDES toward the negro is an American form of the caste system so deplored in India. It is a color caste system. It is based on certain attitudes and beliefs expressed thus by Buell Gallagher:

(1) Any white man is "better" than every non-white; therefore,
(2) All contacts between whites and non-whites must in some manner express this differential; and, thus,
(3) The etiquette of caste must always be observed; and, consequently, —Quoted from THE CHALLENGE OF OUR CULTURE, edited by Clarence T. Craig (Harper and Bros).

We look with horror at the evils of the Indian caste system, yet we wink at our own color-caste system. When Lincoln broke slavery, he broke it in its chattel form, but caste slavery continues to exist.

* * * *

THE CAUCASIAN, OR THE WHITE MAN, looks upon himself as being superior, the controller, the ruler of the world. Yet, though he acts like he is in the majority, numerically he is a minority. In a total of over two-billion people in the world, the Caucasion numbers only three-quarters of a billion. He is out-numbered by more than two to one. When the Caucasian—the white man, you and I—talks about "the minority problem" he should talk about himself.

* * * *

YOUR AND MY GREAT-GREAT-GRANDFATHER back in the times when the Roman Empire was the ruler of the world, was the civilized and cultural center of human existence; back in those days, your and my great-great-grandfather were looked upon with disdain and disgust. Then we were the ignorant stupid Huns who had no refined taste or sense of decency. For your and my great-great-grandfather were the wandering tribes of the North, and Germanic peoples. The Romans were cultured and civilized. When we are inclined to look down at our noses at the Japanese, the negroes, the Indians, or the Chinese, it might be well to pause and recall that our people once were uncouth, stupid, ignorant, indecent, and beyond being "civilized."

Bread -- Food for Men

In the Lord's Prayer, bread stands as the symbol of man's need for food. From whence came bread, how did it become human food?

Wheat came down into the valley of the Nile from the highlands of Abyssinia at least five thousand years ago.

We know it came from Abyssinia, because that is where the greatest number of varieties have sprung up within the smallest area, a safe guide to the place of any plant's origin.

We know that it happened five thousand years ago, because grains of wheat were found in a pyramid dating from 3,000 B. C.

When the Nile came down in flood with the seasonal Abyssinian rains between March and September it carried the grains of wheat into Egypt. There it sprang up in fields which were reaped by the ancient Egyptians.

Herodotus, the first of all historians (B.C. 484), says the Egyptians used to mould clay with their hands and dough with their feet.

Bread, not money, was the currency of ancient Egypt. In B.C. 1618, for instance, the yearly pay of a chief priest was nine hundred fine loaves and thirty-six thousand flat, coarse loaves roasted in coals.

These loaves were one-third of the size of our standard loaves, about as thick as your middle finger.

They were all shapes: round, braided like beads, high and conical like Mexican hats, or elongated like French rolls and sprinkled with seeds.

The Jews learned how to bake bread when they were subjects of Egypt. When they made their hurried exodus under Moses into Palestine they had no time to leaven the bread before they went.

"And they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened, because they were thrust out of Egypt and could not tarry."

In commemoration of this the strict Jew still eats unleavened bread at the Feast of the Passover, which commemorates the exodus from Egypt.

But the Jews were not the only people who learned the value of wheat bread from the Egyptians.

Julius Caesar invaded their country at the head of a Roman army in B.C. 47 (eight years after the first invasion of Britain), and from Egypt the wheat loaf was gradually introduced all over the Roman Empire.

So today you will find that the countries where wheat bread is the staple food are just those which were once subject to imperial Rome.

Her frontier stopped at the Rhine and the borders of Scotland.

So the Germans, never part of the Roman Empire, still eat rye bread, and the Scots, who lay just north of it, stick to oat cakes.

"Oats," Dr. Johnson once said, "are a food used in England for horses and in Scotland for men!"

"And where," commented a Scots friend, "do you find better horses or better men?"

Actually, there is nothing to choose between the nutritive value of oats and rye and wheat.

Wheat is just more agreeable to the sensitive palate, and produces a whiter bread.

The Romans, however, had Dr. Johnson's prejudices. When the Emperor Diocletian established controlled prices (340 A.D), he listed oats as fodder for animals, and St. Jerome (400 A.D.), who first translated the Bible into Latin, says that only animals eat oats.

PLEASE mention both OLD and NEW address when WRITING

Their prejudice, rooted in two thousand years of history, is unlikely to be overcome in 1949.

Wheat bread was the staple food of Roman city populations.

The imperial capital was kept quiet by its rulers with free gifts of bread and shows, the "bread and circuses" which supported so many people in idleness till the old Roman stock was corrupted and the Roman Empire, dependent on foreign mercenaries, collapsed before the invasion of the warrior Germans.

But the new peoples who settled its territories were captured by the civilization they had overthrown.

Like the Russians in contemporary Europe, they were dazzled by the high standard of living and the comforts that they found.

They determined to give up the old life of fighting, wandering, and hunting.

But the basis of their new settled existence must be the power to produce food where they were, instead of roaming away to hunt it somewhere else, like the present-day Lapps, who always have to follow the reindeer.

So they had to learn how to raise bread and eat bread and like bread.

They did learn it.

They learned it from the subject provincials in the Roman Empire. Above all, they learned it from the monks, who were always studying and devising new methods of wheat farming in their leisured and cloistered communities.

Thirteenth-century France lists twenty varieties of wheat bread: court bread, pope's bread, knight's bread, squire's bread, lackey's bread, and so on.

It was baked into loaves shaped like lutes and loaves shaped like lyres. At marriage feasts there were loaves like linked rings.

But the common people's bread was shaped, as in ancient Rome, in spheres and balls (boules). So a baker in France is still called boulanger, though French loaves are now long and pointed.

When the tide of Turkish invasion was halted at the walls of Vienna by an army of Austrians and Poles commanded by John Sobieski in 1683, the citizens celebrated their deliverance with a great breakfast where all the loaves were baked in the form of crescents, the emblem of the defeated Turkish Empire.

This crescent loaf is the only fancy form that has persisted all over Europe and the United States.

All other fancy and ornamental loaves vanished after the greatest European upheaval since the breakup of the Roman Empire—the French Revolution. Bread was at the bottom of both break-ups.

After the wars of the eighteenth century the fields of France lay fallow, and the people had no bread.

Queen Marie Antoinette is supposed to have asked why they did not eat cake (in fact, she never did). But the chief minister, Turgot, did suggest that they should eat potatoes, which seemed to the eighteenth-century Frenchman like a suggestion that he should eat grass.

Bread brought down Napoleon, too. Hard pressed by Britain's blockade, he went into Russia in 1812 after bread, just as Hitler went in in 1941, under the same pressure, after oil.

Our own story has been shaped by bread, though less violently. —ONWARD—UNITED CHURCH OF CANADA and energy to help in this development. Olin Ediger, Wichita engineer, is donating a survey of the land. Stanley Regier, son of Rev. J. M. Regier of Hillsboro, is giving his services as camp architect. Stanley is studying architecture at the University of Kansas and is already working on plans for the camp dining hall. The Camp Planning Committee hopes that it will be possible to begin building during the spring or summer. Authorization has been given for a Voluntary Service Unit to be located at the site this summer. Such a group should be able to do much to build up the camp.

". . . long-term project . . ."

The committees which have a part in making the plans find again and again that it is impossible to move along as rapidly as they had hoped. There are many things to consider and to weigh carefully, for this is a long-term project, and it is essential that we take the long view. We are availing ourselves of help from other organizations which have had much experience in planning and building camps and have expert advice to give on the subject.

"Is not this the place . . ."

We look at this job of building a camp as a part of Kingdom building. For is not this to be a place where people of all ages are to find spiritual refreshment, food for their souls? Is not this to be a place where young people will catch the vision of the more abundant Life, the vision of Christian service? We would make this a place where the presence of God is felt, of which it can be said, "Surely God is in this place."

"Beginning This Summer"

Plans are under way to hold the 1949 retreats at the camp. During this first summer, small groups of fifty or less campers would be the right number to have at the camp at one time. This will truly be a camping experience for those who wish to avail themselves of it; for it will be out-door living in its simplest form. And there is much to look forward to in this kind of an experience. It has been said that just outside the door God begins to speak to His children through the wonders of His world. This is our Father's world, and there is stored up for us immeasurable spiritual wealth and health if we will go out and claim it.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA. — A new kind of circuit riding for the Methodist Church has been initiated by Comer Woodall, a young theology student at Emory University in Atlanta. Since August he has spent more than 100 hours in the air commuting by plane between his parsonage at Napier Field, Alabama, and the Emory campus in Atlanta.

NEW YORK CITY.—Three-hundred and seventy-nine New York Protestant and Jewish clergymen have signed a petition proclaiming their belief that voluntary euthanasia or "mercy killing" for persons suffering continuous pain from incurable illness, is right. On the other hand the national president of the Lutheran Church—Missouri Synod, J. W. Behnken, has condemned these 379 clergymen saying that this proposal violates all principles of Scripture. COVER

NEW YORK—Exterior view of new storefront church opened in Harlem by four Protestant denominations in cooperation with New York City Mission Society and Union Theological Seminary. Store church, which represents a new concept in Protestant approach to needs of people, is known as East Harlem Protestant Parish. It is an attempt to take church to the people—where they live. Two recent graduates of Union Theological Seminary have been named co-pastors here. Hugh Hostetler, Mennonite seminary student in New York is seen standing in the door welcoming the youngsters.

THE GOSPEL WHICH SAYS that all men are sinners and need the same Christ is the only answer to the problem of race. Where else can be found a sufficiently fundamental faith or insight that can so thoroughly shatter the various social barriers or level the various social strata? But why haven't we a better condition in the world with respect to this problem when we consider how widely the Gospel has been spread. Is it not because we have ignored "Samaria" in Jesus, three-fold commission to take the Gospel to the ends of the earth? This adds up to saying that there has been a gross, inexcusable neglect of home missions. Judging by our actions one would think that Christ had said, "Ye shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem and at the uttermost part of the earth." This is not to decry one cent of money or one ounce of effort spent for foreign missions. It is, however, a serious condition when we send out people to alleviate suffering and bring the light of the Gospel to distant lands and sit complacently in our homes when possibly under the very shadow of our church steeples godless and Christless prejudices are operative. Our foreign missionary program dare not become a means of salving our consciences about the glaring social sins under our very noses! In fact, such a situation only makes the foreign missions task more expensive. For the non-Christian in a foreign land will be very hesitant to accept the Gospel when he hears of our own godless practices. We need ourselves to become converted anew to Christ and become personally effective in alleviating conditions at home by winning the very people who are responsible for such conditions—and these will often be people in high office—winning them to Jesus Christ and His Way.—JJE

THE PERENNIAL PROBLEM in connection with special observances such as Race Relations Sunday is the tendency to isolate one sin, one large area of personal and social maladjustment—to isolate that area so much that it is seen without relationship to the total problem of sin, personal and social and the total answer in terms of the Gospel of Christ. The value of a special observance is unquestionably necessary; let there be no question there! But let us be careful not to let such emphases as race or peace or temperance become our total Gospel. Jesus did not come just to bring harmony among races, or just to bring international understanding, or just to deliver alcoholics. While we cannot think of Christ apart from these individual tasks, yet we must think of them as areas through which the saving grace of Christ may be introduced so that it can penetrate to all areas of sin or maladjustment. Let special observances of this kind, then, become wedges by which the total Gospel is brought to bare on one sin in such a way that it will reveal the total context of that sin in terms of the whole evil nature of man. Thus the individual as a person and in the context of society will be brought face to face with a decision for Christ in one area of life that automatically implies decisions in other areas. The great problem of movements that concentrate on one or the other of the various sins of man is the temptation to bring a part of Christ to a part of sin—a partial answer to a partial problem. The Church of Jesus Christ has always as its mission to bring the total Christ to bear on specific sin in such a way that His light will, in the process extend to the whole sinful nature and save the whole man.—JJE

THE PROBLEM OF RACE RELATIONS is not an invention of "social gospel" preachers of the twentieth century. The Lord Jesus Christ and the Apostle Paul were constantly dealing with it. Race was at the base of the Jewish nationalism which insisted that Jesus could not be the Messiah because He did not institute an earthly kingdom of force. Race is also at the bottom of the problem that Paul grapples with in the epistle to the Galatians. He spoke out vehemently against a group of Jewish Christians who said that Gentiles had to become Jews before they could become Christians just because of certain ingrained ceremonies and rites held sacred by the Jews but set aside by the Messiah. The Church, Jesus' present-day inner circle in the world, is still plagued by these prejudices. In how many of our smaller communities, in a number of which some of our own Mennonites are leaders is it complacently said "we have no race-problem because we have no foreigners in our community." And why don't they? Perhaps in more cases than we think it is because any colored people are foreigners who stopped long enough in those communities were immediately made to feel that they were out of place. We have so thoroughly dodged the issue that we are not even aware of the fact that we are guilty.—JJE

THE KANSAS "WETS" who misquoted Abraham Lincoln and J. Edgar Hoover and won repeal of the state prohibition act by a 422,294-to-358,310 vote (with some 400,000 people failing to vote), have been getting into trouble as a result of their "eager-beaver" tactics. For instance, A. H. Strickland, city license inspector in Kansas City, Kan., had to warn some 300 beer dealers that they were still required to get licenses to purvey the fluid over the counter or in packages. And the Kansas Legal Control council, which had much to do with gaining repeal, drew the fire of editors across the state.

The Emporia Gazette said:

It appears that sales by the drink in glorified, streamlined, chromium cocktail bars and lounges with kidney-shaped tables, open to privileged club members and hotel patrons is what the control council is legging for the hardest. It sounds, from this corner, like a frontpiece for the state hotel association.

"They Found the Church NOT There"

by Hugh Hostetler

Morningside Heights in upper Manhattan, main burrough of New York City, is one of the leading religious, educational, and cultural centers of the world, with Columbia University, Union Theological Seminary, Juillard School of Music, Riverside Church, St. John's Cathedral, and a host of other institutions grouped together atop this rocky knoll. But go to the eastern edge of this ledge, and look downward to the broad expanse of flat ground stretching out to the East River. There, a bare five-minute walk away, lies a jumble of brownstone houses and smoky factories—a seething mass of humanity. The geographical positions are symbolic of the upper and lower extremes which our western culture has produced. Above—Morningside Heights; below—Harlem and East Harlem. Coming down off the "ivory towers" of the former, one enters into an entirely different world—an infinitely darker one to us who are accustomed to "normal living."

. . . most are fire-traps . . .

Let us look more closely at the part of this depressed area known as East Harlem. Not a single apartment house is standard, when measured against newer city building codes. From 35-70 years old, most are fire-traps; have inadequate plumbing and lighting; and are in a general state of disrepair, with little inclination being shown by the owners to remedy the defects.

East Harlem, "Starting Point"

East Harlem has been, and is the "starting point" for successive waves of immigrations over the past sixty years. The first immigrants were Germans, mostly of Jewish origin, and some Russians. Then came waves of Italian immigrations, which occupied the houses left by the Germans as their economic status became more secure, enabling them to move out to the surburbs. Now Puerto Ricans and both West Indies and southern negros are crowding into the area. With each new incoming ethnic group have arisen serious racial conflicts, the older groups deeply resenting the "inferior" peoples moving into their blocks. The area is now predominantly Puerto Rican and negro, with fairly large pockets of Italians, and a few German and Jewish families still holding on.

Four Thousand to One Row of Houses

With time, serious deteriorations in the social and economic picture have taken place. As seen above, East Harlem has become the "cheapest housing area" in the city and thus is attractive to the lowest economic classes of the incoming groups. It therefore is now the most crowded section of an already over-crowded city. For example, about 4,000 people are jammed in the apartment houses facing one city block (100th St. between 1st and 2d. Aves.). One finds two or even three families living in a single three-, flour-, or five-room apartment. If all of us lived as close together, the whole United States' population would fit into an area one-half the size of New York City.

Family Life Impossible

Obviously "normal" family life is impossible. Broken families, single mothers trying to support and care for numerous children, old people living in solitary loneliness—these comprise an overwhelming number of the "homes" in the area.

Educational facilities are woefully inadequate, both in buildings and playgrounds, and in the quality of teaching. The truancy rate is very high. So is the "mortality rate": In one high school, perhaps the best in East Harlem, a recent typical entering class numbered 550, of which 110 graduated. Recreational facilities likewise are very inadequate in-school or out-of-school.

Health Picture Darkest

As may be expected from the housing situation, the health picture is the darkest in the city: The area has the highest V.D., T.B. and infant mortality rates. Complicating the problem is an inadequate trash and garbage disposal service; the amount of refuse in the streets and vacant lots is hard to describe on paper.

The majority of the employed work at unskilled or semi-skilled labor. Their low-paying jobs often have to be supplemented with relief allotments. Since the labor situation among these classes is now growing very tight, unemployment, already higher here than in any other part of the city, is increasing. Relief efforts are spotty and inadequate; in addition many persons in need simply do not know the agencies for aid that do exist.

Seedbed for Communism

With all the adults of the families working when possible in order to "make ends meet," juvenile delinquency is high. Police forces in the area are inadequate, and woefully lacking in understanding the real nature of the problems of the people they deal with. There are no organized social agencies,

The distances between these social injustices and even a partial realization of Christian justice; between their fumbling yet grasping search for the Gospel, and our will and ability to be true instruments of God in bringing it to them; the tension between becoming little more than another social agency, and trying to bring about both a personal commitment to Christ PLUS real Christian works—these distances and tensions make us stand, with the apostle Paul, in "fear and trembling."

such as the Y.M.C.A., at work in one of the most needy districts—between 96th and 103rd Sts. Small wonder then that Vito Marcantonio's Communist-supported American Labor Party, with its block organizations and help for such vital problems as housing, racial discrimination, unemployment and health, has a wide following here.

Where is the Church?

Where is the Protestant Church in this picture of poverty and injustice? Unfortunately it is conspicuous primarily for its absence. There are a few "regular" denominational churches on the outskirts of the area. But these are all tied closely with specific ethnic groups, and hence are in no sense meeting the real needs in this racially-mixed area, for their membership now comes from outside the immediate church community. Furthermore, the programs set up by these churches show a woeful lack of understanding of the basic problems to be dealt with, let alone having the staffs to carry them out.

> "Success?" We dare not speak of it—can never be certain of it. But one thing we can be assured of: we can never speak of ULTIMATE failure if we at least attempt to repay our debt to God and man by bringing all the Gospel to "even the least of these." For, ultimately, God will not allow us to fail.

"One storefront sect per city block"

"Church" in this area generally means one of two things: The Catholic Church, or the store-front Pentecostal groups. Four Catholic parishes attempt to nurture the religious life of its members, who are in the majority in this neighborhood; obviously the task is an impossible one. It should also be remembered that the Catholic church here has largely lost its hold over most of its members, particularly among the Puerto Ricans. Then an average of about one store-front sect church per city block may be found. While providing a certain needed emotional release plus close fellowship, their message is practically all "other-worldly," and do not come to grips with their situation in this life in any sort of practical way.

One of the most discouraging features of the whole Protestant church situation in the area is the insensitivity on the part of both members and workers and the mission boards who support work there to viewing each other's work as part of an over-all strategy. This is easy to understand in part: So far there has been no over-all strategy. Nor can there be as long as mission boards in the spasmodic work they are attempting, and the small, independent churches that spring up choose to go their own ways; and as long as methods suitable to middle-class churches (and thus almost wholly irrevelevant here) are tried. If East Harlem is a condemnation of our culture as a whole, it is even more so of the American Protestant churches; for if "they found the church not there," it is precisely because our churches are sectarian, cater to the middle and upper-classes, and complacently ignore our responsibility for, and in, this ghetto. Our Protestant churches have not seen that if they are to compete successfully with contemporary secular forces and yet go beyond them in East Harlem or anywhere else, they must adopt radically different approaches to contemporary problems.

The EAST HARLEM PROTESTANT PARISH was conceived in the light of the above problems. It is evident that a united Protestant church strategy for the East Harlem area is needed if work there is to be effective; this we are seeking, and attempting to provide. Believing that the institutionalized, denominational church is chiefly a middle-class phenomena, we are trying new techniques to bring the church to these people in a way relevant to their daily existence. A forty-city-block area, bounded by 96th to 104th Sts., Park Avenue to the East River, was chosen as our parish.

The project became an actuality last spring when the Presbyterian, Congregational-Christian, Methodist and Baptist home mission boards provided $10,000. Additional funds have been obtained individually. The Rev. Don Benedict, whose vision is largely responsible for organizing this work, is full-time director; eight more of us work part-time. All of us are either recent graduates of, or are now studying at Union Theological Seminary, and represent six different denominations.

Vacation Bible School—the Spearhead

The work began last summer when a Vacation Bible School was held on 100th St., with an attendance of sixty children off the one block. The store-front facilities of three Pentecostal churches were used. This fall our first store-front church was opened in an old vacant store on 102d St. The church school enrollment soon reached 55, crowding to the limit our 22'x22' room. We require the children who come on Sundays to come also during the week, and vice-versa.

The weekly program for the children consists of church clubs for both girls and boys; a choir; hikes and other recreational trips; and in general providing a "home" for them, giving them advice, counsel, and (the most important) just plain friendship at all hours possible. The group leaders have to originate new techniques constantly for, by and large, these children have never had any group experience; know no family life that is meaningful spiritually; and have no religious background outside of very casual contacts with Catholic sacramentalism or Pentecostal emotionalism.

Love Feasts on Apartment House Basis

Several unique ideas are being tried out in our adult work. The co-ministry is inter-racial, one being caucasian and the other negro, both have equal responsibility for the worship activities. Another innovation is the introduction of the "agape meal" (love feast) on an apartment-house basis. All families in one house were contacted and invited to the meeting held in one of the apartments on a Friday evening. Six of the eight families were represented the first time, and have continued in these weekly meetings.

These "agape meals" have all the elements of a genuine worship service— prayer; Scripture, with exegesis; fellowship around a simple lunch; and then laying plans for a common community action project. This first group has undertaken the cleaning of vacant lots in the neighborhood, the work being done on Saturdays. This has helped to create in them a group unity; a grasp of tasks to do in the wider community; and above all, an intuition that the Gospel is something that is meant for the here-and-now—a message that is social as well as personal in scope. This idea will be tried out in as many houses as we have contacts in, and as time permits its development. For perhaps this is the form "church" will take in this area. It has its roots in good New Testament practice; and it certainly brings the church to the people where they are.

". . . Within the context of the larger spiritual problem . . ."

Space limitations cannot let me begin to tell of the many pastoral opportunities we (especially Don, the full-time worker) have encountered. The Parish office is located in plain view through the windows of the store-front church; and people have learned that a friend is usually there to whom they may turn. Unemployed looking for work; relatives of the sick; tenants facing evictions or other serious housing problems; parents with delinquent children afoul of the law on one hand, and the children themselves on the other; plus others with a seemingly unending array of problems—all come seeking help. Every family group we have encountered has at least one major problem demanding real psychiatric, medical, legal, or economic aid within the context of their larger spiritual problem.

A second store-front is being opened up the first week of January on 100th St.—the most crowded block in the city. This has been preceded by an intensive calling campaign covering the whole block. Other store-fronts will be opened in other blocks as money and personnel become available.

Next—Industrial Chaplaincy and Street Preaching

In addition, we hope to extend the Parish work into fields of industrial chaplaincy; street preaching (the homiletic test for theological students!); increasing, and helping to put content into the Sunday schools of acceptable existing store-front churches in the area; and in other ways ever working to solidify the Protestant witness into united, concrete expressions.

Decision Plus

The problems are enormous; it is no place for easy optimism. As members of the "comfortable middle-class," it is almost impossible for us to feel truly their suffering in terms of hunger, want, and above all the deep inner loneliness that can be felt only by cast-outs. The distances between these social injustices and even a partial realization of Christian justice; between their fumbling yet grasping search for the Gospel, and our will and ability to be true instruments of God in bringing it to them; the tension between becoming little more than another social agency, and trying to bring about both a personal commitment to Christ plus real Christian works—these distances and tensions make us stand, with the apostle Paul, in "fear and trembling." Yet God does not leave alone those who call upon Him. As one member stated it: "We don't have the answers, but the Answer has us."

"Success?" We dare not speak of it—can never be certain of it. But one thing we can be assured of: we can never speak of ultimate failure if we at least attempt to repay our debt to God and man by bringing all the Gospel to "even the least of these." For, ultimately, God will not allow us to fail.

New Conference Service Initiated

Visual Aids Library

Some months ago the Board of Education of the General Conference decided to begin the formation of a visual aids library. Because the one placed in charge of this work had many other things to do, progress has been slow. One set of slides is now ready for use. This is a set of 2x2 Kodochromes on the mission in Colombia, South America. The set consists of forty slides, with commentary prepared by Rev. Gerald Stucky. No decision has as yet been reached by the Board, but it is likely that there will be a small rental charge to cover costs of handling and mailing. Any church group wanting to use the set should write Lloyd L. Ramseyer, Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio for a booking. Only the slides are available for rental. Projector and screen must be procured in each community where the slides are used, but should not be difficult to borrow.

Sets are also in the making on other mission fields, on other conference institutions. A set will be made up showing Mennonite churches in various parts of the world. Notice will be given in The Mennonite when these are ready for use.

HE EXPLAINED IT WELL

I met a man once who explained carefully why it was necessary for him to drink a "little" alcohol. A "toddy" he called it. It was for his stomach's sake, he said.

Then he explained why he needed to smoke. It was to quiet his nerves.

Then he explained why he was not always faithful to his wife. Everybody knows, he said, that a man needs to have a little fun sometimes and a little freedom.

About this time I remembered an old adage: "The way to hell is paved with explanations."

The Unique Ministry of the Mennonite Church

(Editor: The readers of the MENNONITE will be interested in this material that is printed in pamphlet form by the American Mission to Lepers, an organization particularly concerned with the task of dealing with leprosy, which that organization is making available as part of its literature.)

ONE of the most touching and effective ministries of the Mennonites is the care and healing of people with leprosy. It is carried on by two branches of Mennonites in South America and India: by the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America at Cachipay Colombia, S. A. and at Champa, in the Central Provinces, India; and by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (Old Menonites) at Shantipur, also in the Central Provinces, India. A fourth colony in Paraguay near Concepcion will be initiated soon by the Mennonite Central Committee as a project of appreciation for the welcome given Mennonite refugees by the Government of Paraguay during the past two decades.

CACHIPAY

Situated midway between Bogota and the Agua de Dios government leprosy colony, on a fine site for agriculture and other activities, the Mennonite home and school for uninfected children at Cachipay cares for about 20 healthy children of Protestant and non-Catholic patients at the three government leprosy colonies. In answer to a long-felt need, it was opened early in 1947 by the untiring efforts of Rev. Gerald Stucky of the Mennonite Mission of Colombia. Applications for admission to the home far exceed the number that can be cared for at the present time, and enlargement of facilities is an imperative of the near future.

The American Mission to Lepers has accordingly approved a five-year plan to buy land and build a home, with a school and chapel, that will accommodate 100 children, at a cost of $85,000. Meanwhile the Mission provides $4,400 annually toward the daily living of 20 children.

CHAMPA

The colony at Champa is significantly named Bethesda. It was founded in 1902 when two pathetic young men came daily to beg food at the home of Rev. P. A. Penner. Mr. Penner gave them simple huts by the riverside and accepted the responsibility for their support.

From those two huts, by Mr. Penner's patient oversight and faith, has grown one of the largest leprosariums in India. It is a modern village of 575 people, with well-laid-out roads fringed by shrubs and flowers, with 55 brick buildings and the power house — the church — at the center. Since leprosy is not hereditary, healthy children are segregated from early childhood in separate homes. Seventy-two of these are now being trained to become normal members of Indian society in the regular trades and professions. As usual among leprosy patients today, a fair number are yearly discharged as symptom-free — 59 in 1946; 56 in 1947. An outpatient department gives regular treatment to 475 patients for whom complete care is not imperative.

Spiritual work is of equal importance with the physical. Christians among the patients number 475. Vital church life is in the hands of the patients and is voluntarily shared by Christians and non-Christians alike.

Upon Mr. Penner's retirement to America in 1941, the colony fell to the direction of Rev. O. W. Waltner who has in turn been succeeded by Rev. A. E. Jantzen.

Work at Champa, as also at Shantipur, is carried on in collaboration with the American Mission to Lepers, the Mission to Lepers of London, and the Government of India. The share of the two Mennonite boards is the time and service of their missionaries. The share of the Mission to Lepers in its London and American units is approximately $25,000 as well as occasional grants for buildings and other permanent equipment.

SHANTIPUR

Somewhat smaller and a good deal younger than the colony at Champa is the one at Shantipur near Dhamtari. The last number of residents reported was a little over 400, of whom 30 were healthy children. Its facilities include an administration building, a full hospital unit including a women's ward of 40 beds, cottages for women, a quadrangle of cottages and schools for boys, a children's home and dormitories. Sixty acres of agricultural land are divided into plots and farmed by the residents.

Since the retirement of Rev. J. N. Kaufman and Dr. Lillie S. Kaufman in 1948, Rev. R. R. Smucker has been appointed superintendent. Rev. O. P. Ram serves as pastor of the congregation and Dr. J. G. Yoder, with an Indian physican as assistant, serves as medical director.

CONCEPCION

Under negotation for several years by the Mennonite Central Committee of Akron, Pa. and the Ministry of Public Health of the Republic of Paraguay, a Protestant leprosy colony with an eventual capacity of 250 patients is nearing actuality. A tract of land about 6000 hectares in extent has been deeded by the Government of Paraguay for this purpose. The project is in appreciation of the haven afforded numbers of Mennonite refugees from Canada, Russia, and elsewhere who were permitted to settle in the country at a time when no other country was willing to receive them.

Assisting the Mennonite Central Committee in carrying out this aim is the American Mission to Lepers and members of the Disciples Mission at Asuncion whose experience in extending a social and religious ministry at the existing government leprosy colony at Sacupay wll be a great value in launching the new colony.

From Hopi-Land

We here in Hopi-Land have not been missed by the severe cold that has swept across the nation. We have had some sub-zero weather. The coldest here at Oraibi was 10 below and in neighboring villages as low as 20 below. As far as we know no one has been excessively cold in their homes. The homes perhaps have not been as warm as they liked to have them. In general the people are glad for the moisture the Lord has sent.

We have completed three weeks of morning prayer meetings. The Lord has heard the earnest prayers that have ascended to Him and in His own time He will manifest the results of these meetings.

In the Darkest Hour — Light

Often we have been conscious that some of you have upheld us in your earnest prayers. At times the way has seemed dark and uncertain, but in the darkest hour suddenly there comes a flood of light which drives the darkness away. The situations may continue the same but the heart is filled to the brim with praises to our God.

For Your Prayer List

Last summer a young man was killed in a state of intoxication by one in a similar condition. The parents took it very hard but the Lord has spoken earnestly. They have been coming to many of the services but as yet have not made an open confession of the Lord. If you have a prayer list please place them on your list. Their names are Jennie and Horace.

Need More Quilt Patches

The sewing classes held for the women have been well attended. They come to get the quilt patches sent by many of the ladies from the various missionary circles. At these classes a definite gospel message is given. Those who do not come to the other services get the gospel message in this way. Because these classes are so well attended we need many more quilt patches. If we had enough, we believe the men would also like to sew. Many of the men do their own sewing.

We wish to thank every one for the many prayers in behalf of the missionaries. Pray that we may speak boldly as we ought.—Yours in the Master's Service, Rev. and Mrs. Henry A. Kliewer.

operation, the Mennonite Central Committee will contribute about $24,000 and the American Mission to Lepers approximately $40,000 as well as an operating subsidy in the same radio for a five-year period. It is expected that support for the colony will eventually come from the Mennonite colonists in Paraguay.

New Belgian Policy in Congo

NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 28—Belgian Government subsidies, long made available to Catholic mission schools in Belgian Congo, recently have been extended to American Protestant church schools, an announcement from the Africa Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America revealed here today.

Affects 11,000 Schools

The announcement said that legislation passed recently by the Belgian government makes 45 American, English, and Scandinavian foreign mission boards potentially eligible for government school support. The action affects 265 elementary schools, 308 upper grammar schools, 10,727 village and district schools, 56 trade schools, and 99 specialized institutions.

Climax to a 20-year Protest

Hailing the new policy as reflecting "a growing concern and sense of responsibility in international relationships" and the part of the Belgian government, the Rev. Dr. Emory Ross, executive secretary of the Africa Committee, pointed out that the government's action came as a climax to more than 20 years of continued protests by missionaries and educators over the monopoly of state support enjoyed by Catholic mission schools in the Congo.

Now Up to Boards

Despite the successful fight for government subsidies, not all Protestant mission boards here and abroad have reached a final decision on whether to take advantage of government grants, Dr. Ross said. Only 15 missions have thus far been certified as eligible, he said, although others are expected to follow suit.

As a supporter of government grants to education, Dr. Ross said the traditional Protestant American opposition to government subsidies for private education here, did not appear practical in the Belgian Congo.

To Refuse is to Penalize

"Foreign Protestant missions in the Congo," he said, "are working in territory where state aid to private schools is the accepted pattern. In a sense, to refuse state aid is to penalize one's students. The government has no system of general public education and relies entirely on mission schools to fulfill that service."

Dr. Ross pointed out that the policy of state subsidies to private schools had long been customary in British colonial territory.

Details of the System

Under the Belgian subsidy system, a school will receive from $450 to $900 a year for European or American instructors and 90 per cent of the salaries paid to native teachers. In addition, the subsidy will cover about 70 per cent of new building costs and 50 per cent of building costs for board schools. In general, one teacher will be subsidized for every 25 pupils. Part of school maintenance costs, such as text books, also will be met by the government.

In this group are: Marvin Bartel, Burrton, Kansas; Lester Dintaman, Vestaburg, Michigan; Roland Ediger, Buhler, Kansas; Galen Flickner, Moundridge, Kansas; Lawrence Harder, Mountain Lake, Minn.; John Hershberger, Kalona, Iowa; Lee Jr. Hershberger, Elkhart, Indiana; Henry E. Jantzen, Plymouth, Nebraska; LeRoy Nisley, Goshen, Indiana; Alfrieda Regier, Moundridge, Kansas; Elizabeth Regier, Burrton, Kansas; Henry Schrock, Kalona, Iowa; and Pete Yoder, Shipshewana, Indiana.

Howard Goering and Willard Gehring, both of Moundridge, Kansas, left the first part of January for California to help clear the site for the proposed Mennonite mental hospital near Reedley. They are serving a short term there.

Non-relatives to enter Canada

The Canadian government has given a favorable reaction to the immigration of a group of Mennonites of agricultural employment. It is necessary that housing and employment be located for them in Canada, and this will be done through the Provincial committees of the Canadian Board of Mennonite Colonization. The people who will be included in this group must be eligible for assistance under the I.R.O. Thus far most of the Mennonites who entered Canada had relatives living in Canada. Procedures for this non-relative immigration are now being developed in accordance with the Canadian government regulations for the immigration of agricultural workers.

Relief from Drought in Paraguay

Jacob Braun, one of the leaders of Menno Colony in Paraguay who visited the United States and Canada in the early part of 1948 in the interests of the colony, writes that they have recently had good rains, enabling them to plant their crops. There are good prospects for a fair crop if conditions continue favorably. In some of the other Mennonite colonies there still has not been enough rain. The Mennonite Central Committee has had to continue the maintenance of the immigrants in order to supply the needs which have come about because of these unfavorable conditions.

Need for Warm Underwear

One of the items of clothing most urgently needed is underwear. In spite of this fact, the amount of underwear contributed has been very limited. Items given now can still be used to meet the need of this winter. Clothing is very essential in relief, because of the shortage of fuel and adequate housing, which conditions require more warm clothing.

Special Appeal for Children's Shoes

The great need for shoes and stockings has been emphasized constantly by our workers abroad. A special Children's Relief Project is being sponsored by the Mennonite Central Committee in which children in the U.S. and Canada are urged to contribute new and used shoes for children in Europe. Sturdy, warm shoes with closed toes and heels, and in wide widths, are especially desired. Galoshes and rubbers in good condition are also needed.

Since this is a special Children's Relief Project, the gifts of children's shoes and stockings should be sent by APRIL 15 to Children's Projects MCC, Akron, Pennsylvania, or to Children's Projects, MCC, 203 King Street East, Kitchener, Ontario. (Shoes for adults are also needed as before, but contributions of these should continue to be sent through the regular clothing center channels.) A special leaflet, "Shoes and stockings for Europe's Children" is being published and distributed, giving additional detailed information and instructions.

West Coast Mental Hospital Program

Leaflets are available describing the 43-acre fruit ranch which has been purchased for the site of the West Coast Mental Hospital. Building will begin when three-fourths of the necessary funds have been received. Arthur Jost, who is to be administrator of the West Coast Mental Hospital will meanwhile continue to serve various MCC interests on the West Coast, including relief, voluntary service, Mennonite Aid Peace, and Mental Health. He may be contacted at Reedley, California.

Report on Mexico Hospital Work

During the period of April 18 to December 31, 1948, the hospital at Cuauhtemoc, Mexico, under the direction of MCC Voluntary Service workers, served a total of 185 patients, 155 of whom were Mexicans and 30 of whom were from the Mennonite colonies. An average of 6.2 patients have been cared for each day. This represents the only hospital care to which the people of this area have had ready access.

Summer Bible School Workshop

April 2, 1949

Already inquiries have come in asking "When will the Workshop be?" "Will the New Summer Bible School Course be ready for this year?"

We are happy to announce that plans have been made for a Workshop to be held, God willing, on Saturday, April 2 in the Student Union Room of Memorial Hall on the Bethel College campus. Every prospective summer Bible school teacher, every children's worker, and everyone interested in the teaching program of the Church, is welcome to attend this Workshop.

We are just as happy to announce that it is our hope to present at this time the new course for summer Bible schools. The Publishing house at Scottdale has given us their word that by Workshop-date they shall have ready for us also the three adapted courses in our own edition.

Let us pray that this task can be accomplished by them and that God will prepare for each attendant of the Workshop a rich and unforgettable blessing that shall send us forth with renewed inner compulsion to obey the command, "feed my lambs."

In the name of the Workshop committee, Miss Marjorie Ruth, Rev. Waldo Harder, Joanna S. Andres

The control council's suggestion for sales by the drink in hotels, clubs and trains prompted The El Dorado Times to write:

The "wets" now have their foot in the door in Kansas. What they want eventually is to open it wide. We honestly thought they would wait awhile before beginning the process of opening it farther. But here they come already, trying to storm through the gap thus provided them by public approval.

If the legislature listens to the siren song of these "by the drink-ers," it will presently discover a lot of highly disillusioned and irritated folks out over Kansas land.

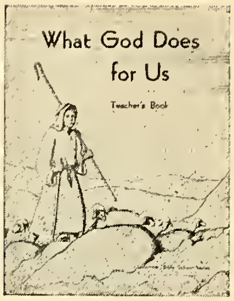
The Emporia Gazette said:

Whether the old laws are still in legal effect or not, the reading of the constitution is that "the open saloon shall be forever barred from the state." Whether the seller in question calls his establishment "Ye Sandwich Shoppe" or "Mike's Place," if intoxicants are being sold by the drink over the counter, it is a saloon.

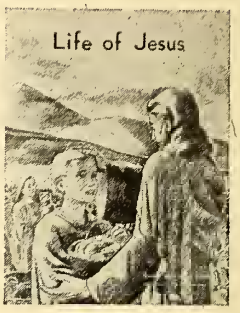
As a saloon it should be proceeded against, primarily because the vast majority of the people of this state don't want saloons.

Additional comment is scarcely necessary. The leopard does not change his spots, and neither does the liquor man, who is for himself—first, last and no matter what happens to anybody else.—Reprinted from the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

"Our Own" Summer Bible School Materials



Grade III
Age 8½—9½



Grade V
Age 10½—11½

WHY SHOULD our General Conference attempt to publish its own materials for its Summer Bible Schools, or even for its Sunday schools? This is a fair question and deserves an honest and thoughtful answer.

If we are motivated in such publication ventures by a mere desire "to be different," or by a smug denominational bigotry, or by a sense of pride, our efforts would surely not be justified. They could bring neither glory to Christ nor blessings to our people.

We honestly believe, however, that we have a sound reason for having "our own" materials in at least some of the more important areas of our Christian educational program, namely, that these can meet "our own" needs better than materials which have been prepared without our distinctive needs in view. Every denomination has distinctive needs—so has ours. Our children, in addition to a study of the Word of God, need to become acquainted with our own mission work and our own history. They should come to know and love our own church music. Materials coming from other sources may be very good along the line of Bible study, but they cannot adequately meet our distinctive needs.

Our New Summer Bible School materials, which are adapted from the Old Mennonite course, contain our own music and mission units in Grades 3-8. They are carefully prepared, under the able editorship of Mrs. Joanna S. Andres, with our own needs in view. This course combines thorough evangelical Bible study with a "plus" designed to meet our distinctive denominational needs. Our own editions of the materials for Grade III, V, and VII are to be available for this coming summer. Watch for further announcements concerning this splendid new course.—Erland Waltner—Member of the Curriculum Committee.

SEMINARY, MECCA FOR COMMITTEES

On February 10-12 the Young People's Union of the General Conference will convene here for its annual three-day session. The national officers, Kenneth Bauman, Bluffton, Ohio, Verney Unruh, Pulaski, Iowa, and Myrtle Wasser, Bluffton, Ohio, will lead the meetings which will include all the district presidents from Canada and the district conference in this country.

Our own Seminary Board of Trustees will convene here Saturday, February 12, for its annual spring meeting. At various times during the year the Executive Committee meets, but only once a year does our full board membership gather to deal with fundamental issues and policies of the Seminary. We particularly pray for the Lord's guidance in these sessions.

The Doctrine and Conduct Committee will meet here on Monday, February 14, just preceding the sessions at Bloomington, Illinois, where all the Boards of the Conference will meet for their annual united sessions.

A considerable number of seminary students heard Rheinold Niebuhr at the Rockefeller chapel on January 23. He preached a sermon from the fourth chapter of Ephesians, "Let all bitterness and wrath, anger, and clamor be put away from you with all malice, and be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, as God in Christ forgave you." Dr. Niebuhr said "The world is sick with unforgiven sin." This, he declared, exists among those who live outside of Christ's forgiving love, showing that this unforgiven sin consists of "my sin, and then your sin which I cannot forgive because I have not been forgiven by Christ."

John Nevin Sayer, of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, gave us his impression of the peacemaker at the Amsterdam Conference in a chapel talk. He noted three things: the theory of the just war has fallen apart in favor of the theory of the lesser of two evils; the power of the pagan states in Europe has made the non-C.O. more tolerant of the C.O.; and, the ecumenical movement has stressed the importance of following Christ across national boarders.

FOUR BLUFFTON STUDENTS TO EUROPE

Students from Bluffton College planning to go on the European tour and summer service project this summer are Lois Rich, Washington, Illinois; Dorothy Hurley, Danvers, Illinois; Aldine Zimmerman, Gridley, Illinois; and Carleton Sauder, Grabill, Indiana.

Laurence Burkhalter, who was graduated from Bluffton College in 1947, is to join the college staff as an addition to the music department faculty in September 1949. He is doing graduate work in music at Northwestern University this year. He is doing considerable work there in violin, is concert-master of the University Chamber Orchestra, and part time concert-master of the Northwestern University Symhony Orchestra.

Music department students gave a recital in Ramseyer Chapel the evening of February 1. President Ramseyer was a speaker at the Community Institute at Lafayette, Ohio the afternoon of February 2 and spoke at the Bluffton Hi-Y meeting the same evening.

Albert Bauman, son of Drs. Harvey and Ella Bauman, is to arrive in Bluffton soon to begin his college work. He was to sail from Calcutta, India, January 5.

The faculty entertained the students at a reception given in Musselman Library Friday evening, January 28. Pictures of Miss Ramseyer's European tour with students and of campus life were shown.

BETHEL STUDENTS IN CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PROJECT

New personnel for the Wichita project of Bible study, crafts, and recreation will begin their work on Saturday, Feb. 5. Ella Voth, Charlene Unruh, Marjorie Reimer, Marjorie Linscheid, Paul Isaak, and Bruno Penner were chosen by a committee of the Student Volunteers, sponsors of the project. Dr. J. H. Langenwalter, pastor of Lorraine Avenue Mennonite church, is the director of the project which was begun in October, 1948.

Six members of the Peace group went to the Fort Cobb, Okla. church for a week-end program, Feb. 5.

Gertrude Hohmann and Mary Jo Beimer presented a voice and piano recital in Bethel College chapel on Monday evening, Jan. 31. Miss Hohmann and Miss Beimer are instructors of music at Bethel College.

The music department of Bethel College presents its groups at the Friday chapel services. The College band, orchestra and woodwinds have represented the instrumental division. Choral clubs that have performed are the A Cappella choir, the Men's octet, and the Girl's sextet.

A three-day inter-collegiate UNESCO conference was held in Wichita beginning Thursday evening, Feb. 3. Members of the history classes and other faculty and students interested in peace and international understanding attended this meeting. A foreign-food festival and a lecture by Archibald MacLeish were outstanding features of the conference.

This is prayer: to pray for the triumph of Christ with all our hearts and then hurl our lives after our prayers.—Adapted from Fosdick.

Jottings

—Mennonite Church, Richfield, Pennsylvania: Following a series of catechetical classes taught by Reverend Shultz, thirteen boys and girls were baptized here on January 16.—Mrs. Albert Sheoffr, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Inman, Kansas: Churches participating in the meat canning project here January 13-17 were Zion, Zoar, Inman Mennonite, and Bethel. Our congregation donated $907 and approximately 1500 cans were filled.

—Bethel Church, Lustre, Montana: Services were dismissed here on January 2 because of a raging blizzard. The choir spent Sunday afternoon singing for some shut-ins. A church library is being brought into the church, books being either loaned or donated for its use. The Mission Society is doing work for the Wolf Point hospital and also gathering material to mend for relief.—Mrs. J. L. Hoffman, Corr.

—Apostolic Mennonite Church, Trenton, Ohio: For the annual congregational meeting on January 9 Reverened Amstutz chose for his sermon, "Prayer and the Church." The business part of the meeting consisted of reports, discussions, and election of officers. —Edna M. Kinsinger, Cor.

—Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, Wichita, Kansas: WANTED: Leather from old brief cases or other brief cases or other articles for hand work in the Saturday afternoon school. New leather is almost prohibitive in price. Families may have articles made of leather which can no longer be used but would furnish usable leather for the hand work of our children. The Bethel College Student Volunteer Group is in charge of this project.

—First Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: The Revised Standard Version of the New Testament is the most recent and most accurate translation of the N. T. that we have today. Copies have been placed in the halls for examination by members and in the near future the Library Committee will have copies available for sale.

—Bloomington, Illinois: Copies of the 1949 Year Book of the Central Conference of Mennonites can be obtained for thirty cents by writing to Rev. R. L. Hartzler, editor, in Bloomginton, This book is issued by the Central Mennonite Publication Board.

—Buhler Church, Buhler, Kansas: Roland Ediger recently left for Akron, Pennsylvania, to enter Voluntary Service. At the annual church meeting it was stated that thirty-two members had joined the church during the year 1948. The Harold Ratzlaff family, returned missionaries from India, are now residing in Buhler.

—First Church, Colfax, Washington: Reverend Etter of the International Leprosy Mission spoke to us recently and showed pictures of his work. Rev. J. R. Barkman of the Grace Childrens Home was guest speaker on January 23. Rev. and Mrs. Alfred Schwartz, Monroe, Washington, were here on Sunday evening of the same day. They are taking charge of the new mission field at Sweet Home, Oregon. A total of 325 pounds of new and used clothing, shoes, and bedding were sent to M.C.C. during January.—Mrs. Horace Rogers, Corr.

—Emmanuel Church, Moundridge, Kansas: Rev. Garman Wedel has recently undergone an appendectomy in the Bethesda Hospital, Goessel, Kansas. Redecorating the church basement has been a project of church members. The Ladies Mission Society has sent $100 to Puerto Rico to provide milk for children there.—Mrs. Daton Wedel, Corr.

—Hereford Church, Bally, Pennsylvania: Mrs. Russell Bechtel, newly appointed music director of the church, has organized a junior choir. Our congregation has received more than $41 for Rev. and Mrs. Cornelius Wall, former supply pastor here who is doing relief work among the displaced persons in the Gronau Camp in Germany. Part of the money was used to purchase paper and pencils, the balance being forwarded to them to purchase some German books for their school.—Mae Latshaw, Corr.

—Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas: The men's brotherhood held a family borscht and pie supper on January 24. The speaker was a local physician who recently returned from a flying trip to South America. The week day Bible School meets every Wednesday with an enrollment of 146 children and six teachers. Only two of the students are from this church. Rev. and Mrs Albert Jantzen, missionaries on furlough from China, are visiting in this area and attend our church.—Rev. Waldo W. Leisy, Corr.

—First Church, Hutchinson, Kansas: A ladies chorus has been organized and meets weekly for practice. The mixed choir has started working on the Easter cantata, "The Resurrection Story" which will be presented Easter Sunday evening. Miss Marie Baergen directs both groups—Mrs. V. Sawatzky, Corr.

—Einsiedel Church, Hanston, Kansas: The Bethel College men's octet, under the direction of Prof. David Suderman, sang here January 9. This congregation was the first to see the colored slides which Rev. Harold Ratzlaff, missionary from India, brought to this vicinity January 23. The Mission Society finished a quilt and packed 5 boxes of clothing for relief at the last meeting.—Mrs. Harry Albrecht, Corr.

—Bethel College Church, North Newton, Kansas: The annual School of Missions, held on the five Sunday evenings between January 9 and February 6, is centered on China. Among those serving as speakers and discussion leaders are Mrs. W. C. Voth, Miss Grace Eichelberger, Dr. and Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz, Sam J. Goering, and Dr. E. G. Kaufman. A junior choir school has been organized by Mrs. Joan Veston Enz; the junior choir is serving at the morning service once a month. Dr. Charles L. Feinberg of Los Angeles, California, speaker for the Newton Bible Conference, brought the morning message on January 23.—Richard Blosser, Corr.

Efficiency Corner

A small pamphlet giving information of the church's total program for a whole quarter is published by the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchener, Ontario, of which Rev. Andrew Shelly is the pastor. The pamphlet, on its front page, contains a list of the sermon topics to be preached on at the Sunday morning service. It gives a list of the Sunday school lessons on the second page, giving the sense of the over-all view of the lessons. On the third page there are listed the sermon topics for Sunday evening. On the fourth page the topics for the young people's meetings are given. Then there follows a statement of the task of the Christian in relation to the church. The following page lists the topics to be discussed in connection with the mid-week service, recently named the "Spiritual Growth Hour." The last schedule represents the radio witness of the church in terms of its Sunday schedule in connection with the local radio station. On the back cover there is a list of the regular stated meetings. In connection with the church school the following slogan is set forth: "Go—Grow—Glow for Christ!"

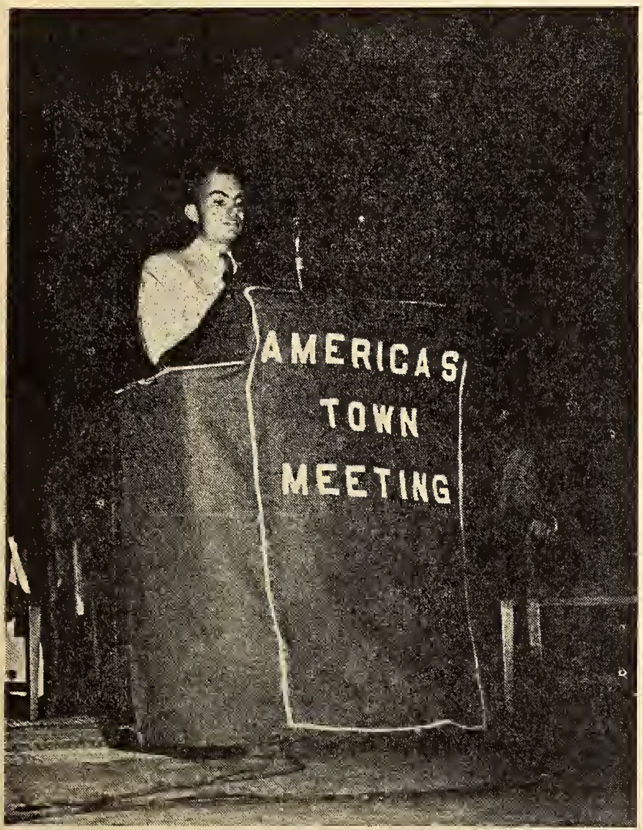
Is the Church Failing Youth?

A Town Meeting Broadcast

Is your church adequately serving the youth of your church?

Here is a question that might be a good Sunday evening subject for discussion and thought among your young people. Read this and consider this as a discussion subject. Ed.



During the Christian Youth Conference of North America, America's Town Meeting of the Air broadcast a discussion of the subject, "Is the Church Failing Youth?" The twenty-five hundred delegates to the Conference participated.

"Yes!" says HELEN STOREN, assistant professor of Education, Queens College

FROM MY ASSOCIATION with young people over the past fifteen years, I have become convinced that the Church is failing youth on several counts. There are, of course, exceptions. Within practically every denomination there are individual parishes, and church-sponsored schools and organizations that are doing a splendid job of preparing young men and women to function as religiously oriented citizens. But the majority of our youths have pitifully few religious resources to call upon when they attempt to formulate values to guide their actions during these confusing times.

The fact that religion does not serve as a continuously guiding force in the lives of many of our youth is due, at least partially, to the poor quality of our religious instruction. Perhaps in our attempt to make religious education more palatable we have taken all the meat out of it. Much of our religious instruction continues to be of a very superficial nature.

We fail also by not helping students see direct application for their religious beliefs. For those young people who have at best an hour or so a week of religious instruction, the chances of achieving a very fundamental understanding of religion is meager.

In addition to more complete and meaningful knowledge of his religion, youth needs to be provided with more opportunities for experiencing the joy and satisfaction that comes from service. Too frequently we have all been guilty of putting a stamp of approval on individual competition, and a premium on financial success. If the church is ever to combat the extreme materialism of our present culture she must give youth more chances to serve others.

Finally, I believe, the church will succeed with youth only if she takes a more vigorous part in helping to shape the culture pattern of our society. A true crusade on the part of all our churches for a nobler world might waken youth out of its apathy. Youth is ready for a tough and exciting job—other than war—why don't we give it to them?

"No!" says LUTHER WESLEY SMITH, Baptist executive secretary and educator

THE FACT IS, the churches of our land have served America and her youth more fully and effectively than most people realize.

Two million Sunday school teachers devote their labor, love and learning each week to the task of teaching America's boys and girls concerning the essentials of the Christian faith. The character and integrity which Christian faith nurtures in a person is the very foundation of our democracy and institutions of soul liberty. Nurturing character in growing persons through teaching them the knowledge and love of Christ is what the church is doing for millions of our American youth. All across our land there are many new evidences of the renewed and deepening earnestness with which the churches and this great army of volunteer Sunday-school teachers are facing their responsibility through a ministry of Christian teaching to the youth of America.

Consider the millions of our youth who are in summer camps and assemblies under Christian agencies, being trained for Christian leadership in our land. Or, consider the many great student conferences and convocations sponsored by the churches throughout the course of a year.

The United Christian Youth Movement of America, in which participate the youth of the major Protestant bodies, illustrates the fact that in facing their common tasks and responsibilities the Protestant churches in our country are virtually united—effective!

Let it be said again and again that these churches are not perfect. They are not as earnest, not as Christlike as we would wish and pray they might be, because there are so many frail human beings in them like you and me! But how can one know the extent to which the church is ministering in vital and redemptive ways to the youth of America and through them to the world, and still maintain that she is failing our youth?

"Yes!" insists GIL DODDS, minister and holder of indoor track mile record

THE CHURCH IS FAILING by providing too few leaders. The preacher is expected to be an exceptional speaker, a master psychologist for counselling, a youth director, a neighborhood visitor and a specialist in religious education. We are living in an age of specialization, The church must cease to be a one-man organization. It must provide more leadership to meet the varied demands of church and community life. We not only need more workers, but workers more adequately trained to meet their given task.

When the church becomes conscious of its responsibility to youth, it will insist that the seminaries provide adequate departments of Christian education.

The church is failing to recognize its obligation to minister to the whole life of the individual. The church at large has chosen to minister only to the religious part of the life and has relgated the other compartments of the young person's life to other agencies. Our lives are integrated wholes. Unless religion is all of life, it is none of life. The church must not only provide a place for worship, but also a place for fellowship and social life.

Many churches are, however, making steps toward family counselling, up-to-date recreational facilities and a wholesome social life.

We might also refer to the questions of world issues. Young people must face political problems. The church can no longer remain mute upon such questions and expect young people to be satisfied. The church which has recognized the Bible as its authority must realize that the Bible touches every phase of life. The right and wrong of social issues should be clearly outlined by the church and the right and wrong of political issues should certainly not be sidestepped.

The church has failed its youth in not maintaining in secular education the vital principal that there can be no sound economic and material value without true spiritual values.

"No!" answers ED HAWLEY, youth fellowship former president, Oslo, Delegate

I WAS A MEMBER of America's delegation to the second World Conference of Christian Youth in Norway last summer. There thirteen hundred of us from seventy-one different countries met to proclaim Christ's lordship and to try to understand each other and our job as Christians. I wish I had time to tell of the meetings between these many groups which helped us to understand that we held a common loyalty that transcended our differences. The fact that such a meeting could be held at all in these times indicates to me that the church is not failing completely to meet the needs of youth. The young

American Students and the Church

Report of the Ecumenical Student Conference

by Edith Claassen and Marjorie Linscheid

"The spirit of unity can be achieved not by trying to reconcile sinful self-seeking men to each other but by reconciling them to God." These were words of Dr. Clarence Tucker Craig of Yale Divinity School to a conference that will be important in the history of student Christian movements which took place on the Kansas University campus at Lawrence, Kansas from December 27 to January 1—the Ecumenical Student Conference. It was sponsored by the United Student Christian Council which is a federation of 15 different national student Christian movement, including such as the YMCA, the YWCA, the Student Volunteer Movement, the Interseminary Movement and the student organizations of 11 different churches (among them, the Methodist, Lutheran, Baptist, Presbyterian, Protestant Episcopal churches).

Five Mennonite Students Attend

Nearly 1,200 students attended the conference. Delegates were there from every state in the union except Delaware and Nevada. Colleges and universities numbering 338, were represented. In addition, there were about 60 foreign students from 31 foreign countries who are studying in the United States. Among the Mennonites present were Lois Lohrentz and Betty van der Smissen of the University of Kansas, Robert Epp of the University of Nebraska, and Marjorie Linscheid and I from Bethel College.

The conference mixed worship, discussion groups, recreation and platform addresses. Conference speakers included such well-known religious leaders as Dr. D. Elton Trueblood, author and teacher; Dr. John McKay, president of Princeton Theoogical Seminary; Dr. George Kelsey of the Federal Council of Churches; Rev. Robert Bilheimer of the World Council of Churches; Dr. Clarence Tucker Craig of Yale Divinity School; and others.

To Promote Unity

The purpose of the conference was to promote a sense of unity among Christian students in the United States and to bring before them some of the issues facing the Church. The most widely discussed of these was the ecumenical movement or the trend toward church unity. The delegates agreed generally that there was a great need for a unity of spirit and purpose among Christians in America, that the task facing the Church is too great for a divided witness. This spirit of unity, as Dr. Clarence Tucker Craig said at this point, can be achieved not by trying to reconcile sinful, self-seeking men to each other but by reconciling them to God.

Unscheduled Peace Discussion

Several highlights of the Conference were not part of the planned program. One of these was an informal and dynamic discussion on pacifism. Since there was no place on the program for this topic the meeting was held from eleven till one o'clock at night! Those who testified to their peace conviction gave clear and powerful reasons why they as Christians were convinced pacifists. There was much discussion pro and con. There seemed to be little antagonism toward Christian pacifism but rather an alive interest in the subject. It was a challenge to those of us from historic peace churches to rethink our convictions.

Evangelism a Necessity

Although this Conference was not designated as a mission conference, the mission emphasis was evident in all the topics discussed. It is impossible, we discovered, to divorce missions from church unity. The summaries of the "Church and Politics" and the "Church and University" discussions were that a personal faith expressed in evangelism is a necessity for all churches and all church action.

An important aspect of the Conference was learning to know Christians of other church backgrounds. Many of our discussions in the dorms and during meals centered on the experiences we had in our various churches and schools. It was surprising how similar our ideas were, and when we differed we still had in common a purposive seeking for Christian Truth.

Communion — a Stumblingblock

Another aspects of the Conference was the question of the Sacraments. A communion service had been planned, but we soon realized that two of the denominations represented did not feel able to participate in a joint communion service. There was much discussion on this subject and a feeling of, "What's the use of an Ecumenical Conference if we can't worship together in a joint communion servce." We realized that we must continue to seek for a deeper spiritual unity even though at present we couldn't reconcile some of our church practices. The result was three separate communion services and a challenge to work for more unity in the future.

ALLAHABAD, INDIA.—A Christian Youth Conference, the first of its kind and a direct result of cooperation in Christian youth of the Christian Council of India, Pakistan, and Burma, was held December 24-28, at which time 300 representatives met to help unite the Christian youth of India, Pakistan, Burma, and Ceylon. Delegates were present from the YMCA, the YWCA, the Student Christian Movement, the Christian Endeavor Union, the India Sunday School Union, and all the important Church Youth Organizations.

Take a Look at Our Racial Groups

Within the borders of the United States there are many, varied groups of people. Some because of their culture and ways of life isolate themselves. Thus, foreign-language groups are common in all large cities. Some, because of the color of their skin, are isolated by the great American caste system based on race. Here are some of these groups—isolated, different, withdrawn from the white man's "way of life."

American Indian.—Although there is mixed blood, the Indian in North America has remained distinctive. This is unlike the South American who is pretty much inbred with European stock. The North American Indian is not a vanishing race, but is actually increasing in number. The Navaho is the largest tribe, with fifty thousand members.

Negros.—About one tenth of the American population is negro. Not even ninety years ago he was a chattel slave. Since he attained his freedom, he has made great strides. Yet, scarcely any living or working condition the negro engages in is untouched by some type or restriction effected by the American caste system. The white accuses him of being unclean, poorly mannered, offensive, overbearing, and so on, forgetting that no single race has ever possessed all the undesirable qualities; forgetting also that a bare ninety years ago the negro was treated as a farm animal or a sub-human person. Today great artists, great athletes, great songs, great scientists, great Christian leaders have come from the American negro.

Spanish-speaking people.—Mexicans, Puerto Ricans, and other Latin Americans are to be found in different parts of the United States. The Puerto Ricans are found mainly in New York. Mexicans in the Southwest. Given menial labor, living in hovels, the general picture of the Spanish-speaking peoples in the United States is not a very happy one. Although they, too, have contributed leaders in the arts and professions.

Orientals.—East Indians, Filipinos, Chinese, Japanese—all are in the United States. Immigration laws prohibit their entry as citizens. It is called the Oriental Exclusion Act. The common thing is for the Oriental to live in his own community and enter non-competitive business to avoid the discrimination he feels. Hence the Chinatowns, and Japanese truck farms, the lack of church connection.

When we think of the Christian and race, there are twelve "musts" for the Christian 'ere he compromises his faith.

1. We must realize that we have moral obligations to all men.
2. We must demonstrate in practice our belief in the intrinsic worth and dignity of every human being.
3. We must recognize that lines of division based upon color alone are unjust and tyrannical.
4. We must substitute pride in the human race for racial pride.
5. We must break away from the prejudices of convention and caste.
6. We must make sure that every public measure to improve the quality of life of our people shall apply equally to all citizens.
7. We must insure, in so far as legislation can, equal opportunity in every kind of useful work for all persons of equal skill and energy.
8. We must make sure that the life of a person, his standing in the community, and ability to meet his needs is not made to depend upon race or color but only upon character and willingness to contribute his best.

IS THE CHURCH FAILING YOUTH?

person today who wants to find international fellowship will find in the Christian church the most widespread world-wide organization that he as an ordinary citizen may join.

The church is changing the lives of young people through effectively presenting the gospel. Though this happens in many ways, most important, I think, is the summer conference of church camp. Here youth are learning the church's message for all of life, as they live twenty-four hours a day as Christians sharing work and play as well as worship, learning standards that can carry over into every aspect of daily life. In classes they become aware of the relation of the gospel to social and economic problems. Often around a campfire on the last evening I have heard halting but powerful testimonies about the power that had come into young lives that week. These young people join literally millions of others who look back to some summer camp or conference in the past thirty years at which they accepted the faith that has since been the framework of meaning for their lives. These conferences, and denominational youth fellowships which sponsor them, are to me living proof that the church is not failing youth. Through such organizations young people are daily being built into the world fellowship represented by the Oslo conference, and, more important, into the invisible fellowship of the everlasting church of Christ.

"Withdraw Now?" is the title of a coming article by Ruth Hilty, recently returned European MCC worker.

Beyond Our Own

PORTLAND, MAINE.—Two Maine young men were sentenced to two years in prison by the United States district court of Portland, for failure to register for the draft. Convicted were Paul B. Cates of East Vassalboro, a student at Haverford College, and F. Gerald Williams of Vinal Haven. Mr. Cates is a member of a Quaker family and Mr. Williams is the son of Methodist missionaries in India. Both had registered in the previous draft.

BIELEFELD, GERMANY. — One-hundred and twenty leading Calvinists, Lutherans, and Unionists met in Bielefeld, Germany, recently for the first regular meeting of EKID (Evangelical Church in Germany). Representatives of Germany's 35 million Protestants showed their support to the Church by electing Bishop Dibelius, Lutheran Bishop of Berlin and Brandenburg, as the new chairman, replacing Bishop Theophil Wurm of Wuerttemberg.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS. — Five-hundred and forty-nine displaced persons, men, women, and children, have now reached temporary or permanent homes in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, following their arrival aboard the steamship Marine Flasher in Boston on January 17, from Hamburg, Germany.

NEW DELHI, INDIA.—A conference was called recently in New Delhi, India, to protest Dutch military action against the young Indonesian republic. Delegates selected a committee to prepare a resolution to the U. N. security council dealing with the setting up of an interim Indonesian government.

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA. — The San Diego Daily Journal announced it was refusing classified rental ads that specified "no children." Jack L. Sizelove, classified advertising manager, said well-meaning landlords who objected to children because they thought they were destructive were not well informed.

LOS ANGELES—A world-wide "I Don't Smoke" Club has been founded by a local salesman to discourage young people attending school from using tobacco in any form. Certificates printed to resemble diplomas are given to all members. Headquarters of the club are on the campus of George Pepperdine College in Los Angeles.

NEW YORK—Aid in "rebuilding the physical and spiritual structures in many impoverished lands" worth $5,000,000 and 33,000,000 pounds of supplies worth more than $11,000,000 has been sent abroad through Church World Service during 1948.

CHICAGO—John D. Metzler, national chairman of the Christian Rural Overseas program (CROP), has announced that due to the success of 26 states in the volunteer effort in 1948 to feed the hungry overseas, the CROP campaign will be expanded to all 48 states this year. Last year 1,500,000 American families of all faiths cooperated in the project through church and farm organization.

UNITED STATES — Congress has requested the National Association of Evangelicals to attempt to place 3,000 of the 205,000 displaced persons which the United States is bringing to this country. The American Council of Christian Churches, which has set as its goal the bringing of 1000 DP families to the U.S., is also helping to establish the DP's in jobs to make them independent by the help of others.

INTELLIGENT AND MERCILESSLY HONEST SELF-CRITICISM is indispensable to growth. The usual tendency of humans is to succumb to the temptation of bolstering up a corrupt self by savagely criticizing others. The more the criticism under those conditions, the more the soul of that individual or the group disintegrates. Incidentally, an accompanying element in such a situation is that criticism of a person or a group may drive the group criticized to an extreme which they themselves never intended. Such criticism has another accompanying element within the one who criticizes in that he becomes progressively taken over by the idea that the group or individual he is criticizing cannot be changed. This is an unalterably unchristian attitude!

The issue of The Mennonite carries an example of the kind of honest self-criticism that is so desperately needed today. In the article entitled "A Deep Underlying Cancer," the editor of the Moody Monthly calls his constituency to repentance. Your editor did not print this article to play up the sins of this group. We have enough sins of our own that it would be folly to do this. He printed it rather to point out the degree of honesty in confession of sin that will be needed by all groups and individuals if the Church is to fulfill her God-appointed mission to the present day.

If there were more of such stern self-examination and confession of sin there would be less of the godless kind of citicism of people and churches which progressively renders impotent the witness of the Church.—JJE

Prayer is the settled craving of a man's heart.

TYPICAL OF INTERNATIONAL POLITICS are recent developments in which, after the United States has gotten itself thoroughly enmeshed in the new North Atlantic Alliance which is entirely apart from the United Nations organization, our country has proceeded to turn down two strategically timed invitations from Russia to talk over differences. This refusal was defended by the statement that any talks must be within the United Nations organization. We are not in a position to give the final word on Russia's sincerity; we know that there has been treachery and double-talk in the past. What should cause us tremendous concern is our own double-talk. What could be more effective in fostering atheistic communism than the propaganda that so-called Christian America really does not practice what it preaches?—JJE

IN ONE'S CONCERN to avoid falling into common abuses of prayer there is a real tendency to fall into a greater sin—not praying at all.—JJE

Ignoring God jeopardizes all you hold dear.

ARE YOU PRAYING for the Holy Spirit's guidance for the General Conference Council of Boards now in session in Bloomington? This is a most crucial gathering. Plans are being laid that will affect the program of our churches, as well as the hundreds of thousands of people who are on the receiving end of our far-flung mission, education, and relief program. One of the questions that is being raised again and again at this meeting is: Will the people at home back up the effort to get out the Gospel through our varied program? Let your leaders feel the impact of your united prayers.—JJE

. . . AND SPEAKING ABOUT TRANSPARENT HONESTY, what about our income tax returns, many of which are in the process of being made out? The government has gone to considerable trouble to help people to keep their taxes as low as possible within the law. Yet, how many sell out their souls on a piece of paper on or around March 15!—JJE

OTHERS WHO ARE READY TO PAY every penny of their tax are asking the question as to whether they may be contributing consciously and directly to the next war when it is known that 60 cents out of every tax dollar goes to military purposes and that the major portion of all government income is from income taxes. They feel it is a matter of personal responsibility. Some have actually taken that percentage of their taxes which will be used for defense and have sent it to relief agencies, notifying the government accordingly.—JJE

"EVANGELISM," like many other words in the Church's vocabulary is a good word only if it is permitted to retain its fundamental meaning. Evangelism is the name given to that responsibility of the Church which grows out of the Church's possession of the "good news" that in Jesus Christ alone is deliverance from every sin, personal and social, and that such deliverance is directly dependent on the decision of individual people to accept this deliverance and become disciples of Christ. If we have a program which we call evangelism which does not present Christ or which does not call for change of direction toward Christ, it is a misnomer to call it evangelism. The Church's program of Christian Education must be permeated by this emphasis. Everything we present must have back of it the ultimate authority of the God-man Christ Jesus and must be presented with the conscious appeal for Christ at every point of need with the invitation, 'Come ye after me!"—JJE

NATIONWIDE ATTENTION has been called to Austin Regier's case as a non-registrant in the pages of the Christian Century. It should be known that this widely read publication does not agree with Regier's stand, but has expressed its disagreement with the way the government has handled such cases. The present issue of the MENNONITE carries the material just as it appeared in the Christian Century with their editorial note.—JJE

The Great Underlying Cancer

by William Culbertson

In the past year strong statements about the moral plight of Fundamentalism have appeared in four of our most important fundamentalist monthlies. There are signs everywhere that we are at last awakening to see how great is our spiritual sickness.

" . . . splitting hairs . . ."

While the world is perishing all about us, we contentiously contend for irrelevancies. And while we are splitting hairs and churches on nonscriptural issues, we are driving men and women, boys and girls away from the Saviour by our lack of considerateness, our churlishness, our boorishness, our preoccupation with ourselves and our own comforts; or, on the other hand, our misunderstanding of the Lord's will that makes "preaching the gospel" more important than the spiritual welfare of our own neglected children.

There is not space here to enumerate the indictments against us that are all so true; casual objective observation will reveal all that we need to know. But there is room to briefly raise the question as to why we face this situation. The answer seems to be that we have turned away from the scriptural teaching that growth in grace does not come automatically through the unattended work of the Holy Spirit. A new Christian is not to be left to grow unattended. He is to be taught and trained and disciplined, the process set up by the Holy Spirit whereby perfection and love may be achieved.

The Christian has within him a new potential that was not there before he became a Christian. But that potential left to itself cannot be expected to develop apart from the provided means of grace, especially if the young tree is wrapped by unscriptural traditions of isolation from the people of the world instead of blossoming and fructifying among them.

" . . . obedience to Christ's law of love"

Born-again Christians need to be taught ethics. We are not doing that today. We are teaching the doctrine of the Scriptures, but we are teaching it as distinct from the scriptural life. Knowing the words is more important to us than living the Word. Thus we have become as the hypocrites of old, whited sepulchers full of dead men's bones. We tithe mint and anise and cummin, and omit the weightier matters of obedience to Christ's law of love.

". . . heresy of lawlessness

Both Lead to The Same Brink

By Charles A. Wells

One of the dangerous misinterpretations of our day is that, by fighting communism, we can save America from godlessness. Voices all over the country are warning us that we must stop "godless communism." True enough—communistic godlessness is a dangerous thing—but so is capitalistic godlessness! Those few nations that have been destroyed by communism can be matched by many more that have gone down to destruction through the moral and spiritual decay of godlessness. The facts of history will substantiate the rather harsh statement that a godless capitalist is just as dangerous to "the American way of life" as a godless communist! Hatred, selfishness greed, dishonesty, racketeering—in both high places and low places—these things have destroyed more nations than the teachings of Karl Marx. Godless communism is a real menace to our security as it pushes toward us from without, but godless Americanism is also a dreadful danger right now as it destroys our vitality from within.

The Gospel Moves on

by P. J. Boehr

The opening of the Ch'engtu West Gate Street Chapel, known as the "Tea House Chapel," was not incidental; it was God-appointed. Nor are the gospel songs memorized by the many children who come in crowds taught by chance, but rather taught by messengers of the Gospel who are called of God, and bringing the message of life, hope, and joy in a place where, for the first time, the Gospel sound went forth three months ago. Here, where formerly there was largely the sound of the more ordinary talk and often the language of cursing and deeds of gambling—here for three months now the people who come in crowds nearly every night and afternoon hear something outstandingly different from the usual. Yet it is tragically true that what is spoken in the forenoons when the tea-house is in full operation is often evident at times when we feel that we have control of the place for gospel work.

The Seed Is Planted

The children sing with all their might such gospel songs as, "Gott ist die Liebe." "Thank you Lord, for saving my soul." "When He Cometh," "Room for Thee," "O Come to my Heart, Lord Jesus," "Only One God," "Come to Jesus Just Now," "Jesus Loves the Children of the World," from memory; this, too, is not incidental, but has come about by singing them over and over with those many children who, by and large, read their Chinese language. Many foundational Bible verses are being taught with the result that the children have memorized a goodly number.

The Harvest Is Approaching

A goodly number have joined the inquirers' instruction classes in the course of our meetings at the Tea House Chapel.

Amidst Difficulties

Of further interest will be the fact that the manager of the chapel, who, by the way, has owned a New Testament in Chinese for a few years, feels he must accommodate himself to the needs incidental to the Tea House. So we sometimes during the meetings see laundry work going on and the wash hung up under the shelter of the Tea House. Children are seen bobbing up and down in glee over the bright pressure kerosene Coleman lamp hanging over-head. Children have games in the bright light cast onto the street from the Chapel, for one street side of the Chapel is open. Once or twice it seemed as though some fellows would avail themselves of the light on the street to settle their differences with no uncertain and loud language. Parents used the opportunity of the bright light to shed the responsibility of their little ones by bringing them into the light in order that they may go about some other matters that interest them; thus we have extra work in the chapel to keep order which is not of "the first order" now and then.

One may see even a de-lousing going on in the rear, while some people also come in to sit and smoke a while before they go on again.

But thank God, many remain to listen and, we hope, to pray. We see some of them pretty regularly and are reminded of the passage in the Word, "He that observeth the wind shall not sow, and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap . . . . In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that." Eccel. 11:4, 6.

"On One Occasion . . ."

On one occasion as we came to the Tea House for the Gospel service we found long rows of tables around which sat about thirty people who had a parley, as they were busily serving and drinking tea. We soon found out it was a "peace conference." A few parties had gotten into a bad argument and strife, and unless such a gathering was called, they would go to court with their troubles. Instead, the district "peacemakers" talked them into a "tea party," where they could air their differences and come to an understanding. We came for the evening service and found that this "party" was going on. We looked about us to see what could be done for a Gospel service, but as good Mennonites we did not wish to break up a peacemakers party. So we found two children to whom we could speak and with whom we sang a while, not disturbing the peace party.

Mission Briefs

Miss Mary Becker, Missionary to Colombia, spoke about the Mission work in Cachipay at the morning service of First Mennonite Church, Pretty Prairie, Sunday, January 30, and showed pictures in the evening.

Brother and Sister H. J. Brown have made tentative plans to leave China on the S. S. Cleveland, sailing on the 25th of May. They left for China for the first term, November 2, 1909.—Howard G. Nyce, Exec. Sec'y.

Rev. and Mrs. P. W. Penner plan to leave India on the S. S. City of Carlisle, schedule to leave Calcutta some time in March or early in April. They will retire from Missionary service having completed their allotted time of service.

Rev. and Mrs. John Thiessen and their two children are also planning to leave India next spring, having completed another term of service. They hope to return to India after a well-earned furlough.

Church Building Fund: $3.30

Miss Anna Baerg writes "We've been having prayer meetings every morning for almost three weeks now with the Christians here at the church. Among other requests, they mentioned the need for a church on the mesa. One of them suggested that the Mission Board ought to build us one. I said, 'But the Mission Board doesn't have the money. I wonder what we could do.'

". . . quite upset . . ."

"They were quite upset and one said, 'we don't have the money.' I said, 'I know you're poor, but most of the money that Mission Board gets is from poor people, maybe from poor widows who are tithing. One tenth of our money belongs to the Lord. If I have ten dollars then one dollar belongs to the Lord; if you have ten cents then one cent belongs to the Lord. I'll buy a little bank and we can start putting our small coins in there.'

"We all have some rocks . . ."

Then Mr. Kliewer said, "It doesn't have to be a large church."

Some one else said, "We all have some rocks up there from our old houses and we could use them."

"So far we have three dollars and thirty cents in our little bank for a building fund for a church at Old Oraibi."

(Dear members of Conference: Such efforts are appreciated by the native Christians, but they can not do it alone. You may recall that the old church was destroyed by fire (lightning) some years ago. Miss Baerg meets with these Christians in their homes. They do need a church. Brother and Sister Kliewer assist Miss Baerg at Old Oraibi and we hope the small building fund will bring forth great results in the near future.—Howard G. Nyce, Exec. Sec'y.)

another great church council of evangelical Christians to discuss not the heresy of unbelief concerning the divinity of Christ, as did the Arian Council of old, but the heresy of Christian lawlessess, which is our great present--day problem. Prophetic conferences have their place; Bible teaching conferences are imperative; but they are of little value unless we frankly face the great underlying cancer that is eating away the vitals of Fundamentalism.

Doing a Wonderful Job?

We earnestly believe that never before have the opportunities for serving our Lord in preaching the gospel been so great as they are in 1949. But we can never enter into those opportunities except in a very minor way (as we have been doing) unless we are willing first to open our eyes and blast away the damning belief with which we are surrounded, that Fundamentalism is doing a wonderful job. We are a sinful people, and we know it not.

Who will be bold enough to bring us together to publicly state these issues?—Reprinted from Moody Monthly

In India

"We see a change"

by Elizabeth Thiessen

At long last our Indian leaders have become convinced of the importance of tithing. For a long time they seemed luke-warm about the subject and we did not know how to impress it upon them that this was a Christian duty. Sermons had often been used and indirectly it was often stressed. But now we see a change in our people and we are glad.

Literature Helped!

Last Sunday morning Reverend Thiessen was absent and so he assigned our headmaster, Mr. Samuel Stephen, to preach in his place. Mr. Stephen was given quite a bit of literature on the subject and that helped to warm him up.

In his sermon Mr. Stephen presented the subject in a masterful way. He began with the idea of giving as the big source of joy at Christmas time. (Article was written Dec. 18.) The parents have joy much longer because they receive happiness when they give gifts to their children.

The Joy of Giving

In the same way he urged the young people not only to expect gifts but to learn the joy of giving.

God gives us everything and sent His Son for the whole world. Salvation is for all. But God demands of us to give back a certain share; for if it would not be for His blessing there would be no crop, no work accomplished. The strength to work and earn comes from above. If we obey His law and do as He demands, then great blessing will follow. No one can tell what great things God will do for those who obey and trust Him.

"Bring Ye all the tithes . . ."

At the close of the sermon, one by one several students came forward illustrating what it meant to give the tithe. The first boy brought some products from the farm; he counted out a certain share and put it down and walked off. Then a girl brought a basket of eggs, she counted out a certain share, put it down in front, and walked off. Next a small boy brought out 10 balloons, put down one and then walked off. Then a carpenter brought his tools, and took some money out of his pocket, counted it out, put it down and walked off. In each case Mr. Stephen read, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, etc." We hope it made a lasting impression.

"Eighty per cent of the national budget is now going for past, present, and future wars, 34.6 per cent of the budget being for direct military outlay. Hence, it is apparent that the major business of the federal government is war . . . . it is useless to act as if the major business of the government is civil functions, or peace pursuits."

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER, MARCH 4, 1949

All missionary societies of the General Conference are urged to meet on that day of prayer for missions around the world. Some will join with other denominations in union prayer services. Others may meet alone or turn their regular March meeting into a praise and prayer service.

Let us remember the work in each of our fields on that day whether at home or meeting with others. The United Council of Church Women suggests the following program.

Theme: The Lord Is Thy Keeper, Psalm 121:5

Adoration, Psalm 121

Penitence, Isa. 55:6; I John 1:8,9

Assurance, Ps. 121:3a; Matt. 28:20; John 15:16

Thanksgiving, Psalm 121:5,6

Offering of Self, Mt. 10:37; Luke 9:24; Rom. 12:24

Presentation of Gifts, II Cor. 9:6,7

Intercession, Hymn, "Lord, Speak to Me" (Menn. Hymnary, No. 296).

Dedication, Hymn, "O Jesus I have Promised" (Menn. Hymnary, No. 212)

Offerings taken, except at union meetings, may be sent to Miss Eleanor Camp, 722 Main, Newton, Kansas.

When this comes to the readers, may it remind you also to pray for the Conference Boards and Committees and the Women's Executive Council meetings at Bloomington, Illinois, February 15 to 18.—Mrs. W. C. Voth, Secretary, Women's Missionary Association.

MONEY AND LIFE

This teaching is fundamentally wrong and misleading. There is an unsound dualism about it. We cannot separate life and money in this way any more than we can separate life and labor. All the value that money has is due to the amount of life that it stands for. It represents so much toil, skill, intelligence, conscience, character—all the factors that are to be found in good and honest work. The faithful laborer who holds his wage in his hand may truthfully say, "This is my life. This is part of me. This is my blood, my spent energy, my soul."

The dollar that does not represent your life represents somebody else's life. Money is life done up into convenient form for storage and use. It is that portion of a person which he can carry around in his pocket, pass over the counter and put into the hand of somebody else. All attempts to separate it from life and to put it on a lower level savor of unreality and are bound to fail.

Through the spiritual use of one's money one may enjoy the taste of immortality now.—Jay T. Stocking, from Zion Mennonite Church Bulletin Souderton, Pennsylvania.

Central District

Bloomington Hospital to be Expanded

A new two-story wing of 40-bed capacity is the plan that was reported to the Mennonite Hospital Association in its recent meeting January 21, when some one hundred representatives of the association from central Illinois Mennonite churches met for the annual meeting at the Troyer Memorial Nurses Home. The drive for building funds for the two local hospitals—St. Joseph's and the Mennonite Hospital—which is to be executed jointly, was announced with a goal of $550,000 to $700,000. Both institutions were reported overcrowded.

N. O. Hoover, superintendent of the hospital, gave the report for the year which indicated the total of 6,758 patients treated at a cost of $405,000, showing an increase of 334 patients over 1947.

Officers for the coming year elected at this meeting are Rev. R. L. Hartzler, Bloomington, as chairman of the board; J. E. Garber, Washington, secretary; Arthur Bertche, Pontiac, treasurer; and Rev. Harry Bertche as vice-president. The three members of the Board of Trustees re-elected for three-year terms are E. J. Raber, Flanagan; John Folkers, El Paso; and John H. Miller, Carlock.

The women's auxiliary of the hospital also met, re-electing all of the former officers. They are Mrs. N. A. Brodbeck, Normal, president; Mrs. Roy Bohrer, Normal, secretary; and Mrs. R. L. Hartzler, Bloomington, treasurer.

Middle District

Conference for All the People

BLUFFTON, OHIO: Some thirty-two Middle Conference leaders have been enlisted to speak on forty-five different topics of vital interest to Middle District to bring the inspiration of district conferences to the local churches.

This plan has come as the result of the fall meeting, the first of its kind, of the Middle District officers and committee members, held at Bluffton College in September. The District Education Committee, consisting of J. S. Schultz, Bluffton, Ohio; S. F. Pannabecker, Chicago, Illinois; and F. S. Raid, Bluffton, Ohio, has made up a list of topics under the headings of leadership, the Church at Home, Women's Societies and Men's Organizations, Relief and Missions, Christian Education, Young People, Peace, The Christian Home, and Religion and Art.

The Committee suggests that week-end conferences, consisting of talks and discussions be oganized.

It is urged that each church in the Middle District Conference take part in such a conference, either as groups of neighboring churches or as single churches. It is also suggested that each pastor, or group of pastors, be free to ask any group of speakers to help spread the same kind of Christian inspiration that delegates and representatives received at district conferences.

The Faith of a Convict

by Austin Regier

On January 10 a federal judge in Minneapolis sentenced Austin Regier to one year and one day in a federal penitentiary for refusing to register for the draft. By this conviction young Regier became a federal convict and lost his citizenship rights, including the right to vote. Other young men are being dealt with in the same way weekly by the federal government. Many are receiving much longer sentences. As an indication of the type of mind which the United States thus classifies as criminal, we present the text of the statement made to the federal court by Mr. Regier.—THE EDITORS.

I HAVE BEEN AFFILIATED with the Mennonite Church all my life. The Mennonite Church is about four hundred years old and one of its basic principles has always been non-resistance in war. Mennonites have always been a peace-loving people. It is my heritage as a Mennonite to be able to look upon a long line of people who have believed that the way of love is infinitely better than the way of the sword.

It is traditional among Mennonites to work among people as did Jesus. They have never been party to violent overthrow of any social institution. When change was necessary, they have adopted the methods of Jesus as they understood them. They have believed that it was their duty to be right in their own living. They have never with missionary zeal taken up arms to convert some heathen peoples. It has always been their belief that if others are to be brought to the way of truth it would come about most readily by their own example. When violence was threatened or actually used against Mennonites to dissuade them from their God, they did not retaliate with violence, but with love. They have obeyed the laws of their land when such laws have not been in conflict with the commands of their God.

Family History

My ancestors migrated from Holland to Prussia, and from Prussia to south Russia. From south Russia they came to America in 1878. In all of these migrations they sought freedom to worship their God as their consciences dictated. They did not leave Russia for economic reasons. They had prospered in Russia and left large farms when they came to this country. They came to the United States to escape the militarism which threatened them in Russia.

My parents are farm people and I have spent much of my life on a Kansas farm. I attended a small rural grade school, the community high school in my home town, and Bethel College, a Mennonite school. I registered for the war draft in 1942, and applied for classification as a conscientious objector. This request was granted. Together with numerous other conscientious objectors, I applied for work in areas devastated by war. It was our plan to do emergency work, such as feeding war victims, caring for the sick and injured, ambulance work, and war relief of similar nature. Congress denied us this opportunity. In June of 1943, I was drafted and sent to Civilian Public Service camp near Fort Collins, Colorado. There I was to do soil conservation work. After six months at this camp, I applied for a transfer to a mental hospital because I felt that my work there would have greater significance. I was transferred to the State Hospital at Kalamazoo, Michigan. There I served as a mental hospital attendant for two and a half years.

Shortly after my entry into Civilian Public Service, I began to question the compromising nature of my position. In the years that followed I became increasingly aware that I should take a clearer position against war than I could do by allowing myself to be conscripted.

Man's Worst Crime

I think the destruction of human personality and soul by whatever means is the worst crime that can be committed by man. Man's inhumanity to man is the largest evil that exists. War is a phenomenon in which man exhibits probably the worst behavior which is possible to him. Regardless of the reason, man damages and destroys other people and himself in a rite which severs his relation between himself and his fellow man, and between himself and the God of ultimate truth and justice.

I think it is possible that such things as democracy, true religion, and those aspects of our culture, both material and non-material, which I value highly, can be halted in their progress or set back many years by war. People who have studied the problem even say that it is possible that all of civilization and humanity could be destroyed and removed from existence by war.

I do not think that war in modern times will stamp out any evil philosophy or ideology. It is my opinion that if a given ideology is evil, it will probably benefit from war. But that which is good cannot benefit from that which is inherently evil. In the final analysis violence is not effective. Violence may repel invaders but in the process of so doing it is probable that the "defenders" may acquire many of the evil attributes of would-be invaders. And then, too, after such a struggle both parties to battle have to co-exist. This is one world and we are wise to know how to get along with each other and to use that knowledge.

The Pacifist's Task

I have sufficient faith in humanity to believe that a large share of any people from any culture or society existing in modern times would respond favorably to sincere and firm pacifist effort. It is a basic tenet of Christianity, that all men, however evil, have a spark of the divine within them. It is the work of the pacifist to kindle that spark. To bring out the divine, or the humanity, in many humans is admittedly a very difficult task. I have few illusions about the ease or simplicity of pacifism as a method of social action. But if such action is to be really effective, it must be non-violent in character, and it must contain the element of love and genuine concern for those who are being dealt with.

I must admit that the peace I desire is more than mere absence of armed conflict. Christian peace consists of more than mere refusal to participate in physical violence. Real peace, I think, can come only when people want peace and are prepared to make the necessary sacrifices. Such peace probably is not possible for the people of modern times as I know them. Some type of moral reconstruction is a prerequisite to peace. Peace cannot be legislated. The Christian may recognize this moral reconstruction as a new turning to God, regeneration, spiritual reawakening, or some similar phenomenon which is necessary to personal and social peace.

But, even if pacifism with its concern for human personality and life did not create in others a new sense of responsibility, appreciation of truth, and sense of value; even if pacifism did not "work," I still could not participate in the deliberate destruction of people. People are the highest of God's creations and I cannot kill them.

> ....I do not ask for special privilege. If there be any truth in the position which I hold, I am satisfied that this truth will not live or die with anything that may happen to me.—Austin Regier.

Personal Responsibility

A basic principle of Christianity is the theory of individual responsibility. A man cannot throw off his shoulders the responsibility for his action. I cannot say that the state, the church, my associates, my environment, or any other circumstances are responsible for my moral behavior. The United States government affirmed this principle rather dramatically when, at the Nuremberg war crimes trial, it maintained that the nazi criminals were themselves individually responsible for the crimes they committed. The justice of the United States held that these criminals could not lay the responsibility for their acts upon higher authority, the law of the land, the exigencies of war, or any other circumstances.

We have said that it was the duty of the German people to refuse to cooperate with their government when it and its representatives committed such crimes against humanity as the persecution of the Jews, labor groups, religious groups, and finally anyone who did not toe the nazi mark. And it was the duty of the German people to disobey their government when it did become corrupt and evil. The fact that theirs was a totalitarian government makes no difference. That they would face concentration camps and probable death for opposing their own government makes no difference.

The Christian and Law

The principle which says that the German people were individually responsible for the actions they committed is a general principle which is not limited to the Germans. It is the nature of truth to be universal. We in America are also heirs to this truth.

It is also our responsibility to examine our government. The demands it makes upon us we must examine very carefully because we are individually responsible for the actions we perform even if we do so at the command of government, be it democratic or totalitarian. If I commit a misdeed at the command of my government, I am no less responsible than I am if I do it independently of such a command.

It is the duty of the responsible Christian citizen to examine carefully each law which affects him. If a given law is poor or even bad, but has no great moral implications, it would be best to obey such a law. If the law has a moral frame of reference and is a good law, the responsible Christian citizen will obey such a law and may even have been meeting its requirements before it became law. However, if this law is bad and does have moral implications, it is his duty to himself, to the best interests of his community and country, and to his God, to disobey such a law and to do so openly and conscientiously.

Non-Combatant Service

A legal classification has been provided within the armed forces which gives one the opportunity to avoid directly killing people. The I-A-O classification provides for non-combatant service within the armed services. There are several advantages which this classification holds. The pay is similar to that received by any other member of equal rank in the armed forces. After the war, veterans of non-combatant service received the benefits of the G.I. bill of rights. But I could not during the war, nor can I now, accept this type of service because it is a necessary part of the total military force. Without the non-combatant, war could not be fought. For purposes of discussion from war or preparation for war such a position is not possible.

During the war the draftee who was a conscientious objector had the alternative of serving his country in what was known as "work of national importance." The conscripted conscientious objector was to perform his work under civilian direction. This program, known as Civilian Public Service, allowed one in some instances to do important and constructive work. The service in hospitals, experiment units, fire fighting units, etc., is well known. But this program rested upon conscript labor. It was a direct product of a draft to obtain men for fighting a war. The purpose of that draft was not to get men into important humanitarian work. The only purpose of the war draft was to facilitate the prosecution of the war.

Purpose of the Draft

Armies for modern war are built by men conscripted for this purpose. Today we have in our land a system of conscription. This draft is not to fight forest fires. It is not to build roads. It is not for education. It has one primary purpose, and that is to raise an armed force and to indoctrinate our youth with militarism. It is to prepare the American public for what is being made out to be the inevitability of another great war.

In the present draft law there is a provision for conscientious objectors which is somewhat similar to that of the war draft. The 4-E classification (which I accepted during the war) now grants blanket deferment to conscientious objectors. Presumably, I would have no difficulty obtaining such a classification if I were to register. The reason I cannot accept such a classification is primarily that to do so I must register and thereby give assent to military conscription. A secondary reason is that while I feel confident that I could come within the legal definition of a conscientious objector, I could not accept the special privilege granted to me as a "religious" objector, but denied to other men whom I believe to be equally conscientious but do not share my particular religious beliefs.

Contemporary society is so complex that one encounters extreme difficulty in completely dissociating himself from it at any point. The problem of the pacifist's attempt to remove himself completely from all that is war or war-making is difficult and probably impossible. The consistent pacifist should refuse war taxes, personal service, etc. A slight knowledge of economics reveal that anyone actively engaged in any productive effort is working for the benefit of the total economy, and in this case it is a war, or war-making, economy. But this does not mean that the pacifist is justified in throwing up his hands in despair and going along with war-making in all of its aspects.

Personal Responsibility of a Pacifist

In those areas where I am bound, by my own weakness, or by the necessity of life, to compromise my pacifism, I must humbly ask my fellow men and my God for forgiveness. In those areas where I am free to choose, I cannot do that. There I must obey the God of peace and brotherhood.

The state is so constituted that it has much power over the individual. It can tax his wealth and take his property if he refuses the tax. It can make demands upon his body and place it in prison or destroy it if the individual is unwilling to comply with these demands. But the state is not all-powerful. It cannot force a man to perform an act. God has so arranged the universe that the individual human being is responsible for the acts that he himself performs.

In the final analysis there is nobody who cannot be free. There are merely those who do not want to be free. Responsibility is individual, so I cannot say that something or someone outside of myself is holding the reins to my freedom, be such reins militarism, domination by a foreign nation or power, or other evil of any kind.

It is for these reasons that I cannot obey the Selective Service Act of 1948. Such action I do not consider as a right, but a compelling duty. The imperative to disobey immoral laws applies to me as well as it did to the Germans when they were ordered to do an evil act.

I have been trying to prepare myself for a type of true service to humanity by going to school. If I am shown a need which I can fulfill better without further formal education and which is pressing enough to be more important and significant than that which I am anticipating, I will make the necessary change of vocation, and do it voluntarily. External compulsion is unnecessary. But I do not ask for special privilege. If there be any truth in the position which I hold, I am satisfied that this truth will not live or die with anything that may happen to me. —Reprinted from the Christian Century.

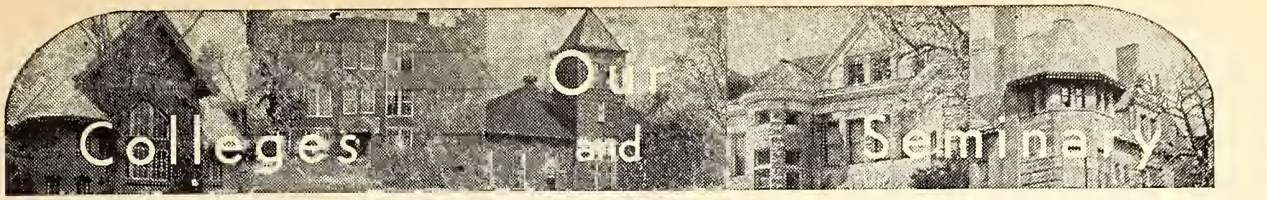
Systematic Tool Collection Urged
MCC Sponsored European Tour

Reports from various sources indicate that a good response is being given to the appeal for used farm equipment for the Mennonites in Paraguay and Uruguay. In Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, a committee of three has been appointed to direct the work, with one representative in each congregation responsible to supervise the program locally. After the tools are repaired, they are brought to a central place where they are cleaned by a steam process and then painted. Arrangements are being made to have a number of young people available each day to disassemble the tools and pack for overseas shipment. Care is taken that each piece of equipment is in good condition.

Other conference areas and communities are encouraged to plan similarly for this work. It is felt that many additional contributions can be made available if systematic collection procedures are worked out locally. The great need for these items will justify a special effort to gather as many of these contributions as possible. March 15 is the date upon which collection of tools should be completed.

Menno Travel Service Tour

Menno Travel Service is offering a sponsored tour for 30 days in Europe. The group of possibly 8 to 15 people will leave New York about March 30 and return April 30. The tour will include points of interest in England, Holland, Germany, France, and Switzerland, including the actual work of the MCC relief units in these countries. The approximate total fare will be $850. All travel arrangements will be made. Interested persons write to Menno Travel Service Akron, Pennsylvania.



Our Colleges and Seminary

BLUFFTON FACULTY AT INTER-COLLEGE MEETING

The Bluffton College faculty attended a meeting at Findlay College February 7. Faculties from Ohio Northern University and Heidelberg also attended. The speaker was Dr. Hutchins, former president of Berea College and father of its present president and Robert Maynard Hutchins of the University of Chicago. There will be two other joint college faculty meetings this semester, one at Ohio Northern and one at Bluffton.

Prof. J. P. Klassen attended a meeting of the College Art Association of America in Baltimore recently.

Ruth Hilty, relief worker from Europe home on furlough, gave a special evening program at which she showed pictures taken in Europe. Some of her pictures showed American student tours in Europe in 1947 and 1948. She spoke in chapel the following day stressing the importance of Voluntary Service being dedicated to the work of Christ.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE NEWS

Friday, February 4, Freeman Academy was host to the Inter-State Basketball Tournaments. These tournaments included Freeman and Canton, South Dakota, and Hull and Orange City, Iowa. Hull came out at the head of the tournaments. Runner-up was Canton. Orange City won the consolation game. A game between the South Dakota teachers and Iowa teachers was played. South Dakota seemingly has the better teachers.

Another of the entertainment numbers was given February 3. Howard Pierce Davis, lecturer, scholar, and philosopher, spoke to his audience on the subject of "American Values." In his lecture he stressed the folly of materialism—"Man cannot live by bread alone." He also stressed that the only way for this nation to improve its corrupt condition is through spiritual regeneration within the hearts of all individuals.

Dr. Tschetter from Yankton, South Dakota, spoke and showed pictures in chapel about the usefulness of the X-Ray, Monday, January 31. The film "Reaching from Heaven" was shown to the student body Monday afternoon.

Professor Richard Berky gave a message on "Love and its Practical Implications."

FOR THE SEMINARY: UNIQUE MISSIONARY CHALLENGE

A searching missionary message was given this week by Miss Ivy Childs of India who is serving there under the Methodist Church. From her father's side, she was a Hindu, and from her mother a Muslim, but in Christ she is a Christian who greeted us as brothers and sisters in Christ. She showed how it costs to be a Christian in India where one must break with past affiliations of family, community, and religion. The speaker affirmed her happiness in studying in America and also her sadness in discovering the prejudice against dark-skinned peoples.

Bert Smucker has been appointed to the Displaced Persons Committee of the Chicago Church Federation which is making plans to welcome people who will come over under the new government regulations.

Among our visitors the past week were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Voth of the Mennonite Central Committee in Akron and Esther Lehrman, recently returned from Puerto Rico. Monday night she showed pictures of the work in Puerto Rico, stressing the outstanding opportunity there for preaching the Gospel.

Alvin Franz, of Lind, Washington, was featured in a broadcast sponsored by the Jewel Grocery Company over WXRT-SM. Alvin Franz is employed part time by this grocery while he attends school; he was selected as one of the employees to appear on this program where he presented three baritone solos. The reception of musical programs on the SM circuit is unusually clear.

BETHEL COLLEGE

An inter-collegiate peace conference was held at the Friends University church, Wichita, on Saturday and Sunday, February 12 and 13. The program was arranged by a committee of members from Friends University, Wichita; McPherson College, McPherson; and Bethel College. Several of the Bethel faculty and students participated in the conference. Dr. J. Winfield Fretz led the opening session and he and Prof. J. Lloyd Spaulding were used as resource leaders. Students active in the program were Mrs. Henry Buller, Edith Claassen, Bertha Fast, Helen Tieszen, Harris Waltner, Leo Miller and Rev. Floyd Nunley. Over-night lodging and meals were provided by Wichita youth.

The faculties of McPherson, Bethany, and Kansas Weslyan, colleges attended the annual assembly of the four colleges held at Bethel College on Saturday, February 4. Mr. Morris Mitchell, executive-secretary of the Southeastern Cooperative League, Clarksville, Ga., was the main speaker. After a noon luncheon and a visit to the museum, sectional meetings were held.

The A Cappella Choir presented a concert in the Federated church in Whitewater, Kansas, on Sunday evening February 6. On Sunday evening, February 13, the choir presented a concert in the Gossel Mennonite church.

The three high schools of Walton, Whitewater, and Halstead, Kansas were visited on Friday, February 4, by the girls sextet, and three members of the speech department who presented dramatic readings, and their coach, Mr. Wm. W. T. Wilkoff.

Jottings

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Henry Guhr was ordained as a deacon of our church on January 16. The Bethel College choir will give a concert in the church on February 20. Ten gallons of tallow and 1282 cans of beef have been canned for relief.—Mrs. Arnold A. Plenert, Corr.

—Emmanuel Church, Moundridge, Kansas: The Ladies Mission Society observed its ninth birthday with a covered dish supper on February 1. After the meal Marvin Wasser, a student at Bethel College, told of the distribution work in France and also showed some slides. An offering for the student exchange program was taken. Robert Unruh, also a student at Bethel College, gave the message on Sunday morning, January 30. —Mrs. Dalton Wedel, Corr.

—Bethel Mission Church, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada: On January 14 ministers and other representatives of the Manitoba Mennonite Conference met in the Bethel Mission to discuss the form of alternative service to be recommended to the young men of the church in the event of another war. The week of January 2 the church observed a week of prayer. The general theme was "The Dynamic Leadership of the Holy Spirit."

—Zion Church, Souderton, Pennsylvania: The program of the Women's Misionary Society on January 26 featured our General Conference Mission work among the American Indians. Slides were shown of the work in Oklahoma and Montana. Our newly organized Junior Women's Organization is busy working on quilts, afghans, knitting socks, and making aprons.—Corr.

—West Swamp Church, Quakertown, Pennsylvania: At the annual business meeting the congregation again decided to continue the 100 per cent of THE MENNONITE. The Christmas White Gift amounted to $740. The Eastern District Conference will be held in our church the first week in May.—Mrs. A. S. Rosenberger, Corr.

—Eicher Emmanuel Church Wayland, Iowa: Brother Peter Widmer arrived home January 26 after a months visit to Europe.

—Hoffnungsau Church, Inman, Kansas: Our pastor is leading a catechism class every Sunday during the Sunday School hour. A total of $1,380 was collected during 1948 by the Sunday School to be used for relief, missions, church building fund, and education of C.P.S. men. The young people of Hebron, Buhler, and Hoffnungsau Churches have organized to meet once a month for discussions, lectures, and reports of voluntary service to be followed by a social hour.—Mrs. Albert Ediger, Corr.

—Menno Church, Lind, Washington: Rev. Alfred J. Schwartz of Monroe, Washington, director of the mission of the mission project at Sweet Home, Oregon, was the morning speaker January 23. Rev. Andrew R. Shelly, Kitchener, Ontario, will be the speaker during Easter week, April 1 to 8.—Mrs. C. C. Classen, Corr.

—Upper Milford Church, Zionsville Pennsylvania: Installation service for our new pastor, Reverend Walter H. McDowell, was held on January 23. Rev. Freeman Swartz was in charge of the program. Other ministers taking part were Rev. Ward Shelly, conference president Rev. J. Herbert Fretz, Dr. Charles Bornaman, Rev. J. Plenert, Dr. E. S. Johnson, and Rev. Wilmer S. Shelly. Musical numbers included piano and organ duets and numbers by the choir. A reception in the church basement was held following the program.—Mrs. James A. Miller, Corr.

—Bethel Mission Church, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada. Two catechism classes have been started this month. Rev. I. I. Friesen meets every Tuesday evening with one group and Rev. J. Toews every Sunday afternoon with the other. Rev. Albert Janzen was the guest speaker on January 30. He made his first stop in a tour of church schools in Canada in behalf of the Mission Board, at the Bible College in Winnipeg.

—Gospel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Rev. J. P. Suderman attended the Oklahoma Bible Academy Bible Conference recently. Miss Becker, missionary from Colmobia South America, gave a report of her work among the children.

—First Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: At the annual meeting of the church it was again decided to continue the 100 per cent plan for our church papers. The ministers retirement plan was also adopted. Sunday, January 30, Brother Alfred Schwartz spoke to us in the interest of the Sweet Home Mission project which the Pacific District Conference has undertaken. Because of the unusually severe cold our attendance in Sunday school and church services has dropped. —M. D. Linscheid, Corr.

—First Church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: Rev. Wesley C. Ewert spent the week of January 30th at the Mennonite Central Committee headquarters in Akron, Pennsylvania working with the voluntary service program. In his absence members of the senior Christian Endeavor Society took charge of the evening service. On January 16 the pastor started a series of morning sermons on "Great Christian Doctrines" and the evening messages until Easter will be centered around "The Minor Prophets." The sanctuary has been painted recently. Missionary Wilhelmina Kuyf arrived in Chengtu, China on Christmas Day having been en route since October 22.

—Belleview Church, Columbus, Kansas: Our resident pastor now is Brother Henry Thiessen from Fredonia, Kansas. His sermon on January 30 was "Receiving Spiritual Sight." Sunday evening Bible Study meetings are held each week in the church.

Voluntary Service for 1949

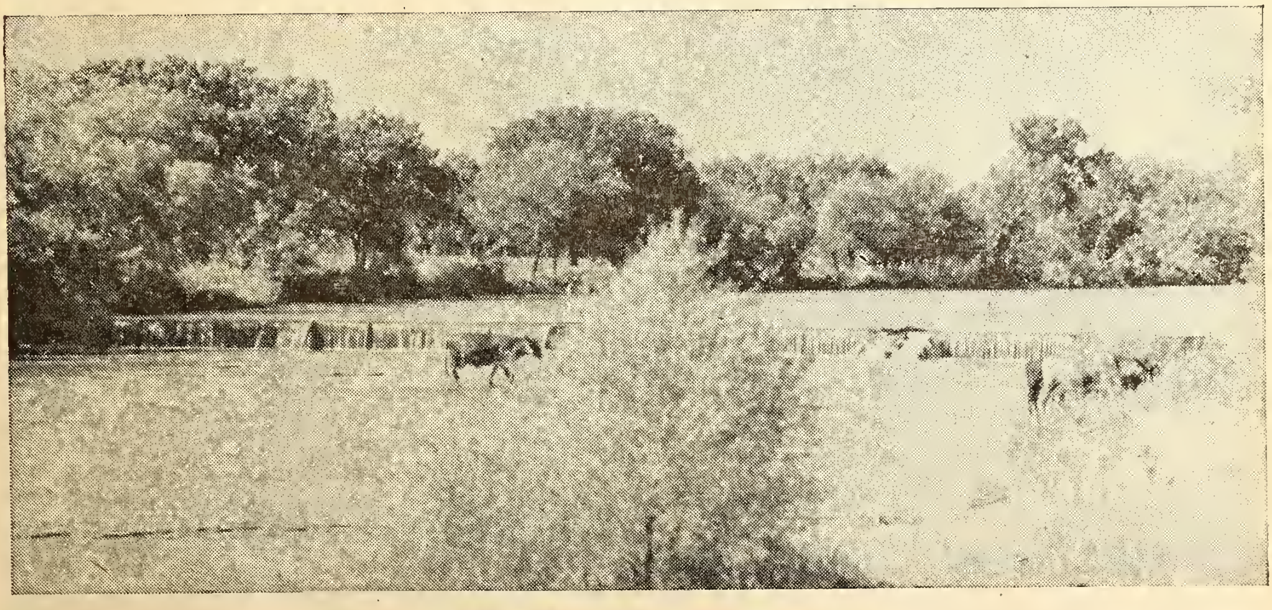
Each year, the General Conference offers opportunity for service in connection with its mission and institutional work. Here are the opportunities for youth for 1949.

By Erna Friesen, General Director, Chicago, Ill.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE SERVICE COMMITTEE plans to administer the following projects this summer: . . .

One each at the Indian Missions in Arizona, Montana, and possibly Oklahoma . . . Three to serve as Youth Teams in Illinois-Indiana, Kansas-Oklahoma, and Canada . . . One with migrants in Wisconsin . . . One in the Chicago Home Mission . . . One at the Canadian Youth Farm . . . One at the Western District Retreat Grounds . . . And one to work in the Mennnonite church in Los Angeles, California.

These units will be under the sponsorship of the various boards and committees responsible for that area of work, such as: the boards of Foreign Missions, Education, Peace, Young People's Union, Women's Missionary Association, the Canadian Youth Organization, etc.



Build the Western District Retreat Grounds

Western District Retreat Ground

The young people of the Western District purchased their own retreat grounds last year. It is hoped that volunteers will help build up the place so it may be used for retreats in late summer. The unit would continue for nine weeks or so, but it has been suggested that volunteers stay from 2 to 3 weeks each, giving more an opportunity to serve, as well, as give those a chance who can give only a few weeks' time. The main work will be to erect the necessary buildings.

Slides Available for Local Programs of Voluntary Service

Since Voluntary Service units are still new in many of our General Conference churches, may we suggest that you arrange for programs to explain them, to make known the opportunity to our young people. We have available a set of colored slides of the work done last summer. These, together with a talk by a former volunteer, would provide an interesting program. Erna Friesen, 4614 Woodlawn Ave., Chicago 15, Ill., will be glad to help locate former volunteers who might serve as speakers. A list of last years volunteers and their present addresses follows this article. The slide-set on the General Conference Units is available from Erna Friesen. The publicity folder for this summer's projects is to be sent to the churches about March 1.

Saskatchewan

Canadian Youth Farm

THIS FARM, located in Rosthern, Saskatchewan, provides opportunity for work in the Invalid Home, taking part in Young People's Retreats, teaching Summer Bible School, as well as some good, strong, physical work for which we need some masculine support. This project affords a fine opportunity to work together with our Canadian folk.

Arizona, Montana, and Oklahoma Missions

THESE Indian missions are desirous of volunteers for services, such as: summer Bible school teaching, repair work, sewing, secretarial work, visitations, etc. These units are ideal for interneship for future foreign- and home missionaries.

Indian Mission work—Montana, Arizona, Oklahoma

List of Workers in 48 Projects

LIST OF WORKERS IN GENERAL CONFERENCE VOLUNTARY PROJECTS OF 1948 AND THEIR ADDRESSES

CHICAGO HOME MISSION: Verna Vogt, Grace Bible Institute, Omaha, Nebraska; Carl Schierling, 1243 W. 25th St., Los Angeles, California; Rosemary Linscheid, Freeman, South Dakota; Doris Celeste Nikkel, Lehigh, Kansas; Elda Duerksen, Hillsboro, Kansas; Elvins Neufeld, 4215 S. Rockwell, Chicago 32, Illinois.

CANADIAN YOUTH FARM: Marie Peters, Henderson, Nebraska; LaVerne Linscheid, N. Newton, Kansas; Amy Ensz, Beatrice, Nebraska; Elaine Hanson, Arvin, California; Evelyn Stucky, Moundridge, Kansas; Maxine Krehbiel, Elyria, Kansas; Leona Friesen Janzen, Munich, North Dakota; Erdman Neufeld, Didsbury, Alberta, Canada; Henry Wiens, Tofield, Alberta, Canada.

MONTANA MISSION: Christine Duerksen, Newton, Kansas; Irene Friesen, Henderson, Nebraska; Rosa Bartel, Aberdeen, Idaho; Ella Heppner, Waldheim, Sask., Canada.

ARIZONA MISSION: Marie Krigor, W. Broad St., Quakertown, Pennsylvania; Anna Louise Boehr, N. Newton, Kansas; Phyllis Sprunger, Berne, Indiana; Herbert Peters, LaCombe, Alberta, Canada.

PEACE TEAM: David Schroeder, 103 Furby St., Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada; Ramon Jantz, N. Newton, Kansas; Bruno Epp, 715 Dudley Ave., Winnipeg Manitoba.

YOUTH TEAM: Norma Jost, Hillsboro, Kansas (Relief worker in Switzerland at present); Rudolph Martens, 4614 Woodlawn Ave., Chicago, Illinois; Bertha Millar, R. R. 4, Kitchener, Ontario, Canada; ElDoris Balzer and Eldon Epp, Wheaton College, Wheaton, Illinois.

MIGRANT: Ruth Bixel and Leonore Friesen, Grace Bible Institute, Omaha, Nebraska; Mildred Brenneman, 913 S. Ninth St., Pekin, Illinois; Charlene Unruh, Newton, Kansas; Franklin Wiig, 1334 East 68th., Los Angeles, California.

Erna Friesen, 4614 Woodlawn, Chicago 15, Illinois, is serving as General Director of this voluntary service program. Address all inquiries to her.

Youth Teams

THESE teams are to travel to designated churches which have solicited their assistance, the work with young people in building up a well-rounded youth program, be of service to the whole church as much as possible, to study, and to promote the principles of peace.

Voluntary Service calls for all types of work—laundry is a part of it.

Summer Service Project

TWO VOLUNTEERS are needed to work as a team in a migrant community in Wisconsin. Visitation is a basic technique. Vacation school programs, including Bible study, craft work, supervised recreation, all with a Sunday School and worship emphasis would be a part of the work. Spanish-speaking ability would be a great asset.

City Mission Service in Chicago

Chicago Home Missions

THESE VOLUNTEERS would be asked to teach daily vacation Bible schools, supervise recreation, do slum-visitation, take field trips, and do some studying.

Los Angeles Church

Rev. Burkholder would like to have some young people to help with some church work in his community.

The Faith That Is in Me

On January 10 Austin Regier received a sentence of a year-and-a-day for refusal to register under the Selective Service Act. The statement he made before the Court appears in the February 2 issue of the CHRISTIAN CENTURY under the title, "Faith of a Convict." Charles Rickert, of Bluffton College, was sentenced to an eighteen-months term on January 20. The following is his statement before the court. Ed.

Among all the disputes and conflicts of our time there stands one issue on which we all agree. Humans everywhere would like to see a world at peace. That, certainly, does not need to be repeated.

Rather this seems to be the question we need to discuss: What kinds of methods should we use to bring about our desired goal? In my opinion we have the possibility of choosing between two methods—two major roads—and we hope the one we choose will lead to the results we want: that is, a world at peace.

Here is one—compulsion and violence.

Here is the other—kindness and friendship.

The two roads are open and available to everyone, and everyone must choose. The way of compulsion and violence stands in obvious contrast to the way of kindness and friendship. The two roads are dramatically compared by the Great Teacher, when he said: "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you."

There they stand, side by side, clear cut and extremely realistic. Enmity, cursing, hatred, persecution on the one hand—love, blessings, goodness, prayer on the other. Maybe the words sound slightly old-fashioned, but the meaning that lies behind the words is as alive and powerful as atomic energy.

I think that Christ stands behind the way He suggested, and I'm betting my life that His way is the best way. I believe that Christ's teachings are practical and that He expects us to live up to them now.

Those who are followers of Jesus of Nazareth belong to something they call the Kingdom of God. The Kingdom of God is a State which denies evil and wrong, but announces that love and truth are the policies that rule. Evil and wrong and hatred and wrong all go together, but the followers of Jesus have denied these things.

And so, simply, and unashamedly—that is the reason I am here today. I had a decision to make—a choice between the two ways—the way of force and fear or the way of contentment and inner quietness.

The result of my decision was a letter which I took to the Selective Service Board at Lima last September. I told them I couldn't compromise.

I had decided this: it would be easier for me to give up my freedom than my Christianity.

The huge majority of American and Christians think that I have gone too far. I and a mere hundred other boys stand condemned and, possibly, misunderstood by those who do not see the same implications of the Christian religion. I have expected such misunderstanding and condemnation, and now I am ready to accept the penalties for the things that I believe.

Beyond Our Own

BERN, SWITZERLAND.—The Federal Council of the Swiss Government is creating a surplus of food and raw materials for the nation. The Economic Department has asked for an inventory of all food stocks in the country so as to be able to increase purchases accordingly. Reason for this precaution is because of the danger of a European war which would close the usual sources of supplies.

UNITED STATES.—March 6, 1949, will be observed as Commitment Day throughout the Methodist Church. The following pledge will be presented for the signatures of those who have not already signed it, "I commit myself to sobriety and good example, by adopting for myself the principle and practice of total abstinence from alcoholic beverages, as a wise way of life."

MAGDEBURG, GERMANY. — Few religious papers are being published in the occupation zones because of strict control by authorities. After permission was finally granted a paper shortage and prices prevented people from subscribing. In the entire Russian sector there are fewer than a half-dozen papers, with a total circulation of not more than 40,000. Districts of the eastern zone have no religious papers at all.

WINONA LAKE, INDIANA. — A Summer School of Missions will be held at Winona Lake, Indiana, on June 22 to 28 with courses offered in Home and Foreign Missions and Bible for adult and junior leaders. Many Central and Middle District Conference women have found these meetings to be stimuluating and inspirational. Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker represents the Mennonites on the Interdenominational Committee of the Central West for Missions which is in charge.

TEN MILLION DOLLARS is the estimated cost of the trial of Japanese war criminals which has recently come to an end. For every word of testimony taken during the two and one half years the trial lasted, the expense was more than one dollar. Says a news commentator: "The time will probably come when we will be embarrassed at all these war trials which are so similar to the dark ages when the losers always were killed."—Gospel Herald

MADRAS, INDIA.—A new code of film censorship which provides that "no picture shall be passed which lowers the moral standards of those who see it," has been set up in Madras, India, by the the minister of education. Further it says that films must not contain drinking scenes of obscene words, and should not picture gods or goddesses clad in a light and frivolous manner. A film producer remarked: "If all these rules are enforced, 90 per cent of our films will never reach the screen."

INDIANA.—The conviction of Chester Gingerich, Amish farmer who, because of religious convictions, refused to send his 14-year-old son to school, has been upheld by the Indiana supreme court, Religious News Service reports.

IN OUR GREAT INTEREST in the predictive elements in the study of the prophets we have missed the dramatic way in which these prophets spoke, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, to their nation and the contemporary rulers regarding the sins of their day. With the same conviction that they set forth the coming Messiah, they spoke forth the Word of God regarding the present time.

Have we not a similar responsibility today? True, we look forward to the glorious return of our Messiah, but dare we close our eyes to the conditions that will make His coming a dread to millions who, but for these conditions, might have found their way to Christ and Salvation. How can a Christian stand quietly by when he knows that the reports of December 16 by a sub-committee of the Hoover Commission stated that the war scare of last spring was the result of a faulty intelligence report and that the army knew long before the vote of the draft was taken that there was no crisis, but kept Congress believing there was? How can Christians stand quietly by when they know that the president's budget request for eight hundred million dollars for universal military training is set forth at the same time that an announcement comes from the army that there was such a high rate of volunteering the draft calls were being suspended for February and March. We ought to be writing our Congressmen and telling them that we see no logical reason why universal military training should be passed or why the draft should be continued.

But more than this we ought to pray for the conversion of our leaders of state to the way of Christ; we ought to be concerned about presenting Christ directly to them so that they will be able to stand against the floods of hatred that can very probably sweep away the opportunity of millions to enter the Kingdom of God.

Of course this is not the way of physical safety. It is, however, the way of ultimate rightness, and that is the only kind of real safety and security there is.—JJE

SHALL I TITHE OR SHALL I BE A STEWARD? Is there a difference? There is. We have frequently been told that we should tithe. One tenth of our money should be given for benevolences, missions, education, relief and similar causes. This is excellent. Our benevolent contributions need to be made systematically and regularly. A certain portion of our income needs to be set aside for the work of the church. but there is one aspect about this that is distressing. By implication one gets the idea that one tenth belongs to God, nine tenths belongs to me. But does it?

When one reads the parables of Jesus one gets a new picture. Always Jesus pictures man as a steward. He is entrusted with certain gifts, talents and goods. These he is to use. When the day of reckoning comes, a report is required of his stewardship. The question is never raised whether the man was a tither. The question is whether he has been a good steward. Does anything belong to the man or does everything belong to God? Has he only entrusted man with the stewardship of certain goods and talents.

The answer to the question raised in the first paragraph lies in being a steward who tithes. His tithe in this case may be more than ten per cent, in extreme cases, it may be less. However, as a steward, he never loses sight of the fact that he is but a servant of God whose every effort and purpose is to help and further the work of the Kingdom of God. Let's hear more of this emphasis on stewardship in our churches and the tithe will increase to where we can underwrite our conference budget.—DCW

THIS IS THE AGE OF ADOLESCENT, moral immaturity. We don't like to make clean-cut decisions, and after we have made them we go back on them. How evident this is in Christianity itself! We say we take Christ with all our hearts and then proceed to break the laws of the Gospel in the attempt, so we think, to uphold the Gospel. The present stir about the persecution of Christian leaders in Europe is arousing in Christians emotions of hatred. Governments will be glad to capitalize on this and start a holy war. Let the true, born-again Christian remember that he has a different warfare to wage—a warefare of love against hate, of righteousness against sin, of hopefulness against despair; and the victory in this warfare is not only not helped by worldly warfare, it is progressively hindered.—JJE

"WE SEEK AND DESIRE WITH YEARNING, ardent hearts, at the cost of our life and blood that the holy Gospel of Jesus Christ and His apostles, which alone is the true doctrine and will remain until Jesus Christ will come again in the clouds, may be taught and preached throughout all the world.

This is my only joy and the desire of my heart that I may extend the borders of the kingdom of God, make known the truth, reprove sin, teach righteousness, feed the hungry souls with the Word of the Lord, lead the stray sheep into the right path and win many souls for the Lord through His Spirit, power, and grace. Therefore we seek, to the extent of our opportunity, to make known and proclaim to all mankind the grace of God which has appeared, and His great love toward us, that they may experience with the same joy and renewing of the Spirit, and know and taste with all saints how sweet and good and kind the Lord is to whom we have come. To this end we preach as much as opportunity and possibility affords, both in day time and by night, in houses and in fields, in forest and wilderness, in this land and abroad, in prison and bonds, in the water, the fire and on the scaffold, on the gallows and upon the wheel, before lords and princes, orally and by writing, at the risk of possessions and life, as we have done these many years without ceasing."—Menno Simons

by Ruth Hilty

"Isn't it about time to withdraw our Christian aid from Europe?" To wisely take inventory of our giving, to frankly voice our concerns doesn't indicate that we're tired of denying ourselves the latest model of automobile, or a deep-freeze unit for our homes. We're still willing to sew, to share our harvests, to sacrifice of our time and money. Our giving hasn't made us poorer, and Mennonite foreign exchange students frequently express amazement that our Mennonite homes are blessed with most conveniences in spite of, or because of our world-wide program of giving.

Our people are rightly concerned that we don't overdo, or misplace our giving to the harm of our overseas friends. Therefore, they have been inquiring, "How much longer must we continue to help Europeans? Wouldn't it be wiser to concentrate giving more aid to our Mennonite refugees establishing new homes under extraordinary obstacles in South America?"

We Cannot Assume!

This is the fourth post-war year. Our somewhat belated relief worker's information frequently fails to point out retardation and progressive, changing trends in our MCC fields of operation. We are prone to measure western European recovery by American recovery, by our own private recovery within these four years. Yet we fret that supply and demands are still out of line here. And our second thought reminds us that our recovery was not hampered by the stupendous obstacles which confront Europeans: industries, crippled or ruined; all forms of transportation—plane, train, trucks, autos, bikes, etc., — ruined, grounded, or gone; heavy production, marketing, and distribution controls on farmers, on manufacturers, and shopkeepers; stringent rationing continuing to this day. On second thought, we cannot assume that Europeans, deprived for four, five, or seven years of the most primary essentials of life—light bulbs, underwear, bedding, fuel—can already have risen from a level of difficult existence" to "gainful living." Consciously and unconsciously we have been absorbing the average American citizen's views, the economist's views, yea, watching the diplomat's views about existing conditions in our relief areas.

Stop Where Governmental Agencies Stop?

Dare we, with Christian concerns, be guided and appeased by the views of the radio and press and citizen? The spirit we aim to express in our relief work, our motives for doing relief work, have not been determined by average standards, but by the standards of Christ and his way of life. Along the long, wearying road of reconstruction, our motives and aims do not allow us to be content to stop where many governmental and private relief agencies stop—having supplied two basic emergency physical needs of people, food and clothing. Ironically, little has been done by any of us to supply shelter. What additional reactions can one expect from a Christian, from our own Mennonite people, in viewing the total European needs with Christian concern?

A Shift in Emphasis

Our MCC relief workers have been serving with the commission of our people dominant in their aims, "Give a Christian 'plus' in our relief work!" Many of our people have prayed that we be aware that spiritual and social needs are as great, or greater, than physical needs, and that they long out-live the physical needs. This truth all MCC workers have experienced in all areas of operation. Therefore, MCC relief workers view our relief work as having reached a climax, with a shift in emphasis.

When Relief Centers become Churches

Our MCC Nachbarschaftsheim (Community Center) Projects, located in Heilbronn and other cities of Germany, illustrate this shift in emphasis. These centers are equipped with sewing machines, shoe repair machinery, and patching materials. Mornings and afternoons, during the week, this equipment is devoted to helping city families meet emergency repair needs. But, Sundays the centers serve as churches for various bombed out denominations. Sunday evenings and the other six evenings of the week the center provides our MCC personnel the opportunity to build a Christ-centered community program, emphasizing a growing Christian life and fellowship for families, young people, and children. Here they can begin special interest groups in Bible study, prayer, in improving church singing, in adapting the American form of Sunday school and Bible school to the European situation. Here is a workshop for Christian leaders.

Weave Christ into All Work

In our MCC projects of longer or shorter duration, for example, in our new, expanding MCC International Voluntary Service Units, in our short-term Erholungszeiten (retreats to rebuild body and soul), in our MCC children's colonies, American and European Mennonite and non-Mennonite young people unite in work, in play, in prayer, in discussion of life's probelms, in program planning and thereby both gather a larger world vision. It is another workshop, an ideal workshop, to experiment, adapt, modify, and learn how to build a Christian environment, beginning with ourselves and our place. We can weave a consciousness of Christ and Christian standards into all of work, play, fellowship, intellectual and spiritual growth, emphasizing the utilization of our talents for the church and community, and the glory of God.

We Have a Message!

In our Christian concern for giving practical expression to our belief in the Way of Christ, in the power of inner peace and the love of Christ, we have a message for European children, young people, families, yea, even for the most active, sincere Christian leaders in Europe. We have a host of our own maturing young people in America, who believe in this way, who will accept the challenge to give expression to their belief in the Way of Christ and want to join in such reconstruction.

"For such a time as this."

It is well to ponder how God has, step by step, been preparing us for just this trend in Christian aid to Europe, through our home and foreign mission work, through C.P.S., voluntary service at home, in our Sunday school and Bible school work, in our church colleges and Bible schools. Our every trial, every error and attempt at improvement in these various church enterprises to date will stand us in good stead as we face this "effective open door" in Europe. There is room to learn much from each other as, together, we permit God to make full use of us inside and outside of Europe.

Do we want to withdraw in the face of these larger tasks, larger responsiblities, and opportunities?

A "Different" World but

The Same Great Need

by David Schrag

Coming to South America and especially to Paraguay is like coming into a different world. The people speak differently, live differently, and think differently. You see extreme filth and poverty on the one hand and extreme wealth on the other. Oxen pulling carts of merchandise is a daily sight. Women carrying their vegetables, water and other wares on their head is the accepted thing. Police and military are everywhere eyeing everyone with suspicion. Houses are all built of brick and in town each place is surrounded by a stone wall. What we used to read about in history and story books we see here with our own eyes.

We do not want to leave you with the impression that here are no modern conveniences as we have them in the States.. In fact nearly anything can be purchased here that can be bought at home if you have the money. Prices are very high.

A Happy, Yet Sad Occasion

You have, no doubt, been reading about the recent group of 1700 Mennonites that left Europe on the ship Volendam for S. America. 700 of them are settling in Uruguay and the remainder came to Paraguay to settle in the already established colonies. It was a happy yet also a sad occasion to witness all these people arrive here. The greatest majority are only too happy to be able to settle down on a small place and call it their own home. Many a sad and heartbreaking story is connected with most of the immigrants. May I cite two typical examples: One middle aged mother of five children is here. Two sons and one daughter came with her to Paraguay. Her husband and oldest son were taken from her by the Russians 11 years ago, probably to Siberia. Whether they are living or dead she does not know. Another son was accidently killed in their wanderings about in Germany. Another mother is working here in Asuncion. She has three nice little girls. Her husband was also taken from her in Russia 8 years ago. She now has to work from early morning to late night to make a living and really be the type of mother to her children she would like to be. Both of these women often say, "Oh, if we only knew that our husbands were dead. Then we would at least know they are not going through terrible suffering." These people often refer to Russia as Das Land des Elend und Jammer.

Please Remember

There are between 13 and 14 thousand Mennonites in Paraguay. Nearly 5000 of these have come within the past two years. This group is starting with nearly nothing and have many hardships to contend with. They need much financial and also spiritual assistance. Please remember the work here and these people in your prayers.

Incarnating Our Heavenly Vision

by Orlando A. Waltner

It was a significant day when Paul could say, "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." Because of Paul's obedience, we too have the privilege of responding to the heavenly vision. God has given us a vision of churches, chapels and meeting houses to be built in the valleys and plateaus in the prairies and jungles and in the villages and towns of America, Africa, South America, China and India. Time shall tell whether these visions shall become actual structures of wood, brick, stone or mud, or whether they shall remain forever in the heart of a yearning and loving Father, as blue-prints only. The building of these churches, the incarnating of the vision God has given us will demand of us several things:

The Greater Part . . . by Prayer

It will mean that we shall spend more energy in praying for this work. It will be praying by the masses, farmers on tractors cultivating corn, or in the pick-up truck hauling grain to town; teachers on their way to school or in moments of relaxation during recess; housewives hoeing in the gardens or peeling potatoes for the evening meal; business men beginning the day's work or drinking coffee during a pause in their work; stenographers, clerks, mechanics, factory workers, medical workers, students, etc., will for a few moments of each day be conscious of the Church's task of world missions and will give highest expression of that consciousness by praying briefly for it. Prayers will be made for the Foreign Mission Board, for those preparing to serve in mission fields, for language students struggling with new alphabets, for missionaries on the field, for native leaders, for native Christians and for natives yet in sin. The greater part of mission work still needs to be done by prayer. Our visions will become realities to the degree we are faithful in the ministry of prayer.

Let the Church Call Youth

To incarnate our heavenly vision we shall have to send out more workers. It is through consistent praying that even greater interest and loyalty to this task will be promoted. As churches will be praying by name for those who have expressed interest in missions and a consciousness of God's call to this work, more young people will be responding to God's call. Some churches might ask two or three of their leading young people to represent the church on some mission field. God doesn't always call his workers directly. He also calls through the church. Often, however, the call becomes indistinct and unparticularized as it comes through the church. A prayerful study of mission work, and a consciousness of its responsibility in sending workers will awaken the church to the presence of consecrated, intelligent, capable youth who ought to be in mission work. Why should not the church pray about this and under God's guidance give a clear, definite call to such young people?

Not Without Equipment

But workers can't work without equipment. To fulfill our tasks we shall have to send more equipment. The forces on the field need to be mobile. Jeeps and trucks in carrying workers into untouched or neglected areas are definite assets to mission work. Tents, literature, pictures, all are essential to promote an evangelistic campaign in villages. Schools need blackboards, paper, books and teachers. Hospitals are infinitely more effective when equipped with adequate and proper instruments for diagnosing and treating disease, whether through medicine or surgery.

Not Without Intelligent Planning

Establishing and building churches cannot be accomplished without intelligent planning under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. To incarnate our vision of yet unborn churches lying in the heart and mind of Christ, we may have to work faster. Perhaps God doesn't want us to labor on a given area until Christ's return. Perhaps we shall have to "take up" mission work and transplant it to new ground, even before the church set-up in the first area has been fully perfected. Based on experiences and information by missionaries on the fields, our colleges, Bible schools, and seminary ought to study intensively the possibility and method of withdrawing our mission forces to make them available to yet unreached areas. The question of when and how the mission is to dissolve into the church needs conscientious study. The immensity of the problem should not deter us from studying it seriously and taking decisive steps once we believe the Lord has given us understanding on this probelm. Neither sufficient money nor personnel is at our disposal to operate in many fields. But by God's grace we can use what we have to perhaps even greater effect. Many churches need yet to be built—even in areas we know not yet that the Lord has called us unto. Dare we hope for the day when our Conference will be able to say, "We were not disobedient to the heavenly vision?"

* * * *

A Note from the Field: P. W. Penners write that they will leave Calcutta in March or the first few days in April. All mail should now be sent to them at Hillsboro, Kansas. They send hearty thanks for Christmas greeting cards sent them and request the readers' prayers for a safe journey and voyage.

Twentieth Century Heresy

The "Believe-Only Heresy" is more common among us than many realize. Unfortunately it is propagated in the name of evangelism and soul-winning. We do need more stress laid on evangelism. Too many of our churches are zero churches—no new members from the outside are added all year. Many of our people are dissatisfied with such a state of affairs. Something is terribly wrong and they are rightly disturbed. Merely "holding our own" is not a New Testament program for the Church of Jesus Christ.

We are saved by Faith.

By stressing the simplicity of this doctrine of Salvation, our friends are right. We can never do anything for which God owes us a reward; much less can we earn our salvation. It is a free gift. But it is an oversimplification, and overemphasis of this fact that leads to the heresy.

What is Faith?

If we are saved by faith, then we must define faith. Faith is not mere intellectual assent, although true faith is certainly based on facts. Nor is it the Sunday-school boy's "believing what ain't so." Nor is it "a leap into the dark."

Faith IS What we Live By.

If I do not live according to my faith, how can I claim to have faith? If I believe in a medicine, I will take it. If I do not take it, no one will believe I have faith in it. The faith I see in the New Testament works. A believer becomes a "Jesus man." He is henceforth "a new creature." He is "born again"; has new interests—new viewpoints—new habits—new loyalties. I may say I believe in Jesus only when I surrender my life to Jesus. "Ye are my friends if ye DO," Jesus said. "I will shew you my faith BY my works."

He was Saved Three Months Ago.

"He hasn't drawn a sober breath since. But he was saved." This is quoted from a rescue mission worker. Such talk borders on blasphemy. If a man is saved he will bring forth the fruits of that salvation. There is no room here for subterfuge or trickery. How subtle is the false logic of some: If a man says he believes then he has faith! If he has faith he is saved. If he is once saved he is eternally secure. Therefore, nothing he does or does not do after that matters.

Beware of the believe-only heresy.—The Gospel Herald.

Under Orders

During the past year, Reverend Loewen has been serving under a license issued by the Central Conference. The Ministerial Committee of the Central Conference has approved the ordination of Rev. Esko Loewen to the full ministry. The service of ordination is to take place, Sunday, February 27, at the Topeka Mennonite Church with Rev. R. L. Hartzler and Dr. S. F. Panabecker officiating.

The Story of
since 1944

NEW WINDSOR, MD.—More than five thousand heifers and bulls have been shipped to needy families and institutions overseas since the Hiefer Project committee began work here in 1944.

In the annual report of the committee, issued by Benjamin G. Bushong, executive secretary, it was revealed that 1,005 animals were shipped in 1948; a total of 793 in 1947; a total of 2,751 in 1946; and 750 during 1945 and the latter part of 1944 . . . a grand total of 5,299.

Italy Highest

Italy has received the largest number of animals, with 1,576 head having gone to this country. There have been two reasons for this, Bushong said. First, Italy is agriculturally poor. Second, shipping to this nation has been readily available.

Distribution in 1948 included 768 head to Italy; 160 to Poland; 47 to Japan; 11 to Puerto Rico; 8 to Austria; 6 to Greece; and 5 to Ecuador.

Bulls have gone principally to agricultural stations to be used in artificial insemination programs.

Bushong pointed out that one of the reasons why 1946 was a banner year for the committee was that UNRRA was then active in shipping livestock. At present the committee must pay its own shipping costs unless arrangements can be made with individual nations to bear such costs.

Plans for 1949 include the shipping of heifers to a reception center for refugees in Venezuela.

In addition to heifers and bulls, 2,395 goats have been shipped by the Heifer Project committee. The majority of these have gone to Japan.

'Small' Investment — Huge Dividends

"Considered from the angle of dollars and cents our program may not seem to be a large one," Bushong said, "But its benefits will be long lasting Over the years ahead we will have improved the dairy cattle in the areas into which we have shipped; we will have increased milk production; we will have contributed to the health of the people; and we will have made more fertile farms. What's more important, we will have created untold goodwill and forged strong bonds of friendship between Christian people in America and those in other nations around the world."

An Ecumenical Endeavor

The heifer project was originally launched by the Service Committee of the Church of the Brethren. At present, a large number of religious groups are cooperating, including the Evangelical and Reformed Church, American Baptist Home Mission Society, Mennonite Central Committee, Rural Life Association, Fellowship of Reconciliation, National Catholic Rural Life Conference, Methodist Committee for Overseas Relief, and others.

Time Will Tell

by R. L. Hartzler

The past decade and a half has been a period of almost continuous economic ascendancy. As a rule each successive year witnessed new highs in markets, wages, and incomes from various sources. True, there was a bit of lull in the late thirties, but the outbreak of war in Europe gave industry a new impetus, and both production and prices rose rapidly. Price fixing during the war slowed the upward trend somewhat, but fell considerably short of bringing it to a standstill.

Plateau? Desert? Plunge?

Now indications are that we have reached the end of that era; so that after fifteen years of successively higher levels of income, we must now adapt ourselves to something different. Whether we are about to move out upon an economic plateau, make a gradual descent, or take an abrupt plunge, no one seems ready to predict with any measure of certainty.

During this period of economic flux Central District Conference contributions for Christian purposes also rose markedly from a total of $32,000 in round numbers for the conference year ending June 30, 1933, to $147,000 in 1948. How the ratio of contributions given to income received in 1933 compares with that of 1948 is another matter. The Goodwill Foundation states that during the low depression era the over-all giving of Christian America for benevolent purposes was 5 per cent of the national income, whereas in 1948 it dropped to 1 per cent. Dare we assume that we did notably better than this average?

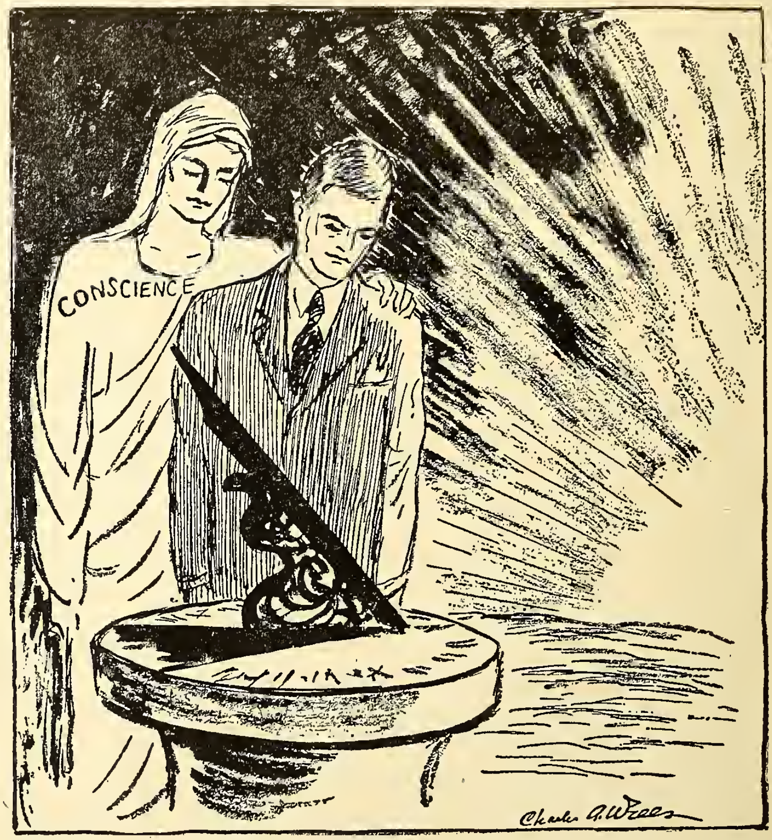
Did We Progress?

In late years especially it was, after all, comparatively easy to give. People who planned their benevolences at the beginning of a year usually found they could do it without strain and perhaps even add to the amount. This encouraged setting the stake a bit higher for the ensuing year. But as we view the prospect of a changed situation, the question becomes pertinent whether we really went farther in our giving than to merely draw upon the surplus.

Already Shortages

That such change as now seems in prospect will have definite implications on the ongoing of our whole Christian enterprise should be readily perceived. Already it seems to have had its effect on giving. For some months past the Mennonite Central Committee has faced the most critical shortage of funds for carrying on the relief program that it has yet known; Bluffton College had a harder squeeze in order to finish the 1947-48 school year in August with a balanced budget than it has known for years; two months before the close of the last fiscal year of General Conference, only 59 per cent of the total budget for all purposes had been received at the conference headquarters; and as this is written two of our larger churches are having to put forth special efforts to keep their operating account in balance. Part of this may be due to lessened income. We have a notion that up to this time much of it has been due to an altered psychology, a different frame of mind, more uncertainty and less of the easy optismism of recent years.

It must be borne in mind in this respect that while from now on incomes for many may lessen, or for other reasons contributions may sag, the costs of the Christian enterprise will still remain high. This will be true all along the line from the local church and its program, to our institutions, and on to the limits of our far-flung program of missions and relief. Some time ago a statement came out of Washington, D.C., predicting that in 1949 prices of farm products would very likely decline, but that probable increases in wages, or other costs of processing and distribution would largely offset those effects and keep the consumer's price level largely where it had been.



Continuing High Costs in Christian Work

So, the prospect which we face is, on one hand, one of probable lessened income and consequent narrowed margin between receipts and expenses, particularly for our rural people; and on the other hand, a continuing high cost of operation for all phases of Christian work. In other words, we bid fair to face an exacting situation and if we are to keep the enterprise going, steady and strong, we must needs rise to a different ratio between incomes received and gifts given than we have known in years just past. Drawing upon surpluses may no longer suffice. To meet that kind of situation, we need two things:

Sacrifice Even More

First and basically, we need a larger measure of Christian grace than may have prompted most of us while the flush time was on. If indeed we have been giving sacrificially, we need grace enough to sacrifice even more, and do it gladly. If we have given casually and without sense of real cost, we then will need an infilling of grace which induces us to give until we feel it, and do it with Christian joy. Woe be to us if we lightly let His cause suffer. If the love of Christ for truth and righteousness and for every distressed or erring soul enters in and constrains us, we will have no trouble at this point. Should it not be a matter of deep personal concern to each of us to make certain that His love does dwell in our hearts and so prompts and impels us?

Assets—a Backlog of Strength

Secondly, we need that those who through these years turned surpluses into added holdings of property or increased reserves, shall now cause those assets to become a backlog of strength for our worthy and varied program of Christian service. There are in this program many outstanding opportunities for such folk to make substantial and permanent investments in kingdom service, which will help incalculably in undergirding the program for whatever lies ahead. May this indeed be the time for which God has thus been getting us ready?

Coming a bit farther in this matter of added resources through accumulated surpluses, let us take an honest and appraising look at them. How did they come to be? What accounts for their having come to pass? Two things principally—war and destitution. We know full well how the call for more and more goods to be poured into the gaping maw of war with its destruction and awful toll of bloodshed, suffering and death, caused prices to rise and incomes to swell. And after the war, shortages here and the grim and unspeakable lengths of destitution and hunger abroad presented a huge demand for the products of factory and field and so kept prices and incomes high.

The dip in the grain markets which came this fall would have come one, two, or more years ago had it not been for the heavy demand created by want in lands abroad. Those who watched the markets know how, when the government announced it would begin buying for foreign export, the grain pits swarmed and prices turned sharply upward; and as soon as word came that such buying would cease or taper off, markets fell.

Spilled Blood and We Profit!

Can anyone whose mind and heart have been sensitized by the spirit of Jesus look upon his accumulated resources accruing from a combination of such havoc-working causes and not feel inwardly disquieted? Does it not seem that there is some kind of disturbing connection between the spilled blood and ravished lives of millions of God's creatures on one hand, and these goods which have multiplied among us on the other? Should anyone be able to complacently accept and hold such accumulation as being his due by a mere turn of fortune? Can anyone escape such disturbing reflection by trying to hide behind the fact that the contributing factors were not of his making, or were beyond his control?

Is not such escape and consequent spiritual release to be found rather in the commitment, appropriation, or actual turning over of substantial portions of such holdings for the firmer establishment and larger promotion of our kingdom enterprises? Does it not mean that such properties and securities should now be made to accrue to the benefit of our institutional and service programs, either in the form of immediate transfers, annuties, or bequests? Will anything less than that offer due penance and keep spirits free from the blight of materialism?

Just What Happened to Us?

This brings us to a question which has weighed on the minds of Christian thinkers as to just what really happened to American Christians by the dual impact of war and prosperity. Peoples in time past, ancient and modern, have been markedly affected in spirit by either one of these alone. We have had both together. We may think we have not been unduly affected, but we must consider that it is part of the "deceitfulness of riches" (Mammon) to conceal its inroads from the ken of the very ones whose spirits it has most invaded. Hence the highway admonition often seen to "Test, Don't Guess" is a good one here.

What is the test? How shall one go about to find out? Some yeas ago a gripping little book appeared entitled "Money, the Acid Test." The burden of its contention was that one may profess much, or believe much about his Christian spirit and stature, but the real test comes when the call of Christ and the needs of His cause touch him in the realm of economics. How true! Let any one who professes that Christ is master over himself and what he has, prove that mastery by what he does with what he has for the cause of Christ. Until then he can not be sure. How wise it had been if the rich man in the parable had made that test and frankly faced the results.

Time Will Decide for Us

If we shrink from making it, let us not think we shall thus escape it; for Time will eventually make it for us. On my study table I have a mechanical calendar so constructed that pressure on a bar or section at the top of it causes a small plate to flip from the top to the bottom of an open panel at the front, thus revealing the number of each successive day of the month. The maker seems to have found it necessary to have an equal number of such stages and accordingly inserted an extra one which always comes to light between the last day of one month and the first day of the next. On this plate appears the interesting citation, "Time makes all things clear." So every time I move the instrument forward to indicate the first day of a new month, I am confronted again by the arresting fact that Time does have a way of bringing things to light as they really are.

The fact is pertinent to our thought here. Time applies in its own keen way the tests which we may demur to make, and sets forth its findings in bold characters which we, and possibly others, may see. It is even so in respect to the question of what spiritual impact a war-born, destitution-extended prosperity has made upon us. When or if conditions become such that it requires a considerably larger proportionate share of what we have, or receive, or seek to keep our churches

Current Migration to Canada, 4227

Explanation to D. P. Sponsors
Brook Lane Farm Notes

Canadian Board Carries Important Roll in Refugee Program

AKRON, PA. The Mennonite Central Committee and the Canadian Menonite Board of Colonization are working in close cooperation in the current migrations to Canada. It is estimated that to cover transportation costs for the 4227 refugees who have thus far come to Canada, the Mennonite relatives in Canada have advanced a total of $822,000. These immigrants have been located in the several Canadian provinces, and may be classified into the following catagories: close relatives, 3,832; sugar beet workers, 253; farm workers, 66; woodworkers, 41; domestics, 29; and mine workers, 6. Many of the immigrants are already makin good progress in repaying their immigration debts.

The Canadian Board was organized in 1922 for the purpose of assisting the Russian Mennonites to immigrate to Canada. In close co-operation with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, this organization succeeded in bringing to Canada, during the years 1923 to 1930, over 20,000 Mennonite immigrants, including some from Germany, and other European countries, also some who came via China, Mexico, and Africa. Most of these immigrants were settled on the land in Canada and they are now in a position to help their relatives and friends among the displaced people in Europe.

To Sponsors of Mennonite D. P. 's

A number of persons who have offered housing and employment for Mennonite displaced persons who may enter the United States have mentioned that it is not possible to hold open the housing and employment situations indefinitely. We can very well appreciate this situation, and therefore make this statement to all persons who have offered housing and employment for Mennonite displaced persons.

If it causes inconvenience to continue holding open housing and employment opportunities, we would suggest that you write the Akron office. We have in some cases secured alternative housing and employment when the original assurances could no longer be kept open. We do not want to ask our people to undergo hardship, particularly since we cannot say definitely when the DPs will arrive. Many of the factors are beyond our control.

Although we hope that the assurances thus far given can be held open longer, we trust that you will write us if your particular situation necessitates withdrawing either housing or employment.

Recent Relief Shipments

During January the following relief material contributions from the United States and Canada, with total evaluation of $129,123.89 left port: To China, 90 tons flour; to Sumatra, ½ ton miscellaneous supplies; To Ethiopia, ¼ ton miscellaneous supplies; To Poland, 12 tons clothing, bedding, shoes, soap, mending material; To the Philippines, 1½ tons clothing, soap; To French Zone Germany, 20 tons raisins and 2½ tons clothing, bedding and shoes; To British Zone Germany, 25½ tons canned meat and 41 tons mixed food.

Harness Parts Acceptable in Equipment Program

There have been a number of inquiries as to whether harness hardware is wanted by the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay and Uruguay. The distinction should be made that while harness hardware is acceptable and useful, complete harnesses cannot be shipped and therefore should not be contributed.

Relief Personnel

Wilbert Lind, of the MCC Unit in China, is to succeed Dale Nebel as Director of that Unit. David Block of Winnipeg, Manitoba left on February 3 for France.

Brook Lane Farm Notes

Several patients have been admitted to this MCC mental hospital, and a number more have been accepted for admission in the near future. The staff of attendant, and workers endeavor to give personal, sympathetic care which will be conducive to recovery. The Nursing Supervisor, Mrs. Helen Kirchhofer, is conducting a class for the attendant group in Mental Hygiene, in which much interest is being shown. Dr. Prager, the Psychiatrist, also addresses the class periodically.

Voluntary Service Worker Assignment

From the second Voluntary Service Training School at Akron, fourteen young people went forth to give a year or more of service in the name of Christ. They go to four different projects. Marvin Bartel, Henry Schrock, Pete Yoder, and LeRoy Nisley go to the Gulfport unit. George Bohrer, Rolland Ediger, Lawrence Harder, and John Hershberger are initiating a new V. S. unit at a "boystown" for criminally-minded boys at Mt. Princeton Commonweal School at Nathrop, Colorado. Galen Flickner, Henry Jantzen, Lee Jr. Hershberger and Lester Dintaman are going to Skillman State Village for Epileptics in New Jersey. The two girls of the unit, Alfrieda Regier and Elizabeth Regier, will be joining the Mexico unit, helping in housework of the hospital and home.

and our program going forward, then Time will be applying its discriminating test; and by it we shall then know, as now we are known.

Fifteen years ago we earnestly longed for the time to come when we might enjoy a more adequate portion of the necessary means of life. Now for some time we have passed quite beyond that into the realm of actual abundance. Will that accumulated abundance now be made to contribute to His glory; will we thus prove that we have come through with our spirits untarnished and our devotion strong; or will the testing time reveal that it has been too true of us, as was said of men of old time, "He gave them their request; but sent leanness into their soul" (Ps. 106:15)? Time will tell.

BETHEL COLLEGE

President Ed. G. Kaufman left on Friday, Feb. 11, for Chicago where he attended the meeting of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary Board. From Chicago, he proceeded to Bloomington, Ill., where the General Conference Council of Church Boards are meeting. Other faculty members attending the sessions in Bloomington are Dean H. A. Fast, Dr. R. C. Kauffman, Dr. J. Winfield Fretz, Dr. Cornelius Krahn, and Rev. J. J. Enz.

The Music Department of Bethel College presented Burt Russell, tenor, in a graduate recital on Monday evening, Feb. 21, at 8 p. m. Among his selections, Mr. Russell sang four solos from Handel's "Messiah."

Three men's glee clubs have been organized on the campus and together presented their first concert Friday, Feb. 18, in Memorial Hall. The White House glee club has Walter Jost as its director; Barrack's glee club, John Gaeddert; and Goessel Hall, Harold Moyer. To conclude the concert the three glee clubs combined in a mass chorus for several selections.

Several classes have made field trips to surrounding cities during the last few weeks. Miss Marjorie Ruth and her class in Principles of Geography went to Hutchinson, Kansas to visit the salt mines. Two classes, Interior Decoration, taught by Miss Lena Waltner, and the class in Furniture Design, taught P. R. Kaufman, went to visit various furniture establishments and interior decorating concerns in Wichita. The class in Introduction to Social Work, taught by Dr. J. Winfield Fretz, took a two-day trip to Topeka and Kansas City visiting hospitals, rehabilitation centers, and welfare agencies. While the group was in Kansas City they presented a program in the Old Mennonite church. The members of the church provided over-night lodging for the Bethel College students.

Dr. J. E. Hartzler, visiting professor of Philosophy and Religion, went to Meno, Okla, for the week-end of Feb. 13 to speak in the church there.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Some of the high spots in relation to public meetings at the College the remainder of the year include the following:—February 21, Herbert Renison, Pianist; March 27, Vesper Service, Laurence Burkhalter, violin; April 8, Goshen College A Cappella Chorus; April 10, Seven Last Words, Vesper Choir; April 19, Dr. Francis S. Moore, Organist; May 1, Vesper Service, Dr. J. A. Huffman; May 28-30, commencement activities.

Professors I. W. Bauman, Paul Shelly, J. S. Schultz, Lloyd L. Ramseyer, and Harry Yoder attended the General Conference Council of Church Boards meeting at Bloomington, Illinois recently.

The College Church participated in a union youth service of the Bluffton churches Sunday evening February 6. The College Church is a student organization which meets on Sunday evenings.

Prof. Paul Shelly attended the meeting of the Council of Religious Education at Columbus, Ohio, February 7-9.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

The week-end of February 12 was extremely busy one with the meetings of the Young People's Union of the General Conference, the annual meeting of the Seminary Board of Trustees, and the sessions of the Doctrine and Conduct Committee.

In his report to the Board of Trustees, President Pannabecker described the year by year development of this institution. Starting in 1945-46 the Seminary opened with seventeen students, in quarters rented from Bethany Biblical Seminary, and with only one full time instructor-administrator. The second year 1946-47, marked the enlargement of the regular faculty by one additional person, the transfer of the old Witmarsum library to Chicago, and the purchase of our main building at 4614 Woodlawn. Last year, 1947-1948, two new faculty members and a librarian were added, two more buildings were purchased, sufficient room was secured in the property purchased to take care of needs. This year, the fourth year, finds the Seminary with adequate housing facilities, a staff of six—including the teachers, librarian, business manager, and matron—a student body of thirty, a home for Mennonite students in the city who are not attending the Seminary, and rooms for occasional guests. Dr. Pannabecker announced that a senior class of nine will graduate in the spring with the B.D. degree This is the first senior class to receive its entire training under the auspices of Mennonite Biblical Seminary.

A startling message was recently delivered by James Renz, Temperance Secretary for the Brethren Brotherhood Board. He pointed out that two out of three Americans drink, that four million Americans drink excessively, that there are 750,000 alcoholics, compared with 600,000 cancer cases and 500,000 tuberculois cases. In the survey of Brethren youth it was found that the drinking problem is one of the ten leading problems faced by the young people of the church. The answer, according to the speaker, included: The church must meet the social pressure to drink with organizations which make it attractive not to drink, like Allied Youth; there must be an educational program using all the scientific facts available; the church must witness to the value of total abstinence; and the church must answer drinking with a dynamic program of recreation and visitation.

—Deer Creek Church, Deer Creek, Oklahoma: The catechism class taught by Rev. Richard Ratzlaff, meets at the parsonage every Sunday morning. Installation services for Otto Reussser, newly elected deacon, and Willard Reusser, new trustee, were held on January 23.

—First Church, Sugarcreek, Ohio: Sunday, January 30, the religious film "And Now I See" was shown at the evening service. February 27 was a special Mission Day with Rev A. E. Kreider, chairman of the foreign mission board speaking to us at three services. Pre-Easter services are scheduled for March 27 to April 3. Rev. George Stoneback of Fairfield, Pennsylvania, will be the speaker. Clothing for relief was collected this month.

—Salem Church, Freeman, South Dakota: The junior men's chorus presented a sacred concert on January 9. A new oil furnace has been installed in the church building. The Ladies Missionary Society is working on two projects, collecting money for European relief and the contacting of all missionaries through letter-writing.—Corr.

—Topeka Church, Topeka, Indiana: Rev. Jesse Smucker, president of the General Conference from Bluffton, Ohio, conducted a series of special meetings January 16 to 21. His messages were based on Psalm 23. Stories for the children were told each evening after which the Biblical origin and characters in the story were found by the children. January 23 two films, "The Day's Work" and "The Synagogue," based on the life and ministry of Jesus, were shown. Mrs. Catherine Nash, returned missionary from China, spoke on January 30.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Two recent speakers at our morning meeting services were Rev. G. T. Soldner, Bluffton, Ohio, on January 16, and Rev. Clarence Keer, Boys' Village at Smithville, Ohio on January 30. A volunteer project of cleaning and remodeling the church has been started by men and women of the church. Colored slides on Palestine were shown by Rev. Richert at the evening service on January 30.

—Topeka Church, Topeka, Indiana: Old white candles not used anymore are being collected to mold new large candles for special worship services.

—Barlow Mennonite Church, Barlow, Oregon: On February 6, our church entertained the Singspiration group, which meets every month. Several special numbers were given.—Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr.

—Meadow Mennonite Church, Colby, Kansas: As a result of the sales of Christmas cards, as well as assorted boxes of cards, by our young people, they were able to purchase a new Mimeograph. Reverend Regier has organized a weekly Wednesday evening meeting. While the adults have Bible study and choir rehearsal, the children have Bible study, object lessons, and a work hour in the basement. At the Christian Endeavor meeting on January 30, we voted to collect wheat for relief as a community project. The Sewing Society is making various articles to be donated for a sale to be held later in the year. —Mrs. Peter J. Franz, Corr.

—Glendale Mennonite Church, Lynden, Washington: Sixteen members were added to our church during the last year, of which two were received by baptism. The choir and our pastor, Reverend Toews, presented a musical program at Abbotsford on January 23.—Mrs. Jake Wittenberg, Corr.

—Calvary Mennonite Church, Barlow, Oregon: Edgar Nafzinger and Homer Welty, of the Pratum Church near Salem, Oregon, showed pictures on January 30 of the missionary work being done among the Cheyenne Indians at Busby, Montana. The missionary society of this church has helped this project with various gifts. A meeting was held on a recent Sunday afternoon to review and adopt the proposed constitution of the church.—Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr.

—First Church, Reedley, California: A Bethel College Fellowship Supper, attended by more than 100 guests was held in the church on February 4. We had an evening of fellowship and inspiration with Mrs. Paul Baumgartner and Miss Helga Kemnitzer, German exchange student at Bethel College, who brought us a message. Our men's chorus of 40 voices gave a concert to a full house in the Christian Church at Visalia, California, on January 30. The offering of $90 was designated for C.A.R.E. packages.—Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pennsylavnia: Mrs. Alfred Habegger, missionary to the Cheyenne Indians in Montana showed colored slides and told of her work there at the Ladies Missionary Society meeting February 20. Mrs. Habegger is the mother of Mrs. Herbert Fretz and is spending some time with our pastor and his family.—Corr.

—Beatrice Church, Beatrice Nebraska: The men of the church are now finishing the second floor of our parsonage so that it can be used as two bed rooms. Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Penner celebrated their golden wedding on January 26.—Mrs. Donald A. Claassen, Corr.

—Alexanderwohl Church, Goessel, Kansas: Our relief committee, along with ninety-five volunteers, caned 1,882 cans of lard, 1,629 cans of meat and twenty-two cans of chicken in the portable cannery from Hillsboro, Kansas, on January 3 and 4. Peter Bartel, who served as relief worker in Krefeld, Germany, also reported to the congregation about his work there. He helped organize and supervise the distribution of food and clothing. He stated that the people there often expressed their thanks for food by sending letters or bringing flowers and gifts to the relief workers. This year they are helping those persons in Krefeld who cannot earn money, the old people, children, the sick, and the students.

—Friedensfeld Church, Turpin, Oklahoma: The New Year was started with Bible study with Rev. H. P. Fast of Orienta, Oklahoma, as the speaker. On January 23 Reverend Flickenger and Reverend Regier were speakers in the church in the interest of the Bible Conference at Oklahoma Bible Academy. The Ladies Mission Society has been busy recently doing relief sewing.—Mrs. J. G. Unruh, Corr.

—First Church, Nappanee, Indiana: Rev. Jesse Hoover was guest speaker in the church on January 30, talking on "M.C.C. Relief Around the World." A pot-luck dinner was held here February 2 at which time the women of the church and guests from the Methodist Sewing group mended clothing for relief. The Women's Missionary Society showed the film, "My Name is Han," a film from China with an all Chinese cast. A music institute, under the direction of Prof. Russell A. Lantz who teaches music at Bluffton College, will be held here March 24 to 27. Rev. Harold Ratzlaff will be our speaker for the meetings to be held during Holy Week in April.

—Stirling Avenue Church, Kitchener, Ontario—The Brotherhood has set up a committee whose work is to supply transportation to and from church for all meetings.

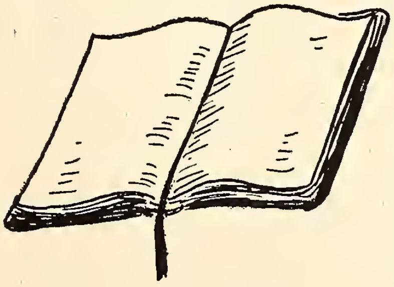
How We Got Our Bible

How did Paul's letters become a part of our New Testament? Here is the second of a series of articles on how the Bible came to be as we know it.

by Jacob T. Friesen, Beatrice, Nebraska

Only a few families gathered for worship and study. They invited others but with little response. Witnessing for Christ was difficult. Pagan worship and immoral practices held the entire city in their grip. One man's enthusiasm kept the group together.

Tychicus, a wealthy Jewish merchant of the ancient city of Ephesus, had traveled widely. During the ministry of John the Baptist he passed through Palestine. Deeply impressed by John's message, he offered himself for the baptism of repentance. That same day he saw a man baptized who was pointed out by John as the world's sin-bearer. On a return trip he listened at great length to Jesus teaching the multitude and healing all kinds of diseases. Returning to Ephesus Tychicus related his experiences. He was deeply convinced that Jesus was the Messiah. Later stories of His death and resurrection reached Ephesus. Even though it seemed a little confusing to Tychicus, he continued to tell others of his faith. A number believed and these met regularly in a private home for worship and study.



Everything changed suddenly. The group heard of a certain man named Paul who was risking his life to go from one pagan city to another to preach and teach. Tychicus was certain that Paul was also a follower of Jesus. The small group began praying that God would bring this fearless preacher to Ephesus. Their prayer was answered. One day Paul knocked at the door of Tychicus' house. Paul had come to bring the news of Jesus Christ to the great city of Ephesus.

Ephesus was a wicked city. The Temple of Diana was located here. Many pagan worshipers came to take part in its unclean ceremonies and to indulge in the immoral living which was a part of it. Ephesus was also a city of refuge for criminals. Any convict or robber living within an arrow-shot of the wall of Ephesus could not be arrested. This was Roman law. This combination of pagan immorality and criminal cruelty surrounded the Christians of this city.

Paul chose to stay in this city, finding a home in the house of Tychicus. Paul told the little group the whole story of Jesus and gave an accurate account of his death, resurrection, and ascension, of pentecost and the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit. This was new to all of them. After receiving the proper instruction the entire group was baptized and received the Holy Spirit.

Through the efforts of Paul and the blessing of God a church was established. Many heard the good news. As the church grew, oppostion increased. When Paul left, Tychicus and the new converts came together regularly for worship, study, and encouragement. They grew in spiritual strength as well as in numbers.

Paul was aware that this group needed continued guidance. After establishing churches he kept in contact by writing letters of encouragement and instruction on special problems. These letters were read and reread. Often they were copied and sent to other groups. No one but God knew at the time that these letters would become a part of the New Testament Scriptures, known to us as the letters of Paul. Other church leaders wrote similar messages under the guidance of God's Spirit. We know them as the Epistles of Peter, John, James, and Jude.

During this time God was gathering and preserving the facts of the life of Jesus. These were to guide new converts of the first century—of all time. After some of the apostles had died, men of God were lead to record the facts of Jesus' life while the facts were still generally known. John Mark, the nephew of Barnabas, was such a man. He perhaps had spent much of his time with the Apostle Peter. Later he wrote the stories and facts as Peter presented them. This we know as the Gospel of St. Mark.

Matthew, the apostle, was a Jew. In his zeal to win his brethren and preserve the facts of Christ's life, he was lead by God to write a life of Jesus, presenting Him as the "expected One"—the Messiah. His writing has been preserved for us as the Gospel According to St. Matthew.

The gentile physician, Luke, was learned in the Greek language and culture. He became attached to the Missionary Paul. Through Luke's accurate research and Spirit-filled writing another account of the life of Jesus has come down to us. His obedience to God led him to record accurately the experiences of the early church. These we can now read in the book of The Acts. (continued on next page.)

A tradition accepted quite generally states that the Apostle John, the writer of the fourth Gospel, was the spiritual leader of the church at Ephesus at the time of his death. His deeply spiritual account of the life of Christ was written late in life. It is apparent from the purpose of the Gospel as stated in John 20:30 that he wrote for churches and people such as those at Ephesus. In the book of Revelation, written by him from the Island of Patmos, he addressed by name the churches he had in mind. God used the beloved disciple to preserve for all time the messages of the Gospel of John and Revelation.

Under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit first-century Christians gave birth to the New Testament Scriptures. Having been preserved by providential hands through distressing centuries, it now commends itself to every thoughtful reader. It remains the rule of faith and conduct for every person who will read with understanding and practice its precepts.

Jacki—the Story of a Jewish Boy

by Harold L. Weaver

Here is a story which shows that there beats in the Jewish breast the same yearnings, desires, longings as in any other. Yet, racial prejudice says there is a difference.

It seems only a short time ago that Jacki came to take his place with the other little boys at Weiler, and yet, he's gone again. And even though Pierre, a new little boy, now sleeps in his bed, there's still a vacant place in my heart for Jacki. I've felt this way before when some of "my" boys have left to return to their homes; so I know the feeling will leave me as time passes, but I can't help wondering what life holds in store for Jacki.

The fact that Jacki is of Jewish parentage will always mean something pretty big in his life. You see, Jacki's father was deported by the Germans when they occupied France, and has never returned. Jacki remembers no father. Is it any wonder that when, a short time after I became acquainted with him, he called me "papa," my heart gave a little twist? Jacki was getting to the age where he knew that his was a different life from that of other little boys, for most of them had not only a mother and brothers and sisters, but a "papa" to take an interest in their games—yes, and to discipline and to love them.

Jacki wasn't very angelic. He had a terribly persistent habit of saying "Non, non, non!" when he should have said "Oui." He had to be reminded to say "Merci, Mademoiselle," when he was given food at the table. He was usually about the last one in his dormitory to go to sleep, and was quite persistent in feeling it was his duty to keep the others awake as long as he himself lay awake. However, there have been very few youngsters here at Weiler who have responded to discipline the way he did. It took only a few words of reproof to bow his head in shame and a few words more brought tears to his big brown eyes and lines around his mouth betraying his battle to be big and keep from crying.

Late last Thursday night I finally got around to taking the box marked "Jacki" down from the top of the cupboard to see if his clothes were ready for him to leave the next morning. It was a pleasure to see proof in his clothing that he was loved and cared for. I put his little black suit with the frilly collar out for one of the girls to iron, and wondered how Jacki would look and act the next morning. I had told him at noon in the dining room that he would be going home.

Rising a little early Friday morning, I took Jacki's suit downstairs and helped him dress. Of course he was excited. The six children who were leaving that morning ate breakfast with us, and had to be coaxed to finish the food given them. It was almost time to put them in the car when Jacki came to me, climbed up on my knee, and threw his arms around my neck, kissing me till I thought he'd never stop. Then I saw the tears coming to his eyes. He clasped his hands around my neck, laid his head on my shoulder, and cried. The social worker standing close by said to him, "Do you really love him so much?" Jacki's "Oui" between sobs brought tears to her eyes, too.

How should one feel at a time like that? I have little likelihood of ever seeing or hearing of Jacki again. Yet, for a time, he was very dear to me. Certainly the Bible stories, the songs, and the prayers he has learned will stay with him. God grant that the portion of His love we have been able to show Jacki may also in years to come bear fruit.

"Nothing So Unusual"

When young William Purcell Witcutt was studying for the Anglican ministry some 20 years ago, he met Roman Catholicism's famed Author-Convert G. K. Chesterton. Under Chesterton's influence, Witcutt renounced his faith. In 1934 he was ordained a Roman Catholic priest, and was assigned to St. Anne's parish, Wappenbury. His sermons and writings (including Catholic Thought and Modern Psychology) were so successful that by last year, at 41, he was regarded as close to the top rank of England's Catholic literati. Then suddenly, last October, he disappeared, and until a month ago stayed out of sight.

When he came out of hiding, he applied to the Bishop of Chelmsford, the Right Rev. H. A. Wilson, for readmission into the Church of England. Witcutt did not have to be ordained—the Church of England recognizes his Catholic orders. Last Sunday he was among the worshipers at East London's Church of St. Mary Magdalene-with-St. Bartholomew, where he has been appointed curate.

For a time Witcutt will do no preaching, but he will sit with the congregation until he "reabsorbs the atmosphere of the Church of England." Though he had little to say to the press, he admitted: "The reason I left the Catholic Church was because I grew to dislike the rigidity of the Roman Catholic faith; I prefer the broader outlook of the Church of England."

Bishop Wilson was happy over this return to the Anglican fold, but added: "This is nothing so unusual. In my own diocese alone, we have several Roman priests who have come over to us. But it is not our habit to advertise the conversion of a man from Rome to our faith. It is not our way of doing things."

Legal Problems for the C.O.

No more men are being drafted, it is true, but registration and classification has not stopped. Therefore, the following article is pertinent to the C.O. It approaches the problem of obtaining a classification from the strictly legal standpoint and not from the religious. It gives one an understanding of the basis on which a draft board considers classification.

When a registrant is presenting evidence to his draft board in order to obtain a IV-E classification he should consider two things. The regulations require the board to find (1) that he is opposed to combatant assignment or I-A and (2) that he is opposed to noncombatant assignment or I-A-O also. In answering the questions on Form 150, therefore, the registrant should keep these two points distinctly in mind.

In each of these claims what the registrant is trying to prove is his actual state of mind. If the draft board finds that each assertion is the registrant's actual state of mind the Selective Service Act requires that it classify him IV-E.

The most effective evidence of a state of mind may be a written statement by the registrant or else an old statement he wrote at a date when the possibility of a draft seemed more remote. Essays, articles, or talks written to be delivered at school, church, or young people's meetings are the kind of thing that some CO's will have.

Oral statements to individuals or groups, especially those made when the possibility of a draft seemed remote, are also good evidence. The CO may obtain written statements from these people testifying that they heard him. If he is seeking IV-E he should get statements from persons who have heard him express his views against war and I-A-O service. The letters or statements should be addressed to the local board or TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN and should say that the writer has heard the CO express such views and that he believes them to be his beliefs. He might also add how long he has known the CO to acknowledge such beliefs.

It is not necessary that the person agree with the views of the CO. It is even better if he is a veteran or a member of the American Legion or someone who takes an opposite view. Other persons might include his minister, Sunday School or public school teacher, employer, etc.

If the CO is a veteran or has only recently accepted or come to a I-A-O or IV-E position he should explain in what manner his present beliefs differ from his former stand. Letters from other persons should testify how his views have changed.

The registrant may choose to refer to his former oral statements without asking for any written letters. In that case the draft board may call upon the person to whom they were made to verify them or else the Department of Justice may verify them when the case is appealed. The persons whose names he gives should be, of course, those who he believes will testify accurately concerning his beliefs.

A general letter of character-recommendation by itself is of little value since many people of good character are drafted into the army daily. Such a letter does not show that the man is opposed to war and

by H. F. Rall

The purpose of God is new men in a new world, nothing less, and you cannot have the new world, which we all so eagerly desire, without new men. That is the final fruit of salvation. Man is God's end-product and this part of creation is still going on. We may call it re-creation, too, or re-making; for man has sinned and our human nature needs to be made over.

Two questions naturally come to us: What kind of a man is this new man? And how is the new man made?

The New Testament has much to say about the life and character of the new man, though it is not put in formal description. One finds it in the Sermon on the Mount. In the Beatitudes Jesus portrays the "sons of the kingdom." In Matthew 5:43-48 he shows what it means to be "sons of your Father." Paul has some revealing passages. 1 Corinthians 13 sets forth the spirit of love which is the very heart of the new man. Romans 8:1-11 portrays the life of moral power which comes through God's Spirit within us. Galatians 5 exhibits the new life in its sharp contrast to the old, a life of faith which shows itself in love, of freedom which means service of simple goodness and uprightness.

But the real picture is given us not in rules or abstract ideals, but by showing us one who wrought

"With human hands the creeds
In loveliness of perfect deeds,
More strong than all poetic thought."

We are to grow up in him who is the head, says Paul, to have the mind in us which was in Jesus. No man is his, he says, who does not have his spirit. We are to be sons, and what that means we see plainly when we look at the Son. Here is something far more than being forgiven and belonging to the church and getting to heaven.

And that brings the second question: How is the new man made? How does he gain this life?

On one point we are clear: the new life is from God, the new man is created by God. There is more than human decision and effort. The problem is one of power to overcome evil and to achieve the ideal; even more it is one of a new spirit, or quality of life, within us.

But the deeper question remains: How does God do this for us? The answers to this have been varied. Some have said: Let God but destroy all evil in us and it will be done. But evil is never conquered in merely negative fashion. "Overcome evil with good" applies within us as well as in relation to others. Death can be overcome by life, selfishness only by a new spirit of love, fear only as faith comes in, and goodness is never the mere absence of evil. Equally mistaken is the idea that this can be done in a moment of time, in one revolutionary experience.

God works from within, not from without; he works for us and with us, but not merely upon us. We are not made over in a moment by some mysterious and irresistible power. Moral and spiritual results come only by moral and spiritual means. We are made over into children of God by living with God as his children and with men as their brothers. What that requires of us is plain: to surrender our life to God, asking his will

Renew Publication of "The Reporter"

During the Civilian Public Service program one of the best-known publications giving information on matters pertaining to the draft was The Reporter, issued by the National Service Board for Religious Objectors. In October of this year, publication of The Reporter was again resumed, after an interval of about a year. It will carry news and interpretation of various developments relating to the present draft law. Subscription is one dollar per year; order direct from the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, 941 Massachusetts Avenue N. W., Washington 1, D.C.

Collect Paper by the Ton

In one evening, the Youth Fellowship of the Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, Pennsylvania, collected 15,005 pounds of paper. This is one of the regularly held projects of this active youth group. In the past money gathered from such collections has been used to finance a project undertaken by the youth group. One year money from paper was used to repair shoes which were then sent out for relief through the M.C.C. The success of the enterprises this Youth Fellowship undertakes depends upon adequate publicity and well coordinated effort. On paper collection night, cars and trucks were provided, the collections were made, and refreshments were served at the end of the evening's work. Such organized effort proves fruitful.

to army-medical- or other noncombatant services. If the man writes his own statement on his views, a general letter of recommendation may show that he is truthful and support his written statement in that way.

and following it; to open our life to his Spirit, knowing that he will give that Spirit to us and live in us; to live in fellowship with him—in prayer, in thought, in trust, in dependence as we turn to him for help in each task or temptation.

In and through such a fellowship God comes into our life with his transforming power, and through this we are made over into his sons. It is simple; a child can live this way. It is demanding; it requires all of us and it must last all our life.

But with this must go the other realization—to live with God means at the same time to live with men and to do our work in the world. In the end it is only in this complete and active life that we really become men.

The Steps to Stewardship

There are five steps on which folks stop in their financial relation to God. They are:

The Tip Step

They give God a dime as they do the girl that checks their hat. They may even give a quarter, and equal their gratuity to the porter or waiter at their club. Surely God is not pleased by such ungratefulness for His blessings.

The Amusement Step

These folks give when, or if they attend church. It is on the same level as their patronage of the theatre or baseball park. Others may support the church fifty-two weeks a year. They pay only when they go, or as a government official once put on his pledge card, $5 per week, when I come." Can we hope for God's blessing on such giving?

The Promise Step

It is a well known fact that many pledge that which they never even try to pay. They impress the church canvassers with their false "generosity" and do not hesitate to let others know how much "we pledge." What God thinks of this is found in the story of Ananias and Sapphira who made a pledge, had the money to pay it and then held out on God. They were accused of lying to the Holy Spirit, and their punishment was death. False promises do not merit His blessing.

The Tithe Step

Some believe the law of the tithe to be God's plan for all time and therefore binding on Christians. Honesty requires them to pay it. Others accept it as a fair and reasonable plan for recognizing His ownership and their stewardship. But whether we consider it an obligation or a privilege, surely we ought not to do less as Christians than was required by the law. At any rate, God's challenge has never been recalled, "prove me . . . and see if I will not pour out a blessing."

The Tithe and Offerings Step

The tithe of old was the measure of honesty, but the offerings the evidence of love. God, speaking through Malachi, said "Ye have robbed me in tithes and offerings." The tithe places rich and poor on the same plane. The offerings above the tithe enables the one of large means to show his true appreciation of his greater blessings. May it not be that God is saying to you today as was said to one of old who was occupying a lower place than he should have been, "Friend, go up higher."—Layman Tithing Foundation, 8 S. Beyond Our Own

BUDAPEST, HUNGARY — Leaders of five Protestant churches in Hungary have issued a statement declaring that the arrest of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty was "the outcome of a political effort disguised as a struggle for religious liberty, never menanced by the present regime." The statement asserted that "the leaders and members of sister Protestant churches abroad" would best serve the interest of Protestants in Hungary if they helped "to separate the cause of the church from the case of Cardinal Mindszenty."—Religious News Service

ROME, ITALY—Pope Pius XII, expressing the (Roman) Catholic Church reaction to the arrest and sentencing to life imprisonment of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary for being a "stiff-necked opponent of the Communist drive to nationalize the Hungarian church schools," stated that "prayers should continue to rise before the throne of God." He also stated that the principal object of the trial was to disrupt the Catholic Church in Hungary. This is the first time a cardinal of the Roman Catholic Church has been jailed, tried, and sentenced while officially holding office as a member of the Sacred College of Cardinals.

NAMPA, IDAHO—The parochial school is nearing completion, classes formerly being held in two large basement rooms. Collection for day school at the Nampa (Old) Mennonite Church, Nampa, Idaho, amounted to over $3,500.

THE MANUFACTURE of alcoholic beverages in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, consumed 4,344,646 tons of grains and fruits. In addition, 199,814,590 gallons of fruit juices and extracts were used. And this was in the United States alone.—Gospel Messenger

CLEVELAND, OHIO—A co-operative movement of all faiths in the city of Cleveland has been launched to aid old people of that city. It aims to give older people a sense of social responsibility to the community, to provide them with healthful recreation at a central place and to encourage them to take up homecrafts to supplement their old-age pensions and other income.—Gospel Messenger

NEW YORK — The "get-tough" policy toward Russia was opposed by a unanimous vote of the Presbyterian Synod of New York. They believe that in our dealings with Russia we should be "Patient, sympathetic, sparing no pains to put ourselves in the place of a people made hypersensitive by the events of recent history."—Gospel Messenger

POLAND—Poland has made great progress in rebuilding hospitals destroyed during the war. A comparison of statistics for the year 1938 and 1948 shows that there are eighty-nine more hospitals now than in the pre-war years and an increase of more than thirteen thousand beds. Even with this increase hospital facilities are entirely inadequate—about 3.7 beds per 1,000 inhabitants.—Gospel Messenger

COLUMBUS, OHIO—The International Council of Religious Education declared on February 11 that week-day religious education on released time has not been invalidated by the United States Supreme Court. In its first pronouncement on the subject since the high court ruled adversely a year ago on a program in effect in Champaign, Illinois, schools, the council stated that week-day day religious education was merely subject to certain restrictions. This statement is expected to guide the actions of at least 40 denominations and 23 state councils of churches affiliated with the ICRE.

"NOT BY THE MIGHT OF ORGANIZATIONS, resolutions, or minutes, but by my spirit," were the words with which Rev. J. N. Smucker, president of the General Conference convened the first general session of the Council of Boards at Bloomington on Tuesday, February 15. What appropriate words for the leaders of our conference whose responsibility it is to help our church face the almost insurmountable problems and challenging opportunities of our time! With the words of Michael Angelo, the great artist, "After my greatest pause I can make my most telling strokes," those present were invited to wait for the Holy Spirit to lead on. Thus in moments of deep consecration the prayers of your leaders at Bloomington mingled with your prayers before the throne of grace to the end that the Counsellor whom Jesus promised us might be the instructor of every board and committee as they sought to know God's will for our Conference and help us do it. At the last general session on Thursday evening it was pointed out that this was not the end but the beginning. We have prayed and planned; now we must pray and work "the work of Him that sent Him." JJE

A MAJOR CONCERN OF THE BOARDS was the fact that most Budgets were not met in 1948. The Foreign Mission Board, for example, which had a budget of $330,000 reported contributions of only a little over two-thirds of that amount. Whereas a few years ago the Board had a reserve fund of nearly $100,000, today finds the fund completely exhausted. The Emergency Relief Board, with a budget of $399,100, reported an income of less than half that amount. Of the total budget for all boards, amounting to $944,587, only $596,136 was raised in 1948.

Why this decline in giving? Some of the answers are obvious enough. For one thing, as the war recedes into the past, people are included to think that the relief needs are less urgent. They have been given liberally in the past under the stimulus of the pictures of devastation and suffering and are inclined to feel that Europe should by now be on its feet again. There is a certain weariness in well-doing.

Falling prices of agricultural products coupled with the continued high costs of living are doubtless responsible for a part of the decline in giving. Another factor is the tremendous building program that the churches have planned all over the country. New church buildings and renovation projects are proposed or in progress in nearly every community. Besides, large building funds are being raised for schools and colleges and other institutions.

These are some of the factors that explain, though they may not justify the decrease in our benevolent giving.

The total amount of the budget, amounting to less than $10 per member, is not exhorbitant. On paper it looks as if our people, enjoying unprecedented incomes, should have been able to raise the amounts asked. But church boards must operate with money that actually comes in. They cannot pay bills with theoretical sums which they only hoped were forthcoming. What is the next step? Should church boards go into debt? Should they follow the example of some denominations and assign quotas to churches? Should the work be curtailed?

It is evident that each board must reexamine its work with the view of eliminating any possible unnecessary frills and trimmings. Our church machinery in some cases grew up, like Topsy, and its functioning is possibly far from efficient. There is overlapping in the work of boards and committees. The expense of keeping the machinery oiled and in running order may very well be greater than need be. Some of our projects are inconsequential and could be eliminated without any damage to the progress of the Kingdom. Our work must be reviewed to see if it represents good stewardship of the gifts which people have consecrated to the Lord's work.

Now for the other side of the picture. The Council of Boards represents a world-wide effort to serve Christ. The work of evangelism and education at home and abroad and the relief of those in need, has continued, for the most part, with great success. There are many obstacles that face the work of the church. Some seed always falls on poor soil and fails to come to fruition. But there is on the other hand, much encouragement to move forward with confidence. Every sincere church worker can claim the promise of His presence, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." L H

LENT IS AN INVITATION TO LIFE at its highest and best, not a periodic religious and moral splurge. "If any man will come after me let him deny himself, take up his cross daily, and follow me." Austere though this may sound, yet implicit in those words lies the only prescription for life as God intended it to be. If there is any thing the Atonement teaches us it is that there is "a cross at the heart of the Universe." The Lamb was slain from the foundations of the world. If then we are to find real life it will be in the giving up of our lives in service, in witnessing and even suffering and dying for our faith. But in sharp contrast it appears that all the satanic forces are being let loose, while we are concerned about Lent, to call us to a crusade that denies the way of love, service, witnessing and dying for others and for this faith. The Christian has only one crusade that is the crusade in behalf of the redemptive love our Lord and Saviour. The world may follow the hypocritical path of Lenten self-denial coupled with a holy crusade of hatred. Christian, in this Lenten season yours is the path of limitless love up Calvary's hill! JJE

Why Christians Have Troubles

by John Schrag

In Mark 4:35-41 is the famliar story of the disciples' crossing the Sea of Galilee. They attemped this crossing at the request of Jesus. The Master even went with them. But before long they encountered a storm so severe that these hardened fishermen feared for their lives. They awoke Jesus with the cry—one that must have had something of the tone of rebuke in it: "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" In response Jesus rebuked the wind and said to the sea, "Peace, be still." The calm that followed was so deep that the disciples now really became frightened and "feared exceedingly" and said one to another, "What manner of man is this that even the wind and the sea obey him?"

Obedience No Insurance

Why had the disciples gotten into this trouble? Not because they were disobedient to the Master. Jesus had sent them. If they had gone to sea against His will, we might perhaps say that the storm came upon them as a rebuke. But they had gone not contrary, but in obedience to the will of Jesus.

Do not we, the children of God, sometimes reason that if only we will be obedient to the will of God, then there should be no troubles for us in life? And if hardships come, we wonder if we are where God wants us to be. But this instance the disciples, were in trouble precisely because they had obeyed, not because they had disobeyed. Surely, hardships come even into the lives of consecrated Christians.

Again, the disciples were in difficulty not because Jesus did not care. It is true, He was asleep while they were battling the storm. But surely, the reason for that sleep was not indifference to the needs of His disciples, whatever else it might have been. Jesus clearly demonstrated later that He did care.

Till the Right Moment

Do we ever wonder if Jesus really cares? And if He really cares, why is He often silent in times when our hearts are troubled and fearful? Surely, there are times when He is silent precisely because He does care. He was "silent" when He received the message of the sickness of Lazarus, until the right moment came. Here at sea, too, He remained silent only until the right moment came. "He shall be silent in His love." Sometimes silence is what we need.

Also, the disciples were in trouble not because Jesus did not have the power to prevent or stop the storm. Apparently they did not expect Him to be able to do much about it, else why were they so much surprised when He did still the storm? But they thought He should show some concern at least and do what He could. But they were wrong. Jesus not only cared; He was fully able to cope with the situation. God can cope with any situation.

Why, Then, the Storm?

But why, then, the storm? One reason surely was that Jesus had a lesson to teach the disciples. They needed to learn to trust Him. We note that the disciples were concerned about the storm. Not so Jesus. He was concerned about the disciples. To still the storm for Him was a small thing. But to bring the disciples to the place where they would fully trust and obey Him was quite another matter. Nor was this the only time when this difference was manifested. The world of nature, even animals, unhesitatingly obeyed Jesus. The world He had made knew its Master. But the people, those whom He loved dearly, for whom He had come to give His life so that they could be children of God, they "received Him not." As Isaiah says, "The ox knoweth his owner and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider."

Man, God's Greatest Problem

Jesus has little trouble with the world He made. His trouble is with man, with us whom He came to save. And is it not paradoxical that man, the very one for whom He left heaven's glory, for whom He gave His very life, he who more than anything else has reason to love and obey Him so often turns his back upon Him? "Even the wind and the sea obey Him." Do we?—Reprinted from the Grace Tidings.

A Universal Prayer

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER

March 4, 1949

"Infinite God, yet tender Father of us all, we bow before Thee in adoration. In differing speech we utter our praise, confess our sins, declare our vows of consecration. Thou understandest all.

"Forgive our generation the sin of walled-up thinking, and give us grace to expand our caring from narrow domestic and national walls to the vast human family, until children now paralyzed by fear may feel the loving touch of mothers far away.

"In hatred of war and its killing we are united. Hold us to a new high unity, our Father, and in that unity give us grace to change our behaviour that wars may cease and Thy kingdom come. Grant us strength to melt our pride into humility, to change our race and class prejudice into fellowship, to turn our selfishness into sharing. Rewrite into our hearts the sure knowledge that Thine is the kingdom and Thine the power.

"In this chill hour of the world's winter of indecision, grant to all mankind the shining courage to follow the difficult road of the Man of Galilee, the Christ of Calvary—our Lord. Amen."

Holy Week

This Searching Question

April 10 - 17

Holy Week always brings to our hearts this searching question placed on the lips of Jesus, "I gave My life for thee, What hast thou given for me?" Our appreciation of what Christ has done for us through His atoning and redeeming death on the cross may be expressed by seeking to help others find Christ as we have found Him for all our needs. Whom should we try to help? Here are a few suggestions:

1. Share with other believers your understanding of what all is involved in following Christ our Redeemer and King.
2. Help children to love and trust our Saviour. They will believe and accept what you tell them about Jesus. Teach them to love Him.
3. Strive to win your non-christian friends and neighbors to Christ.
4. Go to shut-ins, to the aged and to prisoners and point out to them what Christ would love to be to them.
5. Remember those people who suffer under some injustice or hurt. Show them how to find victory through Christ.
6. Those who have grown cold and seem tired of the Christian walk need your encouragement. They need the inspiration of your contagious love and enthusiasm for Jesus Christ.
7. Befriend the unbefriended. Give them a taste of what it is to be in the company of the Lord's people. Take them into your home and fellowship. Invite them for a meal and make them to feel that they are wanted.

These people need our help. We may express our gratitude and appreciation of what Christ has done for us by going to them. During Holy Week every Christian will want to do something for Christ. Further issues of "The Mennonite" will bring further suggestions on how Holy Week may be made to be a true Week of Witness.

In the Metropolitan Context

The New York Mennonite Fellowship

Although Mennonites are a rural people, quite frequently certain individuals move to the large cities, where they soon become a part of the complex, metropolitan way of life. Such is the case among the eight million residents of New York City. Since February of 1943 the Mennonite Fellowship, which was organized at that time, has tried to contact all the Mennonites in the Greater New York area, so that they might come together for worship and fellowship.

From Nine Walks of Life

At the present time there are over fifty names on the list of Mennonites, who receive announcements for the monthly meetings. These people come from various walks of life. Among them are teachers, businessmen, office workers, printers, chaffeurs, doctors, missionaries, houseworkers and students from the Biblical Seminary Columbia University, Union Seminary, Westminster Choir School and Julliard School of Music. Many sections of the country are represented, and several of our members have come directly from Europe. We are fortunate in having with us Miss Justina Sawatzky, who recently came to New York from Russia. The group that has been meeting this year comes from six Mennonite branches: the General Conference, Evangelical Mennonite, Old Mennonite, Mennonite Brethren, Evangelical Mennonite Brethren and Mennonite Brethren in Christ (now called United Missionary Church).

For Fellowship and Inspiration

We have been fortunate in having many interesting speakers at our meetings this year. Dr. Dirk Cattepoel from Krefeld, Germany spent several days in New York, so we were privileged to hear from him. At another time Rev. Samuel Miller of Argentina gave an interesting report of Mennonite mission work in that country. In February we were happy to have Rev. John J. Plenert of Lansdale, Pennsylvania minister to us. There are several Mennonite students in the New York area for musical training, so that we are often privileged to enjoy unusually fine music.

For Service and Worship

Every year the Fellowship accepts a project to support some Mennonite undertaking. In former years money has been raised for such thing as refugee work and for German Bibles for South America. This year again a project is being started.

Since there is no Mennonite Church in the New York metropolitan area, the Fellowship has played an important place in the lives of many. Through visitation and monthly meetings the Fellowship seeks not only to keep Mennonites in contact with the work of their church but also provides an opportunity for united worship.

NOTE—Orlando Schmidt writer of this article—235 E. 49th St. New York 17, N. Y. is the leader of the Mennonite Fellowship of N. Y. Meetings are held in the Biblical Seminary.

Summer Bible School Series

1. A Distinctively New Series

The new Summer Bible School Series is an integrated curriculum comprising a course of study of thirteen years from nursery to second-year high school, with three preschool, eight grade school, and two high school courses. The planned integration provides for a continuity of Bible instruction for the child of about three and one half years of age until his completion of the second year in high school.

A marked feature of this curriculum is a nursery course specifically for the large number of three-year-olds who are anxious to attend Bible school and for whom, up to this time, no provision has been made in Summer Bible School curriculums.

The curriculum is closely graded, and wherever possible classes should be arranged so that all the courses can be taught each year. In small schools it will be possible to alternate the courses as follows: Kindergarten I with Kindergarten II; Grade I with Grade II, etc. The nursery course should be given each year.

For uniformity and clarity, if an alternate program is used, the even-numbered courses should be used in even-numbered years; for example, Grade II, IV, and VI, should be used during summers of 1950, 1952, and 1954. In the lower grades the covers of the pupil's books are marked with a number of dots instead of the figure so that pupils will not be embarrassed if grades are alternated.

2. Attractive Color Scheme and Design

The especially designed covers are of two colors, selected with regard to pupil appeal at the various age levels. Green, for instance, is used for the three preschool courses; blue for first and second grades; and other special colors for the remaining grades.

3. Manuals and Workbooks

Each course has a teacher's manual and also a pupil's book or workbook with valuable and attractive activity features necessary for the best accomplishment of the teaching task. In Grades III and IV, and V and VI, special center insert pages of four-color art pictures and other memory and art features are included. All workbooks have from 48 to 56 pages.

For the first five years, ten 10½x12 four-color pictures are provided in a portfolio to accompany the teacher's manual and an activity packet is provided for each workbook. Each activity packet contains ten four-color 4½ x 5⅛ pictures. In the preschool years, the packet also contains a figure and memory verse cutout sheet 7x28 inches in size and die-cut, and three activity sheets. In the packets for Grades I and II, there are nine activity sheets which include memory sheets, and ten missionary dimes or figures, die-cut. The packets' activity features provide attractive daily teaching items which the younger pupils may take home. The workbooks for Grade III to VII also provide memory work cutouts and/or missionary figures or other selected items.

All necessary teaching materials, with the exception of the Bible, are provided for each course. The completeness of the pupils' books relieves the teachers of preparing extra and special materials, thus providing time for preparation, for creative teaching, prayerful study, mastery of lesson content and teaching procedures, and for visiting pupils in their homes.

Gospel messages from these materials will be taken into the homes, and the completed pupil's workbooks, when they are taken home at the completion of the school terms, will serve as valuable study and reference books.

Music for this series is taken from the well-known MENNONITE HYMNARY. It is hoped that the selections here presented will be the nucleus of the Junior Hymnary, already authorized by the Board of Publication, and which will become one of our next projects.

Each grade has a suitable introduction which gives general directives and the necessary guidance for developing lesson plans and accomplishing the objective of the integrated workbook.

4. Purpose; Objective

The purpose of the Summer Bible School Series is to present Bible truths related to child experience at each age level from Nursery to Grade X. The curriculum is Bible-centered and the daily lesson development flows into a natural worship situation in about the middle of the lesson and then continues to the end in the culmination of the lesson objective. In the lower grades there is a succession of teaching, worship, and activity cycles.

The course is evangelistic throughout, is designed to make wise unto salvation, promote Christian growth and motivate Christian living and service. In the first year, the Child, although unable to fully understand, is taught that Jesus is the Saviour who died to take away sin. This theme is continued throughout each age level, the presentation corresponding to the child's capacity to understand the nature and purpose of God, and to know Jesus as his Saviour.

5. A Wealth of Information and Material

1. Integrated and closely graded curriculum.
2. Progressive development of purpose.
3. Attractive visual aids.
4. Sound expressional activities.
5. Bible stories, worship, music, missions, salvation, memory passages, doctrine.

New Opportunities

A Summary Report of (Detailed reports by the secretaries of the various B

BLOOMINGTON, ILLINOIS. An increasng number of "Macedonian calls" coupled with an awareness of the most pronounced decreases in giving in several years was the dilemma that confronted some eighty (20 were laymen) General Conference leaders as they conferred here on plans for the 1949 conference year.

Conscious at every turn of the complex, personal, social, national and inter-national context in which the Church must work and to which it must speak its Gospel, this group of leaders, elected by the Conference nevertheless responded to the challenge of bringing Christ to the modern world by prayerfully re-examining the entire program with a view toward broadening the ministry of the Conference in areas where new and critical needs have arisen and eliminating possible unnecessary drains upon Conference energies and resources.

The budgetary resources needed to carry out the program, as determined by the Council of Boards, amount to $750,000, a figure almost $200,000 less than the budget set for 1948 but over $150,000 more than the actual contributions of that year.

Ever-Increasing Opportunities . . . .

The ever-increasing opportunities before the Conference to present Christ by word and deed as well as the broad scope of the Conference witness was deeply impressed upon the group at the closing general session to which members of the Central District Conference who lived in the immediate area were invited. Representatives of the various boards and committees presented their respective areas of responsibility, their problems and their budgetary needs.

. . . . In Foreign Missions . . .

Being responsible for some 97 workers in four continents and a large new area of opportunity in India the Foreign Mission Board continues to be one of the largest concerns of the Conference with a proposed budget of $260,000.

. . . In Emergency Relief . . .

Reflecting the turmoil of the world in terms of emergency physical needs, the Emergency Relief Board called for over $293,000 to help in the resettlement of European Mennonites in North and South America, the foreign-student-exchange program, cooperation in the M.C.C. mental hospital program to say nothing about continual relief needs in Europe and on our mission fields.

. . . In a Pure Witness . . .

Keeping the Gospel witness pure in a time when the temptation to compromise with methods of hatred and violence are legion lay back of the plans of the Peace Committee as they more than trebled their budget over last year. Such items as year-round Voluntary Service involving as many as 200 young people by the end of 1949 in addition to the General Conference Y. P. U. program of summer Voluntary Service are specific items.

Ministering to the spiritual needs of non-Mennonites as well as Mennonites in the United States and Canada and to spiritually under-privileged Mennonites in Mexico and South America is the major concern of the Home Mission Board which for the first time in 1948 failed by over $8,000 to receive contributions to meet its budget.

. . . In Christian Education . . .

Not as dramatic, perhaps, but as crucial as any of the boards are the Boards of Education and Publication which are concerned with the nurture of the youth of the conference. Through the Curriculum Committee working under the Board of Education Vacation Bible School material and a youth hymnal are in preparation. A new sub-committee under the Board of Education the Y.P.U. Advisory Committee of four. Other new features of the educational work are the provision for ministerial scholarships and plans for three depositories for visual aid materials—Bluffton, Bethel, and some point in Canada.

The Board of Publications which works in close cooperatin with the Board of Education is responsible for 39 different publications with more to come. This Board receives 6/7 of its budget through the sales of the various publications. But the crucial 1/7 represented by the figure of some $10,000 which must come from contributions makes it possible in a large way to provide materials for sales. A new pamphlet "The Master Calleth for Thee" was announced as ready for distribution; it presents to young people the challenge and various opportunities in church vocation.

. . . In Ministerial Preparation . . .

The first graduating class from the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, numbering nine men, represented the high point in the progress report of the Seminary. In addition the four years of the Seminary has seen it gather a student body, a faculty, acquire buildings, organization of a Sunday School, and even develop possibilities for the organization of a church.

. . . In Other Areas . . .

Other significant reports include the assistance in loans given to some 60 C.P.S. men by the Mutual Aid Board; the startling fact that our Conference averaged only $1.50 per church (not member) in contributions to the Minister's Aid Fund which is far from sufficient to help those who cannot come under the pension plan; the extensive work of the Doctrine and Conduct Committee which is preparing materials to supplement the catechism and treat such problems as stewardship, communism, divorce and church discipline.

For Clarification . . .

Keenly aware of the need for clarification of the real Conference responsibility in relation to the total program of Christendom the council of Boards in another evening session recommended for consideration

Bethel College Bible Week

March 13 - 18

Bethel College Bible Week will be held March 13 to 18, with Dr. Rockwell C. Smith and Rev. Jacob H. Janzen as the speakers. Dr. Smith is professor of sociology at Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Illinois; and Rev. Jacob H. Janzen, is a well-known Mennonite minister of Waterloo, Ontario, Canada.

Meetings will begin Sunday evening, March 13, at 7:30 o'clock in Memorial Hall. Rev. Jacob H. Janzen, the first speaker, will speak on the "Origin of Jesus Christ," and Dr. Rockwell C. Smith, beginning at 8:15, will speak on "Contrast—the Panaroma of Rural America."

On Monday afternoon, beginning at 2:45 and ending at 4:30 the full series will begin, and will continue again in the evening, running from 7:30 to 9:00.

The Christian Church Serving Its People

In the afternoon, Dr. Smith's subjects will include: Monday, "Our Christian Pastoral Responsibility"; Tuesday, "Visiting the Sick"; Wednesday, "Comforting the Bereaved"; Thursday, "Counseling the Distressed"; and Friday, "Strengthening the Working Christian."

The Bible—The Written Word of God

Reverend Janzen's afternoon subjects include: Monday, "Literature"; Tuesday, "The Beginnings"; Wednesday, "The Jews and their Languages (the Manuscripts)"; Thursday, "The Original Languages and the Translations of the Bible"; Friday, "The Bible—The Word of God."

Jesus Christ—The Word of God Made Flesh

In the evening sessions, Reverend Janzen will speak Monday, on "The Son of God"; Tuesday, "The Son of Man"; Wednesday, "The Life of Jesus Christ"; Thursday, "The Teachings of Jesus Christ"; Friday, "The Sufferings and the Glorious Victory of Jesus Christ."

The Christian Church and Rural America

Dr. Smith's evening topics, after Sunday night, include: Monday, "Commercialization; the Paradox of Rural America"; Tuesday, "Community—the Pattern of Rural America"; Wednesday, "Conflict—the Problem of Rural America"; Thursday, "Church—the Protest of Rural America"; and Friday, "Christ—the Promise of Rural America."

PROGRAM FOR MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

March 15-17

The Ministers' Conference of the Western District will be held in Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas, March 15 to 17. The conference will convene only during the forenoon and will begin at 9:00. The devotional period will be held from 9:00 to 9:10, conducted on Tuesday by the Chairman of the Ministers' Conference, on Wednesday by Rev. Richard Ratzlaff, and on Thursday by Rev. David Neufeld. From 9:10 to 10:20 each morning Rev. J. J. Enz will conduct a discussion period on the topic, "An Effective Program of Evangelism." Special music will be furnished on Tuesday, from 10:20 to 10:30, by the West Zion Men's Quartet; on Wednesday, by the Bethel College Ladies' Sextet; and on Thursday by Rupert Hohmann. From 10:30 to 11:40 another daily discussion period will be held on the topic, "Maintaining the Christian Home," with Dr. J. W. Fretz as leader.

WOMEN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE

March 16, 1949

The Women's Missionary Society meeting will be held March 16, 1949, at 9:30 a. m., in the student union room, beginning with general singing led by Mrs. Helen Lingenfelder. A devotional service will be led by a student volunteer member, after which Mrs. P. S. Goertz will give a talk on "Relief in Europe." The Hebron Church will furnish music, following which a report on "Relief Needs and Relief Work," will be given by Mrs. Selma Linscheid. The roll call will be the answer to the question, "What study books do you use or what type of programs do you have in your mission societies?" An offering will be taken for Executive Committee expenses. After the closing song and prayer the meeting will recess until 1:15. Each one is requested to bring a sack lunch for the noon meal.

The afternoon program, opening with announcements by the chairman, will include music by the Halstead Mennonite Church, a talk on "Needs of the Various Mission Fields," Rev. Sam J. Goering, an offering for home missions, foreign missions, and peace committee, and a closing song and prayer.

by the Conference a suggested procedure for General Conference recognition of organizations and institutions. (This will be published in a coming issue of The Mennonite.)

And for Efficiency's Sake . . .

Being extremely conscious of an early adolescent awkwardness of conference organization due to much overlapping of responsibility the group in another evening session gave its endorsement to the work of the Conference Coordinating Committee. Efforts are being made to formulate major areas of Christian concern of the local church such as Missions, Christian Education, and Literature and Christian Service under which all efforts on the level of the local church or the district conference or the General Conference may be grouped. Thus, in line with the policy of congregational form of church government the local church may become the key to total conference organization.

The Council of Boards decided to shift their meeting from the first to the last quarter in order to plan in advance of the year rather than within the year. The date set for the next meeting is November 29 to December 1, 1949. JJE

The General Conference Council of Boards meeting at Bloomington, Illinois, was central in the life of the school during the past ten days. A steady stream of visitors, preliminary committee meetings, and other auxiliary functions suggested the importance of these meetings.

The Vesper speaker for Sunday, February 20, was Dr. H. A. Fast, Acting Dean of Bethel College, who returned from the Bloomington meetings to fulfill this engagement.

Among the members of the seminary staff who participated in the sessions at Bloomington were Pres. S. F. Pannabecker, a member of the Foreign Mission Board, John T. Neufeld, under assignment from the Home Mission Board, and Don. E. Smucker, who made the report for the Doctrine and Conduct Committee.

Sunday school class on February 14 was taught by P. K. Regier, pastor of the Reedley, California, Mennonite Church. Among the visitors during the week who visited classes at Bethany were: Abraham Albrecht, Newton, Kansas, G. G. Epp and Henry T. Klassen of Rosthern, Sask., and Miss Mary Becker, of Columbia, South America.

Marvin J. Dirks spent a week-end recently at Waterloo, Ontario, conducting a church choir clinic. The directors of the General Conference church choirs of Ontario participated with the Waterloo choir being used as the clinic choir. Lively discussions were one of the evidences of the worthwhileness of this kind of program.

Don E. Smucker is scheduled to present the Christian Life Week messages at Bluffton College March 1-4, and is also scheduled to present a message at the First Mennonite Church Brotherhood at Bluffton on February 28.

The Religious Life Committee announces a retreat to be held at Palis Park, Illinois, March 12-13. This will be devoted to a development of the devotional life under the superior conditions of withdrawal from busy schedules.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Christian Life Week will be observed on the Bluffton College campus March 1-4. Rev. Don Smucker, graduate of Bluffton College with the class of 1936 and at present a member of the faculty of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, will be the speaker. He will speak to the student body each morning at the regular chapel time and each evening. He will also have special meetings with campus leaders and presidents of campus organizations, with the Y cabinets, and with students who plan to give their lives in full-time church vocations.

President Ramseyer attended a meeting of the Teaching Aids Committee of the Ohio College Assoiiation at Muskingum College. February 19. He is chairman of this committee. He was the speaker at the Ada, Ohio, P.T.A. meeting February 22.

Rev. Harry Yoder spoke in the morning service at the Berne church February 18, and made individual calls in the community in the days following in the interest of the College.

Miss Anne C. Greve, coordinator for the North Central Liberal Arts study, was a campus visitor February 22-24. Miss Greve is a member of the faculty of Bethany-Peniel College, Bethany, Oklahoma. She gave assistance in the study of General Education in which Bluffton is engaged this year.

BETHEL COLLEGE

An all-day rural life conference was held at Friends University, Wichita, on March 3. The conference was sponsored by Friends University, McPherson College, and Bethel College. Dr. J. Winfield Fretz was conference chairman. Mrs. Eva Harshbarger was chairman for the evening session and Miss Frances Becker spoke on opportunities in the business field in rural communities. Students participating in the program were Bertha Fast and Wilbur Neufeld.

Final examinations for the winter quarter were held on Feb. 28 to March 2. The Spring quarter will open on Monday, March 7.

Two Student Volunteer deputation groups are visiting churches in western Kansas and in Oklahoma during the in-between-quarter holidays. The students left on Wednesday afternoon, March 2 and will return for classes on Monday, March 7.

Albert G. Watson, midwest secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation and a well-known Canadian pacifist, was on the Bethel College campus from Sunday through Tuesday, Feb. 20 to 22. He spoke at various services using such subjects on "The Pathway of Love." and "the Christian Answer to the World Crisis."

Four voluntary service workers stopped at Bethel College on Friday, Feb. 18, en route to Nathrop, Colo. They will serve for one year in Mr. Princeton Commonweal, a school for delinquent boys.

A meeting was arranged for the unit by Bethel students who participated in the Mt. Princeton program last summer.

Helga Kemnitzer, senior from Germany, and Mrs. Anna Baumgartner, alumni secretary, returned from a trip to the Pacific coast churches on Friday, Feb. 25. Miss Kemnitzer and Mrs. Baumgartner visited churches in California, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho.

Convictions Delay Migration

Relief Cause before 50 Million

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA.—Fourteen Russian Mennonite refugee families, including 57 persons, are now at the Ludwigsburg Resettlement Center waiting to be processed for migration to the United States. They have already been accepted by the U.S. Displaced Persons Commission and are now awaiting Consular action.

It seems that the present delay in their approval is partly because of their conscientious objection to the bearing of arms. This matter is being clarified through contact with the U.S. State Department. Although the United States requires statements of loyalty on the part of immigrants, it has been interpreted that this does not necessarily mean the bearing of arms.

All of the people in this group will be settled in Kansas and Minnesota when they have entered the United States.

Worthy Gifts

One of the workers in Germany reports an experience verifying the value of the policy to send for relief only those materials which in quality are worthy of distribution "In the Name of Christ." Certain refugees (non-Mennonites) in a camp near Frankfurt, who had lost everything, received Christmas Bundles for their children. They had patched until patches no longer held—had only what they wore and while these were being washed they had to remain in bed. They wept for joy as they found these good, warm, almost new and urgently needed clothing with the MCC label. They said, "Truly this is done in the Name of Christ and with such love. What little we have received before has been so dirty and torn and worthless and so we had very little good from it. People thought anything will do for the Germans. With these nice clothes we feel like people again, and are encouraged to know there are still those in the world who, out of their love for Christ, are interested in doing good to those in need."

"One Great Hour"

Nearly all of the Christian groups in America are planning to cooperate in a nation-wide drive for funds to be used in relief work. The broadcast called "One Great Hour," is to be given on the evening of March 26, between ten and eleven o'clock. It is estimated that 50,000,000 people will hear the program. People will be urged to go to church on Sunday, March 27 and there make their special contribution in an offering especially for this "one great cause."

The fact that relief needs to continue is indeed confirmed. However, the Mennonite Central Committee is not a participating agency in this nation-wide effort, partially because of the methods of solicitaton to be used. The MCC depends rather on the sustained and regular giving of the brotherhood, as the means of financial support. Anyone in local Mennonite congregations who feel challenged to give additionally for relief as a result of such outside publicity, should continue channeling contributions through the respective conference treasurers.

Jottings

—Grace Church, Pandora, Ohio: Herman Neff, a student at Bluffton College, gave an address at our church the evening of January 30. The following Sunday evening, Mrs. Ralph Sommer gave a talk, illustrated by slides, of relief work in China. Mrs. Sommer and little Philip returned from China recently while her husband continues his work under the auspices of the MCC. On February 22, the Menno Men's Chorus, from Goshen, Indiana, is to give a concert at our church. The annual missionary meeting of the Mennonites of this community is to be held at our church in April.—Susan Basinger, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: The Pleasant View Mennonite Church and our church jointly sponsored a canning project for relief on February 3 and 4. $2,000 were raised, thirteen head of cattle were bought, butchered, and canned, making at total of 3,065 No. 2½ cans. We have not had services for several Sundays due to bad roads.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

First Church, Allenton, Pennsylvania: At a recent Sunday evening service conducted by the Senior Christian Endeavor Society, record attendance enjoyed the pictures and experiences of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Solt on their recent trip to Costa Rica where they spent the holidays with their son, David and family. David is the radio engineer for TIFC, the radio station for the Latin American Mission.—Mrs. LeRoy K. Widner, Corr.

—First Church, Richfield, Pennsylvania: One of our members, Herman Grayhill, has entered a Kentucky school to study for the evangelistic field. Wayne Hoffman and Melba Merkley were married January 29 by Reverend Shultz. The Epley sisters and a men's quartet from Juniata College (Church of the Brethren college) were in our church recently.—Mrs. Albert Sheoffer, Corr.

—West Zion Church, Moundridge, Kansas: On January 2, a piano-organ concert was presented in the church by Miss Ann Krehbiel and Stanford Lehmberg of McPherson, College, McPherson, Kansas. Miss Krehbiel is a member of this church teaching piano in McPherson College, and Mr. Lehmberg is a student there. The School Missions, conducted jointly by the First Church of Christian and the West Zion Church, recently came to an end. Speakers were Rev. and Mrs. Harold Ratzlaff on foreign missions (India), Rev. J. M. Regier on home missions and the migrant work, and Herman Andres, Newton, on the settlement of the Mennonite refugees who recently landed in Uruguay.—Esther Schmidt, Corr.

—Lehigh Church, Lehigh, Kansas: The women of the church have put many hours on relief sewing, cleaning, and patching. Eighteen comforters have been finished with a resolve to complete one comforter at each meeting. Several layettes are in the making and the children's Sunday School classes have had stocking collections. During the quarterly church meeting finances were allowed and plans approved for the building and equipping of a modern kitchen in the church basement.—M. E. Goering, Corr.

WANTED:—Young married couple desiring employment on farm. House furnished, monthly minimum pay of $175, to begin March 15. Should know irrigation farming or be willing to learn. Apply Board of Mutual Aid, J. W. Fretz, North Newton, Kansas.

For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us, having abolished in his flesh the enmity, . . . and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the Cross, having slain the enmity thereby . . . ." (Ephesians 2:13-16).

DO WE AS CHRISTIANS really believe that Christ has broken down the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile? Of course, we do! Why then are we building it up again? Why are we building it higher and better than ever? Is that the type of reconstruction in which we engage? How can we say that we are followers of Christ and at the same time hate anyone? How can we believe that He by His Cross has slain the enmity between Jew and Gentile, and yet talk about the Jew and treat him as one of our real enemies?

A Decalogue of Race

1. Thou shalt not bow down before the false god of racial superiority.
2. Thou shalt not boast that only thy race is "pure."
3. Thou shalt not preach that whole races are at different levels of physical development.
4. Thou shalt not attach importance to color of skin or other racial traits.
5. Thou shalt not establish racial groups as fixed and unchangable.
6. Thou shalt not, to the detriment of thy neighbor, assert that cultural achievements are based on racial traits.
7. Thou shalt not hold that there are racial personality traits that are inborn or inherited.
8. Thou shalt not look down upon thy brother because his appearance differs from thine.
9. Thou shalt not, because a man is of a different religion or nationality, say that he belongs to a different race.
10. Thou SHALT faithfully and sincerely act on the foregoing admonitions and then, indeed, thou wilt love thy neighbor as thyself.

What do you think of when you read in the daily paper that a certain Solomon Levi has donated a big sum of money to Joeville Junior College? What are the mental pictures that hurry through your mind? Solomon Levi .... a second-hand, clothing store .... where you could get cheap suits if you were ready to "out-jew" the Jew .... or (if you live in the city) maybe the shabby, little fellow trotting through the streets with a pushcart, selling peaches, pears, grapes, tomatoes, oranges—according to the season. Or does your stereotype of Solomon Levi represent him as a Hollywood movie magnate, overdressed with slick black hair, crooked nose, sly eyes, a sparkling diamond-tie-clasp, pigskin gloves and spats? When you read about this donation, do you think to yourself: "No wonder he gave away that money; he had to ease his conscience because of the crooked way in which he had gotten it"? Or, "Maybe, it was cheaper than paying income tax"?

Let us not engage in unwarranted generalizations. Have you heard of a Jew who lowered himself to shrewd and tricky business practices? That does not necessarily mean that ALL Jews will pull the wool over your eyes when you deal with them. Not any more than you would suspect ALL businessmen in Centerville to be dishonest, because one merchant of that town resorted to unethical methods. I believe that as Christians we should never permit ourselves to generalize about people: "All Negroes like watermelons." "You have to be careful with Italians, they'll stab you in the back!" "Of course, he is lazy, he's a Mexican." "All Japanese are two-faced." These and similar statements which one hears from time to time—even in Mennonite families—are not only incorrect, unscientific, and harmful, They are unworthy of a Christian! James tells us clearly, that any man who can control his language, can bridle his whole body . . . . "Behold we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body." We definitely need to cleanse our vocabulary of slanderous untruths, we need to purge our thoughts of two-edged stereotypes. They are an evidence of uncleanliness in our own hearts and help to rebuild, bit by bit, this middle wall of partition which Jesus tore down.

Having personally witnessed the growth of anti-semitism in Germany, I have often asked myself just where we can make a contribution—we, as American Mennonites—so that such a plague might never find fertile ground in a country where we have the liberty to speak, write, and teach as God leads us. If one surveys the field objectively, one must admit that already some roots of anti-semitism have found a receptive soil even in our Mennonite brotherhood. I wonder whether in some of our Sunday school teaching and preaching we are not inculcating into our children ideas of hate and distrust of the Jew. Yes, it is true, many passages of the Bible lend themselves to anti-Semitic trends. Israel is not always the hero of the Old Testament, but sometimes the villain. The Hebrew prophets, all our Scriptures unflinchingly expose the weaknesses and flaws of even a Moses, a David, the Pharisees. Are we, therefore, justified to arouse in young minds a distrust or dislike for the Jew? Maybe we hear too often that the JEWS crucified Jesus—remember, the Apostles, Paul, and Jesus Himself were Jews.

As children of God we desire sincerely to be peacemakers, and as peacemakers we will have to learn to understand those people who do not recognize Jesus as the Christ. It seems to me that the Jews are the stepchildren in our efforts of evangelization. We do not understand them and we make little attempt to reconcile them unto God into one body with the Gentiles. Persecutions have never destroyed the Jews physically, even if millions have perished at the hands of so-called Christians in Spain, in Poland, in Russia or in Germany. Even if mass persecutions have not wiped out the Jewish people, spiritually they have suffered very severely from these waves of hate that swept over them again and again. Whenever suffering has befallen them, bitterness has crept into their inner life and they have emerged with renewed clannishness and a poisoned outlook on life. What have we done, what are we doing to show them a better, clearer way? Jesus says: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The twentieth century Jew truly is weary and heavy laden, and asks for nothing more instantly than for rest and peace of mind.

Who is that present-day Jew? What kind of a person is he? Is he the spiritual descendant of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? No, we are much too narrow in our criteria if we consider only the believing, observant Jew. There are at present three branches of Judaism: Orthodox, Conservative, and Reformed (or Liberal), it is true. Outside of the adherents to these three religious communions there are large numbers of Jews who belong to the Jewish family only by ethnic or cultural tradition. Can you imagine the confusion and bitterness of this latter group? A Jewish scholar puts it this way: "Ideas cannot be inherited like a hooked nose. They can be acquired only in the way one acquires a broken nose . . " In our approach to these folks then, we cannot go back to ther Messianic hope, for they have no such hope. We will have to deal with them as we would with any agnostic or even atheist. If they are to be won, it will be only if by the grace of God, our Christianity can reveal itself as more than saintly words and shallow rites—if Jesus lives in us and we in Him.

Where the Tax Dollar Goes

Yes, 76 cents of every tax dollar goes to war—past wars or future. The other 24 cents of the tax dollar goes for all government outlays: pensions, natural resources, agriculture, housing, education, and running the government.

Voluntary Service Workers Assigned

Thirteen workers joined the Voluntary Service program of the Mennonite Central Committee when they came to Akron, January 15, for a month of Orientation. This is the second group of volunteers to enter voluntary service in this manner. Of this group, seven are from the General Conference. They are Marvin Bartel, Burrton, Kansas; Roland Ediger, Buhler, Kansas; Galen Flickner, Moundridge, Kansas; Lawrence Harder, Mountain Lake, Minnesota; Henry E. Jantzen, Plymouth, Nebraska; Alfrieda Regier, Moundridge, Kansas; Elizabeth Regier, Burrton, Kansas. The other members of the unit are Lester Dintaman, Vestaburg, Michigan; John Hershberger, Kalona, Iowa; Lee Jr. Hershberger, Elkhart, Indiana; LeRoy Nisley, Goshen, Indiana; Henry Schrock, Kalona, Iowa; and Peter Yoder, Shipshewana, Indiana.

Students Attend Many Schools

There are 687 students, members of the General Conference, who are attending 215 educational insitutions other than General Conference schools. A total of 390 are attending 152 non-Mennonite colleges, universities, and seminaries. Of this total, 313 are in the United States and 77 in Canada. A total of 57 are attending 16 non-Mennonite Bible schools. Of these, 40 are in the United States and 17 in Canada. A total of 152 students are in eight different Mennonite schools other than General Conference. Of these 139 are in the United States and 23 in Canada. A total of 78 students are enrolled in 39 institutions for training of nurses.

These figures are of interest and suggest the importance of maintaining a connection with the students in these many different schools. The great variety of training and experience that they represent should be an enriching factor in the on-going program of the Conference.

Announcing

The Bethel Deaconess Hospital school of nursing announces its graduation exercises to be held Friday evening, March 4, at 8 p. m. in the First Mennonite church of Newton. The Reverend Arnold Nickel of Henderson, Nebraska, will give the commencement address, and Dr. D. S. Klassen, president of the medical staff of the hospital, will bring greetings to the class from the staff.

The members of the class of 1949 who will complete their work at this time are: Miss Ella J. Harder, Whitewater; Miss Alice R. Klassen, Newton; Miss Ella Kroeker, Inman; Miss Margaret Neufeld, Inman; Miss Sidonnia Ann Nickel, Mountain Lake, Minnesota; and Miss Inez M. Voth, Little River, Kansas.

Make Plans for Future

The first Mennonite inter-college peace conference was held in Chicago on Thusday, December 30, 1948. The purpose of this meeting was to see what college peace organizations can do to work together more closely. To become more acquainted with the work of the Peace Section of the Mennonite Central Committee and the fellowship together also fitted into the purpose of the meeting.

The organization for the day was in charge of the Peace Section. For the afternoon session Harold Bender acted as chairman, and Emma Sommers was elected as secretary. A findings committee was also appointed to report back during the evening session.

After some introductory remarks, reports were given from the various colleges represented. Beatrice Buller reported for Bethel College, Norman Wiens for Tabor College, Bill Gering for Freeman Jr. College, Evan Oswald for Hesston College, David Habegger for Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Ray Horst for Goshen College, President Ramseyer for Bluffton College, and President Hostetler for Messiah Bible College. These reports showed work in the fields of literature, peace institutes, peace teams, regular meetings, and special peace projects. Following these reports there was a period of open discussion. During this discussion Guy Hershberger reported on the International Relations Clubs.

Harold Bender then spoke on the subject. "The Contribution Which American Mennonite Students

May Make to Peace Work for European Mennonite Students." He discussed the opportunities for contributing in the countries of Holland, Germany, Switzerland, and France, emphasizinz the value of exchange of literature, correspondence, student exchange, studying abroad, and aiding in such projects as the International Peace Foundation of Holland.

To conclude the afternoon meeting Harold Bender reported on the work of the Peace Section, Ernest Lehman on the work at the Akron office and the Mennonite Central Committee peace teams, David Schroeder on the Western Canada peace team, Paul Goering on the activities of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors. These were followed by a short, open discussion on a possible inter-collegiate Mennonite peace organization and its function.

At the evening meeting Albert Gaeddert served as chairman. After the devotional period led by Ramon Jantz, Guy Hershberger spoke on "Available and Needed Peace Literature." Albert Gaeddert followed with an address on "Our Responsibility to Our Constituency." "Our Witness to the Non-Mennonite World," discussed by Winfield Fretz, was divided into two parts—our present witness and the witness we ought to be giving. The final address, "Spiritual Resources for Effective Peace Witnessing," was given by C. N. Hostetler, who also closed the meeting.

Beatrice Buller gove the following report of the findings committee:

Twelve Suggestions of Committee

1. That special emphasis be given to peace education for "teen agers."
2. That we help in establishing the Peace Center in Europe and that we encourage some students to study in some European universities a year, giving part-time service to the Mennonite Central Committee Peace Section.
3. That we make greater use of the foreign students on our campuses.
4. That we conclude (from several reports given this afternoon) that the link between conference peace and college peace teams is a very valuable thing.
5. That we interest those students who are corresponding with foreign students to select peace problems for some of their letters.
6. That we encourage those students going to Europe to study our peace position and to interpret it during their stay in Europe.
7. That we organize regional peace meetings.
8. That we encourage an intercollegiate peace oratorical contest.
9. That we stress anew the Biblical basis of our peace convictions and nonresistance as "a total way of life."
10. That we establish a mailing list of all present officials of college peace clubs.
11. That a planning committee be formed, composed of one Mennonite Central Committee Peace Section member (as chairman), one member of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges, and two or three students from college peace groups located in the same region; that this planning committee prepare for another intercollegiate peace conference for next year and to invite students interested in peace but not members of the peace groups.
12. That a secretary be selected to pool ideas from the college peace groups concerning program plans and minutes and also to serve on the planning committee for next year's conference (Selected, Emma Sommers).

HONOLULU. Captain Ellsworth W. Taylor of Kapoho, Hawaii, has resigned his commission in the Officers' Reserve Corps and declared his intention never to participate in further military activities, whether in peace-time or war, but to devote himself to pacifism. He is 29; a native of Tacoma, Washington, and a teacher with a wife and two young children. He received his commission in the O.R.C. after honorable discharge from the Army, following five years of service, three of them during the war.—Alternative

April 2, 9:00 - 4:00

The chief emphasis in past workshops has been on teaching methods for the lower level child. Children's workers responsible for the smaller child gained much valuable help from these sessions.

Concern: the Older Child

The request, however, came to us that this year it was time to center our emphasis on the upper level child, on methods for teaching juniors and intermediates.

It is our privilege to answer that we were able to secure as guest speaker, Miss Elizabeth A. Showalter of Kalona, Iowa. Miss Showalter is at present teaching in the Mennonite academy at Kalona. She is the writer of three courses in the new Summer Bible School series.

Our New Materials Presented by Author

Since our Conference edition of two of these courses, Grades V and VII, will be ready for distribution at worshop time, we have asked the author to present them to us personally and to give us such teaching helps for the junior and intermediate age as she thinks valuable.

Everyone interested is heartily welcome to attend this year's workshop, April 2, 9:00-4:00.

Editorials

"IF ANY MAN BE IN CHRIST, HE IS A NEW CREATURE: old things are passed away, behold, all things are become new." These words from II Corinthians 5:17 RV with special emphasis on the all are most fitting for our thinking during Lent. For those who are most concerned about the cause of Christ this verse ought to be especially revealing. In the last analysis the most dynamic Christian is often the most susceptible to the temptation to lift out one phase of the total Christian concern and carry on a crusade in behalf of that. Some may even hesitate to call this a temptation, for efficiency calls for concentration. Yet the temptation enters in when the individual permits blindspots to develop in areas outside his field of concentration. Some of us are primarily concerned about maintaining purity of doctrine, and that should be a major concern for all. This is true because on the whole our behavior is shaped according to our basic beliefs. On the other hand all of us are aware of the fact that we can become so much concerned with doctrine that we forget belief must evidence itself in conduct. When this happens we have developed a dead faith. We need to be reminded that Jesus was the perfect example of all he taught except in the area of sin. If we divorce works from faith we will be guilty of the very sins which we say he bore for us. Similarly if we concentrate on one doctrine out of all due scriptural proportion we rob Christ of the power to deliver us from sin in all areas of our lives—JJE

WHAT HAS JUST BEEN SAID ABOUT DOCTRINE-EMPHASIS must also be said about ethics. Sometimes we become so much concerned with right conduct—and this factor is very basic—that we forget that ways of behavior have their roots in ways of feeling and thinking. When for any length of time the Church has stressed behavior to the minimizing of doctrine, it has always become powerless as a force in society simply because it has ministered to a part of man and ignored the springs of behavior in the mind and the emotions. Furthermore, just as in the area of doctrine, so in the area of ethics there is a common tendency to concentrate on this or that particular personal or social sin and forget that "all things" are to become new. As Mennonites we need to be particularly careful that we do not fall into the typical denominational sin of seeing only one need. If we slip into this sin we shall pay the usual price —losing our usefulness as an instrument in in the hands of God and consequently becoming subjects for the purging judgments of God. In our emphasis on the unconditional law of love, let us be careful that this is the ultimate fruit of a life at all points yielded up to Christ rather than just an emphasis that may not have real connection with life at major areas of everyday living. Our denomination can make its contribution, as a member, to the Body of Christ only as it permits its specific emphasis to shine forth from the background of a way of life that is concerned about all the needs of the Body of Christ.—JJE

THERE IS A GROWING AWARENESS of the need of more consciously planning for the appeal of the church to young people to respond to the call of the Master to full-time work in a church-vocation. Too long have we been reticent to help every young person confront the choice between a non-church and a church vocation even before he considers the various opportunities in the field of non-church vocations. Of course, we need to be careful that we do not put the two on different levels of importance; for, God has often used the laity in a much more extensive way than the professional. But having said that, we dare not assume that without direct appeal the ministerial, missionary, education, clerical, medical, as well as other aspects of the church's need for manpower will automatically be taken care of. Is it saying too much when we make the assertion that the reason why the church is undermanned is that we have forgotten to stress that fact that one needs as clear a calling to go into a non-church vocation as most people feel is needed to go into church vocations. The true disciple of Christ will avoid merely drifting into a vocation. He will answer to any vocation as to the very call of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. Pastors and churches should be sure that their youth make the concern about their vocation as much a part of their total Christian concern as there very loyalty and consecration to Jesus Christ. The Curriculum Committee of the Conference, which works under the Board of Education, has prepared a booklet "The Master Calleth for Thee" which together with a carefully planned appeal through young people's activities in particular and the church program as a whole can be made a means of helping our youth hear the Master's call to His place for them.—JJE

ONE OF THE FACTORS that may be responsible for the lack of workers in church vocations is the fact that the total impact of the Church upon the average young person is so scattered and so slight that youth do not feel it is a very important matter. Two "arms" of the church are coming to the fore that may help remedy this situation. One is the Christian school and the other is the summer camp (better known to us as our retreats). Consistent association of the disciples with Jesus was probably the most crucial factor in the victory of the early Christian Church. Where in our total program for our seniors and young people do we have the equivalent of such sustained contact with consecrated Christian personality outside our church schools on the various levels and the summer camps.—JJE

A Suggested Procedure for General Conference

Recognition of Organizations and Institutions

(as recommended by the 1949 Council of Boards for further consideration by Conference)

Section I Purposes and Benefits

The General Conference has found it advisable to discover ways of identifying ministers and congregations as belonging to the Conference fold and activities, such as missions, relief, publications, etc., as being part and parcel of its work.

In order to give guidance it should be equally desirable for the General Conference to have some recognized procedure whereby organizations and institutions could establish official relationship with our Conference.

Organizations and institutions referred to herein fall into three general categories:

A. Those within the General Conference, such as the Canadian Bible College, the Oklahoma Bible Academy, the Bethel Deaconess Hospital, the Frederick Home for the Aged, private mission or benevolent enterprizes, and others.

B. Those involving cooperation with other Mennonite bodies, such as the Congo Inland Mission, Mennonite Pioneer Mission, the Mennonite Central Committee, Grace Bible Institute, the Grace Children's Home, and others.

C. Those involving cooperation with non-Mennonite evangelical bodies, such as the American and Northern Bible societies, the Presbyterian Ministers' Fund, foreign mission-, home mission-, and Christian education councils, temperance unions, Lord's Day societies, and others.

Mutual benefits growing from such affiliation or cooperation would include:

1. The tendency to greater clarification of the mutual relationship, leading to better understanding; mutual helpfulness; and spiritual fellowship.

2. The Conference would feel free to offer counsel and guidance; the organization or institution would also feel free to come to the Conference for counsel and guidance.

3. The Conference would also assume a greater responsiblity for the spiritual and material support of the organization or institutions.

4. The privilege of mutual fellowship and understanding with other Mennonite and non-Mennonite evangelical bodies.

5. The possibility of an extended scope of Christian service at home and abroad.

6. The progressive attainment of unity in basic Christian convictions as well as in fruitful and consistent Christian living.

Section II Suggested Procedure

An organization or institution desiring affiliation or a cooperative relation with General Conference should make application in writing through the respective board or standing committee of the Conference which is charged with the oversight of the general type of service which the applying organization or institution represents. This board or committee, after examining the aim and work of the applying organization or institution, shall report its findings with recommendations to the Executive Committee of the General Conference for general review.

If the Executive Committee, after careful consideration, favors such recognition, it shall report its findings and recommendations to the General Conference in session for consideration and action.

For general information, all affiliated and cooperating organizations and institutions shall be listed annually, in proper classification, in the official Conference yearbook.

In order properly to weigh the advisability of such General Conference recognition it is suggested that consideration be given to items such as the following:

1. The aim, scope, and character of the work of the organization or institution and its harmony with General Conference aims and methods of work.

2. The need for the service of the organization or institution in our Conference enterprise, so as to avoid unnecessary overlapping with organizations or institutions already serving our Conference or its potential service area.

The Executive Committee of the General Conference, consisting of the officers (J. N. Smucker, president, standing) and the chairmen of the various Boards and Committees.

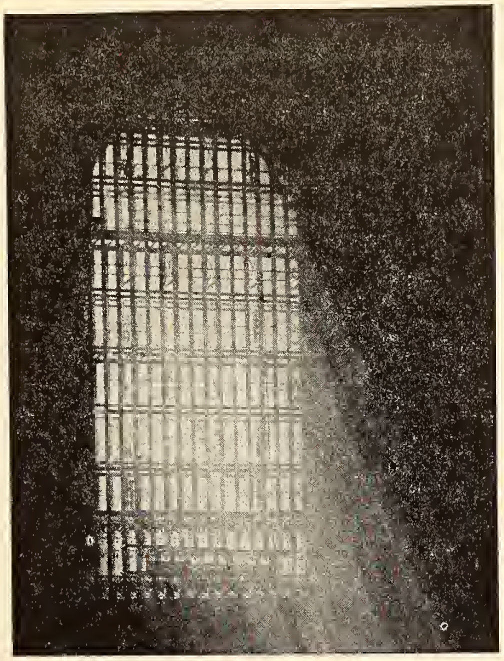
Ellis Graber

Some of the worshippers who enter this church bow their heads in prayer immediately after they are seated. We heartily commend them for following such a fine custom.

The practice of private prayer at the beginning of a worship service is one that has been handed down from the earliest times. It was followed in the early Christian Church. Later in the Roman Catholic Church and in some Protestant Churches it became customary to kneel in prayer immediately after entering the House of God. In some churches, instead of kneeling the worshipper bowed his head in prayer while seated. Whatever the outward form, the practice is a good one and should be continued. Certainly we need to follow it ourselves and teach it to our children by word and example.



Church is different from any other assembly or gathering. Therefore, it is important that we prepare our hearts for worship not by visiting our neighbors but by meditation and prayer.

There are prayers that may be memorized for this purpose. But instead of printing them and suggesting that they be memorized we would rather call to mind some of the things for which we would pray as we begin the worship service:

Pray for yourself—that God will cast out all other thoughts from your mind; that you may be receptive in spirit; that as the Scriptures are read, hymns sung, and the Word preached, God may speak anew.

Pray for other worshipers—so that the service may be a blessing to all.

Pray for the work of the church—that here in the homeland and overseas its work may be found worthy.

Pray for the choirs—that the beauty of the words and music may draw us close to God.

Pray for the pastor—that he might rightly divide the word of truth.

Each Sunday morning just before the service begins the pastor and the choirs meet and unitedly ask God to bless the service.

As you are seated in the sanctuary why not join them? Remember you are a participant and not a spectator. Lift a prayer to God. Pray that His Spirit might touch each of us. Say with us, "Lord make me a blessing."—Zion Church Bulletin, Souderton, Pa.

4. In the case of Mennonite organizations and institutions, the wholehearted adherence to both the General Conference constitution and work, and the Statement of Doctrine as approved by it in 1941.

5. The promotion of the peaceful upbuilding of Christ's cause in our Conference and among our churches and people.

6. The willingness to work with and report to the board or committee of the Conference charged with the oversight of the respective area of service.

7. In the case of organizations and institutions of a more general rather than a local nature, within the Conference, the willingness to arrange for a majority representation on its board of control, to be nominated, elected, or appointed by our General or district Conferences.

8. In the case of inter-Mennonite or non-Mennonite evangelical organizations and institutions, the willingness to have Conference representation nominated by the official Conference board or standing committee charged with the respective area of activity and approved by the Executive Committee of the General Conference.

expensive to work, and most susceptible to Christian influence. This field is closer to us than the closest heathen land; it is nearer than the nearest street corner where the Gospel is brought. This mission field is our Christian home—the mission subjects are our little children. In contemplating mission fields, this home field is the most overlooked and consequently the most neglected."

We appoint missionaries to evangelize heathendom. Know this, God has appointed us parents to evangelize our children. If we do not instruct our children in the Gospel truth, then our children will be lost and we may rightly be held responsible for their lost condition. What a tremendous responsibility is ours."

Christian schools are needed to preserve the teaching of the Christian home. Why not send your boy and girl to a Christian school? The cost is nominal but the returns are eternal.

Christian High Schools

The Front Line of Mission Work

Daniel J. Unruh

"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son, and the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Possibly too often have we placed the emphasis of our mission program upon the "Go Ye" and have forgotten the other and more important emphasis of "teaching them." For the "Go Ye" can only be effective in it's true purpose when we are true to the second, "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

When we think of missions we too often think only of heathendom or prodigality. We think of other races and other conditions, but there is one other mission field that because of its proximity, because of the leavening emphasis of materialistic and secular education has well nigh escaped our notice. This mission field is our home and the subjects are our own children.

The Charge

God has charged us with a most sacred responsibility when he intrusts the life of a child unto our care. The physical welfare, the mental development, the place in the world that your child may fill are all of vital importance; but as Christians there comes to us a greater and a more important obligation, namely, to direct the child into a true relationship with his Creator and Redeemer. To know God as Lord of the universe, to love the Lord Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour of his life and to recognize the Holy Spirit as one who makes known the will of God to His children by His leading through the teaching of the Holy Scriptures all this is highly imperative.

Yes, the Word of God charges parents with the responsibility of providing Christian nurture for their children, to "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." If we neglect to provide these essential needs, can we escape the indictment of I Timothy 5:8 "But if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever." Mark Falkema has well said, "To spend money in foreign lands for evangelizing pagans and allow our own children to be paganized in the home land is the height of parental neglect and the perversion of all true missionary endeavor."

The Challenge

Many Christian parents believe they have fulfilled their Christian obligation by giving their children a half-hour of Christian instruction a week in the Sunday School, while at the same time they set aside approximately thirty hours a week to indoctrinate them in a view of life which, by Supreme Court ruling, must exclude all Gospel teaching. Add to this an even worse situation; in many instances much of this week-day instruction is given by unbelieving teachers who insidiously undermine the teaching of the Christian home and of the Sunday school.

> When we think of missions we too often think only of heathendom or prodigality. We think of other races and other conditions, but there is one other mission field that because of its proximity and because of the leavening emphasis of materialistic and secular education has well nigh escaped our notice. This mission field is our home and the subjects are our children.—D. J. Unruh.

Many a young high school student has scarcely made his baptismal vow and church covenant when he is plunged into an environment of daily work where the effectiveness of maintaining a family altar is vitiated, and his Christian culture is rudely and all too frequently derisively torn from his feeble attempts to defend himself or his faith.

Too often the home efforts to train the children are undermined by a strong day-school program which implicitly, if, not explicitly, denies our Lord. As a result many, many high school students have already compromised their convictions, have taken on habits and practices that unless they are broken will ruin them physically, morally, and spiritually, yea, ruin them eternally. First it's the school spirit, then the gang, then the "hang-out," then the cigarette, the school dance, then the over-crowded promiscious, and unchaperoned automobile parties, the pool-room, the road-house and ruin. Any one or all of these steps are too frequently the easy steps to ruin.

That is the challenge, out every night, seldom in Church, little respect for parental discipline, almost totally ignorant of God's Word but caught in the madstorm of unprincipled information and shameless standards of ethics. They are eventually the victims of license, of chance, and of religious liberalism.

"Let us re-enforce our Christian home training with Christian school education lest we surrender our children, as well as our nation, to inevitable paganism."

The Cost

"What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" May I paraphrase this so as to emphasize a further application, "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain for his children an inexpensive education and lose their souls." What shall it profit a man if he supplies all the material needs of his family and they lose their love for the Lord Jesus, for the Church, for the Holy Bible and lose their sense of right and wrong.

It costs to keep up Christian schools. It costs to send children to Christian schools. It costs to do missionary work. It costs to maintain a Christian testimony and the world is not going to pay the cost for us.

Our frontline of missionary endeavor is in our home. I quote once more from Mark Falkema's leaflet, "The Most Neglected Mission Field." "There is one more mission field. It is most basic in character, most in-

Mutual Aid Board Points

Young People to Caldwell, Idaho

by J. W. Fretz

At its annual meeting at Bloomington, Illinois, the Board of Mutual Aid decided on a program of assistance to a limited number of young couples who wish to avail themselves of settlement opportunities at Caldwell, Idaho. In this flourishing community of over 10,000 people there is a small Mennonite church with a full-time pastor in its second year of existence as an independent church. The agriculture in the surrounding area is all irrigation farming. New land has been brought into cultivation as a result of irrigation facilities that have recently been developed. Plans will be developed for selecting a limited number of young couples who are interested in irrigation farming, and who are willing to identify themselves with a new Mennonite community. More detailed plans will be announced at a later date.

During the past year the Board of Mutual Aid has assisted fifty young men with loans for such purposes as purchasing livestock, furniture, farm equipment, or homes. The money for these loans was made available by loans from individual church members and official church boards. The Mutual Aid Board has been operating with $44,000 as of the end of the past year. In addition to making loans it has helped individuals find jobs and provided counseling services for young people. The Board was created in 1941 by the General Conference with one of its purposes being a means through which church members could invest their money toward useful ends within the church. While the Board accepts gifts from individuals and congregations it looks for the majority of its funds to loans for which it pays interest up to 2 per cent. It, in turn, makes this money available for use at 3 per cent interest.

The money of the Board is in a revolving fund. As old loans are repaid new ones are made. Because some of the loans for which the Board is responsible to its creditors need to be repaid, it is necessary constantly to receive new funds from additional investors. The Board invites members to give prayerful consideration to this form of investment.

This is the beginning of a program of Mutual Aid that may expand significantly to strengthen the entire church. It is intended to create confidence on the part of young people in their church. Also, it is an expression of concern on the part of the older people for the needs of its youth. This is especially urgent in cases where capable, devoted, and deserving Christian young people have no assurance of assistance within their own families.

Book Notes

When a book with a secular title reads like the prophecy of Amos then Christians may well take note. THE AMERICAN FARMER, by Lee Fryer, published by Harpers, 1947 (paper edition $1.00) maintains that a decent rural life is possible. The difficulty is that everyone is pitted against the farmer; business corporation, speculators and other big interests. The large-scale mechanized farm is competing with the family farm. Three types of farmers are on the verge of economic death: the farmer who tries to earn a living on a small acreage with a few cows and hogs, the family-farm operator, 100-174 acres who works independently, and the sharecropper. To be saved from death will mean organization for efficient production and for survival.

"The idea of a free unorganized society which automatically works for the benefit of the people is dead." Farmers are the only business operators in the country who consistently sell at wholesale and buy at retail. The farmers' selling price has no status. Farmers must organize for self preservation.

This book may make you angry or enthusiastic, but all of us should know why the family farm is disappearing and decide what we can do.—David C. Wedel.

In the Headlines

MOUNTAIN LAKE, MINNESOTA: All General Conference Mennonites together with the Mennonite Brethren and the Evangelical Mennonite Brethren are cooperating in a drive to provide refugee Mennonite farmers in Paraguay and Uruguay in South America with much-needed farm equipment this spring.

Some of the churches are almost through with their work on this project. Farmers from these churches are bringing their excess but usable farm equipment to the Penner Implement Company, in Mt. Lake, Minnesota, where it is being repaired, painted, dismantled, and made ready for shipment. It is hoped to have them on their way very soon under the direction of the Mennonite Central Committee.

One of the church chairmen working on this project called the Observer and wished the fact made known that a good supply of row-crop cultivators have been brought in, but no planters have been received. Some discs have been donated, but more are needed.

The church committees are hoping farmers will take note of this, and those who have not yet brought in their machinery gifts to do so, or get in touch with the committee chairman for their particular church in case they need help of any kind.—Mt. Lake Observer

Holy Week Witnessing

Unusual Opportunity to Share

We are united in the conviction that the Gospel of redemption through Jesus Christ is for all men, and that it is God's will that it should be proclaimed to all men. During Holy Week when our hearts are warmed by the remembrance of what our Saviour has suffered for all of us we feel the urge to share the Gospel. The announcement of the Week of Witness in the last issue of this paper suggested that we begin by helping our fellow-believers and our children.

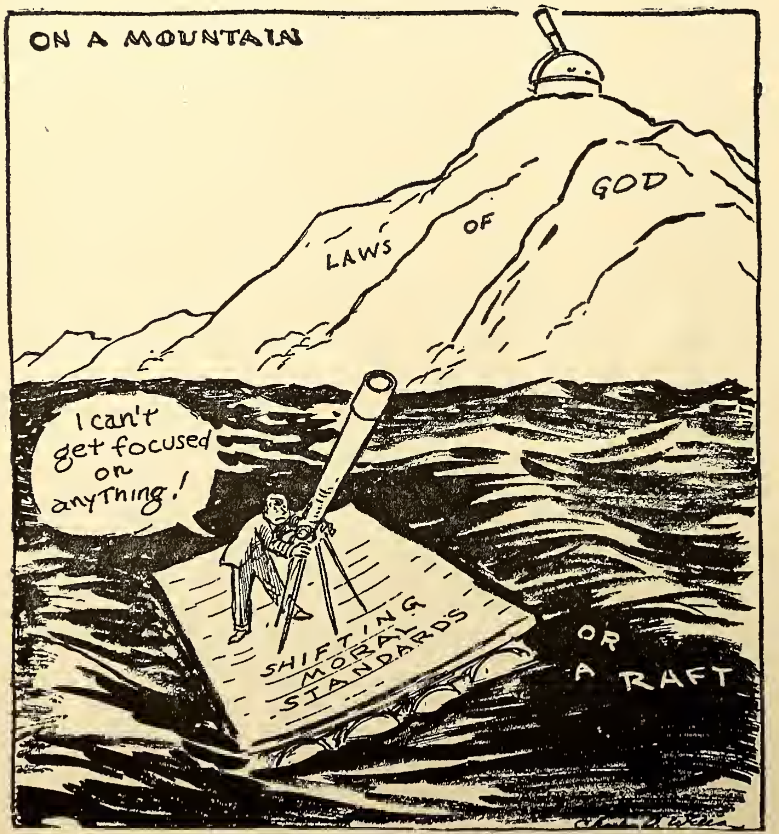
With Sub-Christian Christians

There are many people who have made a public confession of Christ as their Saviour who nevertheless do not seem to realize what the implications of discipleship are. Much unchristian living must be ascribed to the fact that Christian people do not understand how the teachings of Jesus relate to our present day life situations. If you know of a Christian brother who is evidently not clear on how the teachings of Jesus are to be lived out, would it not be a gesture of kindness to go to him and share with him what you believe is involved in obeying Christ according to the Scriptures? Be sure you have a Scripture basis for what you say. Then you may leave it to the Holy Spirit to convince people of the truth you present. It is possible that you may have to wait for an opportunity to do this. Perhaps you can create the opportunity by calling on your Christian friend and in the course of conversation make your witness.

With Our Children

Speaking of children Jesus says, "of such is the Kingdom of heaven." Still they need to be won to Christ. We must teach them to love and to honor Jesus. Our American schools by their silence on religion influence children against Christ. Children receive the impression that religion is something "sissy," and something about which educated teachers do not speak. We should not take it for granted that our children will follow Christ. They must be led to do so. Holy Week lends itself very well to speak to our children about what Jesus suffered in love for us. Whoever has the opportunity to touch the hearts of children should consider Holy Week a time when well-planned and concerted efforts are made to awaken in the hearts of children a love for our Saviour.

THE EVANGELISM COMMITTEE



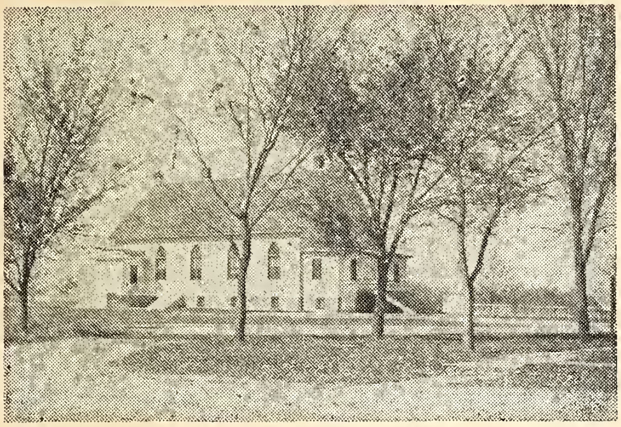
Point of Observation

By Charles A. Wells

November 27, 1948

Men never build observatories on rafts. And some people never get a good view of life and its long-range significance because the foundation of their observation is a shifting, unstable moral concept. Time and again they fail in some important task because they have miscalculated. When men want to study the stars, the planets, and the secrets of the universe from which we have learned so much, they make their observations from the high, solid foundations of a mountain—not from the drifting, swerving surface of a raft. The laws of God give us a viewpoint of life that is unerring, from which deductions can be made that will not betray us. If you can't get a clear and steadfast vision of your life, examine the foundation of your observations.

BEHIND THE 100% PLAN



FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH OF MOUNTAIN LAKE, MINNESOTA

Rev. L. A. Amstutz, Pastor
Rev. I. J. Dick, Pastor-Emeritus
(Serving 175 homes)

The First Mennonite Church was erected in the year 1882. The present church was built in 1911, and in 1947, a parsonage was erected. The First Mennonite Church was organized in 1878 under the leadership of Rev. Gerhard Neufeld. He was elected as minister in the year 1868 in South Russia and immigrated to America in the year 1878, settling with his family on a farm two miles east of Mountain Lake. As there was no church building at that time, services were held in the different homes. Reverend Neufeld served as Elder until 1908, when Rev. Jacob J. Stoesz was ordained as elder of the church. In the year 1920, Rev. I. J. Dick was ordained as elder and served till 1947, at which time the present pastor, Rev. L. R. Amstutz, was elected by the congregation. Reverend Amstutz comes from the Ebenezer Mennonite Church, of Bluffton, Ohio.

Besides our regular Sunday school and services on Sunday mornings, we have the Senior and Junior Christian Endeavor Societies, which meet once a month, a young people's organization, a midweek Bible study, and prayer meeting; also three mission societies—Oakleaf, First Mennonite Mission, and the King's Daughters.

Active in our church is a mixed and men's choir.

The present membership is 454.

Revolution or Revival

Reward for effort, profit for initiative are generally regarded as the cardinal virtues of capitalism. We accuse the socialized state and communism of destroying these incentives that stimulate achievement and inventiveness. And certainly the records of the past amply support this indictment.

But today, with industial-capitalism reaching new stages of complex magnitude, millions of men and women are finding themselves submerged behind endless rows of machinery, and millions more smothered under the monotony of office routine; their identities are swallowed up, their personalities obliterated—the very mechanics of their work provide neither opportunity for initiative nor the stimulation of incentive. Bound by obligations to dependents and immeshed in a dehumanized industrial pattern that has caught them and moves them along like cogs in a machine, their chances of sharing "free enterprise" are almost cogs in a machine, their chances of sharing "free enterprise" are almost nil.

That's why—in spite of all the fine advertising concerning the benefits of capitalism and free enterprise put out by the Chambers of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers—millions of Americans are deciding that free-enterprise begins at five thousand dollars a year.

Technological advances have dehumanized industry; slick advertising and slogans will not stop socialism nor protect capitalism—until business leaders wake up to the drastic need for the re-humanization of industry. Unless men and women are given a sense of belonging, of sharing, of being a respected and recognized part of the system they serve, devastating social and economic erosion is inevitable.

Christianity teaches that men and women are first in the scale of values. The plain fact is that far too many American business leaders priding themselves on being hard-headed realists, have also become hard hearted materialists. In their brisk sophisticated affluence they have ignored the church, Christian prnciples, and the spiritual virtues that gave American capitalism its early fruitful atmosphere of neighborly sharing.

We'll never stop socialism and communism from fomenting at the bottom of the American social structure unless we have a spiritual awakening at the top.—Between the Lines

The Reader Says

Under the heading "They Choose to Stay" The Mennonite of January 11, 1949 brought an interesting article on the mission situation in China. A few additional observations should be added.

Since 1927 when some 200 Protestant boards and agencies in the United States and elsewhere had 8,000 missionaries in China, the number has decreased to less than 3,000 under some 125 boards in 1949 with the major reason for the decrease being a series of crises involving communism and war.

It is yet to be seen whether the few missionaries remaining in communist-occupied territory will be able to carry on their work in view of the above observations.

Boards are shifting personnel to unoccupied areas; but what will happen when the communists occupy there?

As for older missionaries who say that they have lived through many a revolutionary period (the writer has also), it may be presumed that they have lived in parts of China where communists have not held sway. Old missionaries in the North of China have stated repeatedly that it is impossible to carry on under communist rule at present. Of course, it remains a probability that the communists may become friendly, when they come to power, but that depends on the political situation which is too much overlooked. After all they are communists after the Russian pattern.

Signed, Ernest Kuhlman.

Roverstein Home Closes

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA.—One of the main centers of activity in the refugee migration program for the past years has been the Roverestein Home in Holland. This estate was rented from the owner in February, 1946, to house the several hundred Russian Mennonite refugees that came into Holland out of Germany. As refugee movements to Paraguay and other countries became possible, Roverestein became one of the places where processing of the refugees took place. The cost of this work was assumed by the Mennonite Central Committee, although over one-third of the support was provided by the Dutch Mennonites. Roverestein was closed at the end of January after arrangements were made for the last of the occupants to be located in various private homes. This closes a significant chapter in the post-World-War-II refugee assistance work of the Dutch Mennonites and the MCC.

Conditions Improve in Paraguay

Recent reports from the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay indicate that the difficulties brought about by the drought and grasshoppers during past months, have been relieved to a considerable extent. The crops, after having been re-planted several times, are now promising to yield a satisfactory harvest.

The new settlements are making progress in becoming established, although the ratio of men is less, and the people have had to live through a longer period of refugee life than had been the caes with the Mennonite settlers who came to Paraguay from Russia a generation ago. These factors are important in the time required for becoming fully rehabilitated and settled in a new homeland.

MCC Waldensian Effort, Italy

The MCC program in Italy is centered at Naples. Here, through work in cooperation with the Waldensian church, it is hoped that a significant contribution can be made in material and spiritual rehabilitation. Needy children will be given supplementary food, as well as religious instruction. Activities of general home welfare, helping in material and physical ways, and finding channels for a spiritual ministry through word and deed, are the central objectives.

Personnel Notes

Orie O. Miller returned on February 24, after having visited the South American Mennonite colonies in order to help in planning the further MCC assistance to these colonies.

Arthur Voth, who served for a time at the Akron office, and later spent over two years in the refugee migration program in Europe, is now located at the Akron office where he is assisting in the work of the Mennonite Aid Section. Mrs. Voth (Anna Mae Gross), who also had served at the MCC office for several years, has returned with Brother Voth to assist in a secretarial capacity.

A Church School
Organized for Mission Study

by Richard Blosser

That the whole church can become interested in mission study is evidenced by the growing interest that has been shown in the School of Missions sponsored annually by the Bethel College congregation. The fifth annual school, conducted from January 9 to February 6 this year, was considered by many to have been one of the most successful held so far. It had as its theme one of the focal points of world interest—China. In spite of severe January weather, several hundred members, students, and children of all ages gathered for the sessions each Sunday evening in the Student Union Room of Memorial Hall.

. . . There was Fellowship . . .

The School followed the pattern of previous years. Each evening opened with a fellowship meal at 5:30, served by one of the church or College organizations. At 6:30 the entire group joined in the singing of several missionary hymns, after which the various age groups went to their rooms for the study periods.

. . . And Expert Leadership . . .

The School was fortunate to have as teachers and discussion leaders a number of persons who had lived and worked in China. The adult discussion leader was Ed. G. Kaufman; The college-age group was led by Sam J. Goering; high school age by Harley Stucky; Intermediates and Juniors by Jessie Brown and Mrs. W. C. Voth; and Primary by Marjorie Linscheid, and Marjorie Reimer.

. . . And Appropriate Materials . . .

Text books with guides and maps for all these groups were secured through the Missionary Education Movement, 156 5th Avenue, New York, N. Y. Titles of the books, from adult to primary, were "Christian Voices in China," "Rising Through the Dust," "Tai Lee's Precious Seed," "Dike Against the Sea,' and "Watch-Goat Boy." In order to relate the study to the mission program of our own conference, supplementary material was also secured through the Women's Missionary organization of the conference.

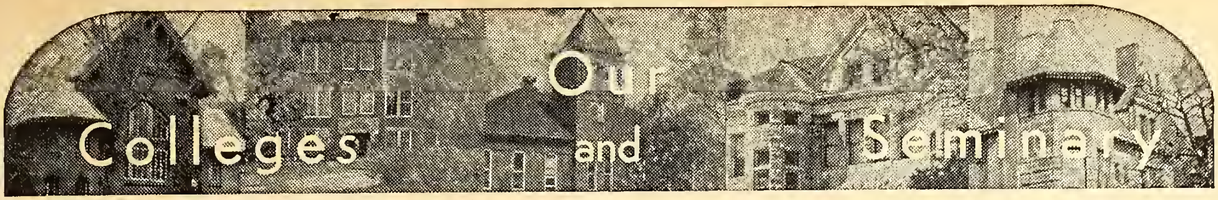
. . . And Visual Aid . . .

Following the classes the entire group came together again for several brief films or a special speaker. A number of high-quality films were shown which realistically portrayed life in present-day China as well as the missionary activities there.

The School was planned and conducted by the Christian Education Committee of the church: J. Winfield Fretz (chairman), Cornelius Krahn, and Mrs. Selma Platt, assisted by the Pastor, Rev. Lester Hostetler.

. . . And a Missionary Challenge . . .

Among other values, it was felt that this year's school made a definite contribution in terms of a better understanding of the Chinese and their problems, the revolutionary forces now at work in China, the task of the Christian Church there, and the challenge which China offers to Christians in America.



Our Colleges and Seminary

Canadian Mennonite Bible College

The student body elected Bill Dick, second-year student from Leamington, Ontario, to attend the Y.P.U. Conference at Chicago, February 10-12. Bill gave us a very interesting report on the Conference on Wednesday, February 23.

On Saturday, February 19, the students of the Mennonite Brethren Bible College were guests at C.M.B.C. An interesting program, featuring a play depicting the life story of Fanny Crosby, the well-known hymn writer, was given by the students of our sister college. After the program students of both colleges mingled freely to get acquainted, and then partook of refreshments.

The Bethel Mission Ladies Aid sponsored a program, Sunday February 20, for the purpose of raising funds to help reduce the debt on the girls' dormitory at 146 Furby Street. Highlight of the program was the "visit" the audience was allowed to make to 146 Furby at which time the girls gave the audience a glimpse into everyday life by putting on a short skit.

Tuesday, February 22, the voice and violin students gave their first recital in the chapel.

Rev. I. I. Friesen, our pastor and teacher, attended the meeting of the Council of Boards of the General Conference at Bloomington, Illinois.

FOR FREEMAN: A NEW GYM

An oral contract has been drawn up with A. C. Morgan, from Yankton, for the building of the new gym. Plans were changed and the building is to be built of brick-crete instead of wood. Mr. Morgan promises to have the building up six weeks after he has the brick. It will need 70,842 bricks.

Pastors from the churches in the surrounding communities have been guest chapel speakers. The Rev. Warkentin from the M. B. church gave a message entitled, "Thou, O God Seest." Rev. T. A. van der Smissen, pastor of the Bethesda church near Marion, gave us some thoughts on the responsibility of a child of the King.

President Miller also spoke to the students. He encouraged us not to give up if we come to one door and find it closed but rather look for the hand that points to another door. He used Abraham Lincoln as an example of one who did this. A biography of Abraham Lincoln was delivered to the students by John M. Hofer of the Bethany church.

Ralph Graber represented Freeman Junior College at a Young People's Union meeting held at the Seminary in Chicago.

An evening of fellowship was spent by the Christian Youth Volunteers at a social held in the College Gym.

Delores Little Bear was called home by the sudden death of her mother. Delores is from Lame Deer, Montana.

Christian Life Week at Bluffton

Rev. Don Smucker, leader of Christian Life Week, used the following topics in his public presentations to students: "The Gospel Ministry of Reconciliation," "Doom and Resurrection in the Soviet Union," "Victory over Sin," "Weighed in Balances," "Four Stategies for the Christian Life," "The Cross of Jesus Christ," "Christ and My Job," "The Meaning of the Lord's Supper."

Miss Anne Grave, North Central Coordinator, rendered valuable service in advising with respect to the general education program of the College, which is the special area which the College has been studying recently, as well as in giving counsel with respect to other phases of the College's program. She visited the campus February 22-24.

The College has been assisting in pulpit supply at the Dalton Mennonite Church, since the pastor of that church is completing his seminary work in Chicago and cannot be present every Sunday. Pres. Ramseyer had charge of the service February 27.

The trial of Prof. Gara on a charge of counseling non-registration is set for March 9 in the Federal Court in Toledo.

New Course at Bethel

One new course is being offered at Bethel College this spring quarter. At the request of students, "Peace Principles"—a course in the history, practice, and Biblical basis for peace—will be taught. The class is under the instruction of Dr. J. Winfield Fretz and is using Dr. Guy F. Hershberger's book, "War, Peace, and Nonresistance," as the basic text.

The seniors of Bethel College have chosen "The Servant in the House," well-known drama by Charles Rann Kennedy, as its class play. The play will be given Friday and Saturday evening, May 6 and 7. Tryouts for the play were held on Thursday, March 11, by W. T. Wilkoff, dramatics coach.

The Bethel College Fellowship dinner was held at Memorial Hall on Monday evening, March 7. Representatives from western district churches and other friends of the college were present.

The SCA has elected the following officers for the year 1949-1950: Pres., Leo Miller; Vice-pres., Harold Wedel; Sec., Mary Lou Baughman; Treas., Irving Faust.

The new officers of the Student Volunteers are: Pres., Robert G. Unruh; Vice-pres., Orlando Friesen; Sec. and Treas., Elsie Epp. Chairman for the various committees are: Joe Duerksen, Arthur Isaak, Alma Smith, Mary Lou Franz, and Paul Isaak.

Jottings

—Hebron Church, Buhler, Kansas: Two weeks of special meetings have been arranged for. March 20 to 25 will be young people's week with Prof. Menno Harder from Bethel College as the speaker. The theme is "The Christian Home." The second week of meetings from April 3 to 8 will be in charge of Rev. Victor Sawatzky of First Church, Hutchinson.

—First Church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: A new venture with respect to Mennonite men in Philadelphia was held in the form of a men's fellowship supper, in the Second Mennonite Church on February 7. A number from both churches attended.

—Bethel Church, Winton, California: February 6 members and visitors of this church enjoyed the fellowship and messages by Miss Helga Kemnitzer and Mrs. Anna Baumgartner from Bethel College. Mr. and Mrs. Willis Rich and son Jim also from N. Newton, Kansas, have been visiting our church during their stay in Oakland, California.—Loraine Heppner, Corr.

—West Zion Church, Moundridge, Kansas: Mr. and Mrs. Adam Mueller, Newton, spoke at the young people's meeting on February 5, on plans and location of the retreat grounds which have been purchased. The young people have been meeting in the church for several nights to begin work on the India Jubilee Posters which are to be completed by April 1.—Esther Schmidt, Corr.

—First Church, Moundridge, Kansas: Ground breaking services for the new church building were held here February 20, with Rev. Lester Hostetler of North Newton, Kansas, as the main speaker. Following his sermon, five minute talks by various members and guests were presented. A brief ceremony was also held on the site of the new building.

—Zion Church, Elbing, Kansas: "Is there a Mennonite way of Life?" was the topic for a panel discussion at our Christian Endeavor meeting on February 6. James Rutschman acted as chairman. Others taking part in this panel discussion were Louis Janzen, Walter Dyck, Edith Claassen, and Wolfgang Fieguth. The last mentioned is a foreign student at Bethel College. To sum up the discussion we would say—Yes, there is a Mennonite way of life, but it is also a Christian way of life, since the Mennonite teachings are based upon Scripture. There is only one way of Salvation for all men. Mennonites stress some points such as relief, non-resistance, refusal to take the oath, and others, more perhaps because other denominations stress them too little. We must strive to stress all points in proportion as they are given in the Scriptures and show it in our daily lives.—"Tiding of Zion."

—Deep Run Church, Deep Run, Pennsylvania: The Bucks County Sabbath School Association is sponsoring Monday evening Teacher Training Classes here for a series of eight weeks. A daughter Susan Ann was born to Rev. and Mrs. J. Herbert Fretz on February 15, 1949.—Corr.

—Immanuel Church Los Angeles, California: Betty Linscheid and Marvin Friesen were united in marriage on January 28. They are working in the City Terrace Mission. The third annual Missionary Conference dates have been set for March 6-11. The afternoon of February 27 has been set aside for dedication service of the Hammond organ recently donated to the church by a friend. A musical program was given by the members of the Christian Endeavor with each member responsible for one or two members. Solos, duets, octets, violin solos, and piano selections represented some of the talent. Mrs. J. J. Janzen of Henderson, Nebraska, was the visiting soloist.—Betty Kroeker, Corr.

—First Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Our pastor meets with the catechism class in the parsonage one hour every Sunday morning. The relief committee reports 3,387 cans of meat, 178 quarts jams and jellies, thirty pounds dried fruits and vegetables, four quarts canned fruits, 380 pounds soap and grease, forty-nine Christmas bundles, twenty-seven shoe kits and thirty-five farm implements were sent for relief this fall and winter.—Corr.

—Zion Church, Souderton, Pennsylvania: The Father and Son Banquet was a great success with 148 present. A wire recording was made of the program and played back to the pastor who was sick. This thoughtful gesture was much appreciated.

—First Church of Christian, Moundridge, Kansas: February 20, 1949, we had special services for the ground-breaking of the new church building. A number of five-minute talks by members representing different age groups were given and the sentiments were expressed to use this new equipment and the new building to a great service for God. Rev. Lester Hostetler, our guest speaker, spoke congratulatory words and impressed us with a deeper unity to use the church for a greater worship, better instruction, deeper fellowship, and a greater service to the congregation, community, and the world. Special music from a children's Sunday school class, a group of high school girls, and a mixed quartet furnished a variety of music for the service. The freezing weather permitted only a short service of ground-breaking given by our pastor, Rev. P. P. Wedel. An hour of fellowship followed at which time the ladies of the church served doughnuts and coffee.—Mrs. Mayron G. Stucky, Corr.

—Eighth Street Church, Goshen, Indiana: Ministers and their families of this area met at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Robert Hartzler December 29 for a basket supper and reception, honoring Rev. and Mrs. Rollin Moser who have assumed leadership of the Nappanee Church. Another large shipment of used and some new clothing for relief was made by women of the church. January 2 the motion picture, "The Power of God," was shown. Offering above expenses went to the Junior Youth Fellowship project of buying a movie projector for the church. January 9 Bertram Smucker, recently returned from relief work in Austria, spoke on why the Europeans have a claim upon our resources. February was designed as the "month of missions" for our church during which time special emphasis was laid on the needs of the Congo.

—First Church, Nappanee, Indiana: February 20 we received the collection for the Northern Indiana Brotherhood. The project this year is raising funds for the assistance of fellow Mennonites who are refugees in Paraguay and Uruguay. Our share was $800.

Conscientious Objector on Radio Interview

On January 24 Paul Goering appeared for a radio interview about conscientious objectors on the program called "BRUNCH WITH NAN AND BILL" a daily 15-minute broadcast from 12 noon to 12:15 over Station WQQW, Washington, D. C. Housewives form the largest segment of listeners at this time of day and the interviews are carried on in an informal, gossipy manner, often entirely ad lib. Housewives, ambassadors' and congressmen's wives, authors, band leaders, etc., are the types of persons usually interviewed.

It was decided to use this opportunity to illustrate public tolerance of CO's and explain the lack of information about them. A script was prepared to serve as a guide and the actual broadcast followed closely the script which appears below.

OUTLINE FOR INTERVIEW ON "BRUNCH WITH NAN AND BILL"

Station WQQW
Washington, D. C.
January 24, 1949.

NAN: We have with us today a real, live, conscientious objector. His name is Paul Goering. He is wearing a blue suit and a natty bow tie. He is 6'2" tall, weighs about 185 lbs., and looks very much like any other American citizen. And, though he is not the only conscientious objector in our country, he is the first one that we have had on our program.

BILL: Conscientious objectors are persons who by reasons of their beliefs are opposed to war and do not bear arms in the army. They believe in constructive rather than destructive living. As a boy Goering went to Sunday school and church, where he was taught that war and taking human life is sin, because each person is created in the image of God.

PAUL: Thank you, Nan and Bill, for that complete introduction from bow-tie to beliefs. Not only am I the first C.O. on your program, but I think that "Brunch with Nan and Bill" and WQQW should know how unique they really are. To the best of my knowledge this is the first program to devote an entire broadcast to conscientious objectors. Unless I am mistaken this is one of radio's famous "firsts."

NAN: Well, that is a surprise. I didn't know that C.O.'s were so rare. They must be few and far between.

PAUL: They are not rare, Nan. They exist in the membership and clergy in every American church. In the war there were conscientious objectors from 236 different religions and ethical groups. Some belong to no church. All of the major church denominations were represented. Fourteen denominations furnished over 100 conscientious objectors. They included the Catholics, Jewish, Methodist, Baptist, Disciples of Christ, Presbyterian, Mennonites, Church of the Brethren, Quaker (Society of Friends), and Evangelical and Reformed. They came from the South and North.

NAN: Now, wait a minute. I thought that I heard that some people in the South are unfavorable to President Truman's Civil Rights program. Now you tell me that they are CO's.

PAUL: I heard that too, Nan, but when southern people get religion they don't get it half way, they do a thorough job. We have many C.O's from the South.

NAN: What you say about southern religion is very true. We all can say Amen to that. But tell me, if CO's are not rare, why haven't they been on radio programs before where they could express their ideas? Other American minorities seem to find the air waves available. Don't Americans like CO's?

PAUL: Americans do like CO's Nan. Would they recognize them in the present draft or would they have made provisions for them during the war if this were not true? This is the strange part of the story. Not only my own experience, but that of many other fellow objectors, reveals the truly friendly spirit of Americans—civilian and soldier, public official and private citizen. The reason for the great American "hush-hush" about CO's seems to be that men in the spotlight are afraid that their public, their readers, their constituents, and their neighbors are not yet ready for such a liberal step. They lack faith in the tolerance of the common man. They themselves want to be tolerant and they are, but they won't take credit for fear that Americans are not democratic enough. My experience is that the public is very tolerant, especially veterans.

BILL: Is there much printed material about conscientious objectors?

PAUL: Why, Bill, there have been volumes written about conscientious objectors, but very little gets into the newspapers or magazines. The public is not only tolerant but even anxious for as much information and education as it can obtain on the things our government is doing. They don't like being left in the dark, even about CO's. Your program is filling a big gap. The "hush-hush" between leaders and the average citizen reminds me of a man and wife who are afraid to tell each other something because they think that it will hurt the other's feelings until they discover that they both knew it all the time anyway, and then the problem becomes a mirage. Do you know what I mean, Nan?

NAN: I certainly do. But it amazes me that Americans could have given the greatest demonstration of tolerance in history in the present draft act and be unwilling to mention their own Americanism. How does your experience bear that out?

PAUL: I was in college at the time I was drafted. Our nation was at war. I had registered and been classified as a conscientious objector. No one was surprised that I was classified that way. The people in my community expected me to be that. My friends and buddies in the army knew I was a C.O.

BILL: What did you do during the war?

PAUL: I asked to do relief work overseas. I was sent to a training center for this purpose. There were about 300 conscientious objectors in different centers in the country who were getting this training. It was looked upon as a beginning of a valuable program. Many other conscientious objectors had asked for this work and hoped to eventually be sent. I expected to be assigned to Europe; others were preparing for China and elsewhere. We had gotten a good beginning, but before we had gone three months this whole program was killed by a legislative rider attached to an appropriation bill which was passed by Congress. The first unit of men were already on their way to China when this bill passed and had gotten as far as Dakar, Africa, before they were called back. So the whole program was shot and we had to stay home, i.e., in the U. S. I respect the courage of men in the armed forces who fought, but in fairness to conscientious objectors I feel that I should assert my belief, there is no proof of this, but it is my belief that there was a higher percentage of conscientious objectors than soldiers who wanted and tried to get overseas.

NAN: Were the CO's needed overseas?

PAUL: Yes, they were, Nan. During the war General Stilwell wrote a letter to President Roosevelt to ask for American CO's to be sent to China to work with him. He reported that English conscientious objectors were doing good work in China. He obviously needed these men or he would not have asked for them. And he had also undoubtedly found that CO's do not undermine the morale of the men at the front. But his letter to the President remained unanswered.

BILL: Why weren't these men allowed to go overseas?

PAUL: Some folks in the government, some of the officials, had a false notion about the public's tolerance of CO's. They are afraid tha they would be criticized if they gave CO's an ordinary or somewhat conspicious function. They misjudged the spirit of the warm-hearted American public and the respect and toleration they hold for minorities. The Congress had made provisions for CO's; they had acknowledged them legally; the draft boards were classifying them, and yet some congressmen and officials were afraid to give the public the facts. I met and talked with soldiers on the trains and found them even more tolerant than the public. Some told me that this was one of the goals they were fighting for. But still the idea persisted in the minds of the people in government agencies that they had to apologize for CO's.

Paul Goering contributor of this article, is on the staff of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, 941 Mass. Ave., N. W., Washington 1, D. C. This article suggests the many contacts he experiences in his work in the national capitol.

NAN: Where did you go after your training for overseas was stopped?

PAUL: I asked for work in mental hospitals which were short of help. I was sent to the state hospital near Providence, R. I., where we had a unit of 85 CO's. Here again my knowledge of the public's attitude was tested. I was a member of a quartet of conscientious objectors which was soon invited to sing in the churches of Providence, and for civic groups. On one Sunday afternoon we sang for a large outdoor patriotic program. The master of ceremonies introduced us and did a beautiful job. Here we were, four strapping big fellows, out of uniform, singing on a crowded and full program. We got a nice ovation and sang an encore in addition to our announced numbers. Something else happened up there which is worth telling.

BILL: Well, go ahead.

PAUL: A minister who had invited us to sing at one of his services had a lady in his church who directed the choir. Both of her sons were in the army and one had been injured. When she heard that we were coming she went to the minister and told him if he let us come she was staying away and someone else could direct the choir. The minister stuck to his guns and said nothing to us. That night we appeared. The choir director was there too. After the service she came up to us, said she wanted to apologize. She told us her earlier attitude and then invited us to visit her studio. She began to buy us music and sponsor us over the city. She became our firm friend.

NAN: Well, that sounds like you had some friends.

PAUL: I think that was typical of the experience of CO's all over the country and I think it goes to show that the public morale was not undermined and that soldier morale at the front would not have been undermined had we been allowed to go overseas during the war. I think it shows again that the public officials were mistaken about the attitude of the American public towards its conscientious objectors. They made the same mistake about the attitude of the American public towards CO's that the pollsters made about the American public towards President Truman before his re-election.

BILL: Were there any CO's in the army?

PAUL: Yes, there were objectors in the army. But they did not bear arms. They distinguished themselves by going in under fire to rescue wounded men. They were medical corps men. Many soldiers met conscientious objectors in the army and developed a high regard for them. One of them was awarded the Congressional medal of honor.

NAN: Wasn't Lew Ayres, the movie actor, who became famous as Dr. Kildare, a conscientious objector?

PAUL: Yes. Lew Ayres was a CO in the army. He didn't get into the army at first but went there later when he was assured that his views would be respected, that he wouldn't have to carry weapons, and that he could do useful work. He was in the front lines under heavy fire helping wounded men.

NAN: Did Lew lose any of his popularity because he was a conscientious objector?

PAUL: There were a few columnists who criticized Lew and who predicted that he would ruin his career. A few praised him even then for his courageous stand. The war went on and the public didn't hear about Lew just as they didn't hear about the other conscientious objectors. But Lew came home a hero and now people are strangely attracted to the man who was willing to risk his career in order to be true to his convictions. And Lew's story again points out the tolerance of the American people towards a minority like conscientious objectors.

NAN: Well, time is about up. We are glad to have learned something about America's conscientious objectors and to interview one for the first time on our radio program.

PAUL: Thanks to both of you, Nan and Bill. If we were able to get across to your listeners the fact that my experience and the experience of other conscientious objectors bears out that Americans do tolerate conscientious objectors and want more information about them, then I feel that the program has been very valuable.

BILL: Nan, who is to be our guest tomorrow . . . . .?

"There were conscientious objectors from 236 different religious and ethical groups . . . . Fourteen denominations furnished over 100 conscientious objectors. They included the Catholics, Jewish, Methodist, Baptist, Disciples of Christ, Presbyterian, Mennonites, Church of the Brethren, Quaker (Society of Friends), and Evangelical and Reformed."

The Religious Life Committee also announces at this time a spiritual retreat to be held at the Community Center Foundation at Palos Park, Illinois, on March 12-13, having as its topic "The Devotional Life and Discipleship."

Statistics on the practical work assignments during the fall quarter have been announced by Marvin J. Dirks, director of this work. He reports that during this period our students preached 99 sermons, taught 54 week-day Bible School classes, 80 Sunday school classes, 80 deputation assignments, 200 pastoral calls, and 85 practice hours in choir work. In addition, we have several students working in settlement houses whose specific labors are not included in a survey of this kind. However, we rejoice in the many opportunties which our students have for practical witness in the name of Christ.

Speaking on Acts 1:8, Dr. H. A. Fast of Bethel College, an effective message at the Vesper Service last Sunday on our share in the enterprises of the Kingdom of God. He declared that the genius of the General Conference of Mennonites was the following thought, "In essentials unity, in non-essentials liberty, and tolerance, and in all things charity." He showed our peculiar status with a congregational polity, for the Conference is not a legislative body—the Conference is not a congress but a Gemeinschaft. The General Conerence, he said, had a God-given opportunity in the fellowship of Mennonite branches to blaze new trails. Even though we have only 46,000 baptized church members, he counseled the group not to despair because of smallness of numbers. For example, the Mennonite Central Committee, representing a number of small Mennonite branches, at one time contributed 80% of all relief which came into Germany and was doing more relief work than one of the largest denominations in the United States. Forward-looking movements, he said, start in small groups. Thus, he concluded, it is perfectly amazing what small groups can do with an intensive fellowship, clarity of purpose, and clear obedience to Jesus Christ. Dr. Fast made it clear that he was making these statements not to boast or be proud of the achievements of our Conference, and other similar Conferences, but only to encourage the Seminary students in their careers in this fellowship.

Nuremberg Trials Establish Individual Responsibility

The U.S. government, dominant in the Nuremberg trials, established a great fact of international law, that a citizen is morally responsible for his acts even if living under an immoral government, and that "a citizen . . . should refuse to obey his government when his government ordered him to do an evil act."

Without realizing it, this government through its military and civil authority, thus re-established and reaffirmed before the world the Protestant doctrine of the supremacy of the individual conscience. (In Spain, Italy and Latin America no such creed is taught or acknowledged. The citizen is not judged fit to make moral decisions—all matters of conscience and moral judgment are decided by the church-state authorities.)

But is the American government prepared to face the fruit of the doctrine it has so courageously and nobly reaffirmed? There are increasing numbers of American citizens who feel that it is morally wrong for civilized Christian nations to hurl down blistering scalding death upon defenseless women and children, or to dump tons of flaming, splattering petroleum and phosphorus jellies on babies and homes. It was not the Soviet that set the pace for the slaughtering of the innocents in the last war. For all the communist tyranny, the communist leaders, seeking world revolution, generally avoided civilian bombing. It was the Nazis first at Rotterdam and Coventry, then the Americans at Hamburg, Berlin, Tokyo, and finally Hiroshima and Nagasaki—slaughter that made amateurs of the Nazis.

So when American citizens decide—as many are—that their Christian consciences will not permit them to have any share in the support of that kind of warfare which for savagery has exceded the brutality of the communists—those citizens have as the foundation of their judgment the pronouncements of the international high courts of Nuremberg . . . "that a citizen is morally responsible for his acts, even if living under an immoral government, and that a citizen . . . should refuse to obey his government when his government ordered him to do an evil act."

MENNONITE MEN FOR CHRIST

At least twenty laymen are actively serving on a number of the Boards and Committees of the General Conference. They were in attendance at the annual sessions of the Council of Boards at Bloomington recently. They represented every district of the General Conference. Why not enlist one or two of the laymen from your district who were at Bloomington to come in and tell your local church brotherhood about their experiences at Bloomington?—Walter H. Temple

The Budget and War

Seventy-six cents of each dollar in the new budget proposed by President Truman for governmental spending will go for past, present, or future wars. This startling amount suggests the mood of our day and the way in which our government today proposes to deal with other nations. The budget President Truman asked for is $41,858,000,000. This means it will cost each man, woman, and child in the U.S.A. an average of $282.82 if that budget is to be raised. For a family of four, this equals $1,700. Here is the breakdown of the budget, how it will be spent per dollar:

National defense:	$ .34
International, "the cold war"	.16
Veterans' program	.13
Interest on public debt, largely a war debt	.13

Total of that which is chiefly military	$0.76
Health, etc.	.06
Natural resources development	.05
Government operation, etc.	.13
	$1.00

And, in addition to this annual budget which will cost an average of $282.82 per person, there is a 258 billion dollar national debt which becomes $1,750 per man, woman, and child or $10,000 per family with four children.

CITIZENSHIP WITHOUT 'ARMS' PROMISE

LINCOLN, FEBRUARY 4.—Jacob A. Wiebe, 31 Mennonite and conscientious objector of Beatrice, was Thursday granted citizenship by Federal Judge John W. Delehant. The citizenship was denied him nearly seven years ago.

According to F. W. Carsten, Beatrice attorney representing the applicant this was the first admission in Nebraska of a conscientious objector where the government had resisted.

Charles A. Rain, Omaha, naturalization examiner, who in May, 1942, recommended that citizenship be denied Wiebe, was again present Thursday. As to certain court decisions cited by counsel for applicant, Rain said that, generally speaking, they did not go so far as to include refusal to wear the uniform along with refusal to bear arms.

Although the law remains the same, Judge Delehant said the supreme court had modified its construction.

"I denied this application in 1942, on motion of the naturalization examiner," he said, "because of majority court decisions holding that unwillingness to bear arms as adequate to bar citizenship. Later decisions have departed from early thinking with many of the earlier decisions repudiated. Motions for denial of citizenship will be overruled and petition granted.—Beatrice Daily Sun

Index to the Mennonite for the Year 1948

How to Use This Index

This index is a single, composite index in which all authors, titles, and subjects of articles which appeared in THE MENNONITE during the year 1948 are arranged in one continuous, alphabetical series. References at the end of each item is to the issue number and the page in that issue. For example, the entry:

Alderfer, Jean, "Understanding" (a poem), 8-16 indicates that this poem will be found in issue number 8, on page 16. The dates of the issues which appeared in the year 1948 are given in the list of issue numbers herewith.

Names of individuals are mentioned only, as a general rule, where such individuals were authors of some article. Each article was cross-indexed by approximately two subject references. The only items appearing in the section "Jottings" were the names of churches and the names of Conference institutions.

It is suggested that this index be placed with the first or the last issue of your file of THE MENNONITE for this year, 1948.

In order to add one very useful feature to our annual index of THE MENNONITE we are, in this issue, for the first time, adding an index of visual materials. The subjects of the various pictorial illustrations are indexed in the same manner, by topic, or by name, as the articles themselves. For example, if you are looking for material for use in connection with a program, let us say, having to do with relief work in France, it may be found by checking under either:

French girl holding a Christmas bundle (2x3¼) 27-14

or

Relief in France. Girl sitting on chair holding a Christmas bundle (2x3¼) 27-14

The above entry indicates that picture on this subject may be located in issue No. 27, page 14

Additional copies of this index are available at 50 cents per copy.

Beyond Our Own

NEW YORK.—In an unprecedented demonstration of Christian cooperation, more than 75,000 churches across the country, representing nearly every major Christian denomination, are joining in a concerted program which they hope will result in the contribution on one day, March 27, of at least $10 million for the rebuilding of the physical and spiritual life of the suffering people of Europe and Asia.—The Christian Century

NEW YORK.—With the publication of 12 new languages, in 1948, some part of the Bible, according to information compiled by the American Bible Society, has now appeared in 1,108 languages and dialects. At the end of December, 1948, Bibles were published in 188 languages, New Testaments in 243 languages, a Gospel or other whole books in 585 languages, and selections from Scripture in 92 different languages, making a total of 1,108 languages in which some part of the Bible has been published.

Scriptures appeared in 1948 in new languages for people 300 miles north of the Arctic Circle as well as the steaming jungles of Africa. Six of the publications for Africa were: Bamileke, Kabba-Laka, Kalanga, Kasem, Tschien, and Zanaki; Barrow Eskimo for Alaskans; Betua Gondi, India; Kuripako, Colombia, Central America; Sasak, Indonesia; Terena, Brazil, and Zoque for Mexico.

BRAZIL.—The statement of one of the Brazilian Congressmen cannot be overlooked when he declared that though there were less than 2% of the Brazilian people who were Protestants, their influence 20%! In spite of growing opposition, fed by persecution, the attacking of several Evangelical church buildings and the burning of Bibles in public squares, the development of the Evangelical Movement continues unabated. Thousands and thousands are being educated in the Evangelical schools.

Rev. Mattathias Gomes dos Santos, veteran Presbyterian minister and vice-president of the Confederation of the Evangelical Churches, said "If through some terrible catastrophe not another cent, or not another missionary, should be sent from the other America to help the Evangelical work, this movement could not be destroyed in Brazil, but rather would keep on growing and developing."

Editorials

A GREAT CONVICTION HAS WORLD-WIDE geographical implications. That is one of the fundamental observations of the The Acts of the Apostles; it is also one of the inevitable observations of most any issue of the Mennonite. Take any issue of the Mennonite and go through it marking with a red pencil all places mentioned and you will get the feel of the power that cannot be contained in one community, or one nation, or one race. Multiply this by the number of denominations, with whom we serve a common Lord being redeemed by the same Saviour, and you have the Twentieth Century degree of the fulfillment of the Great Commission. When you have done that then go through a given issue with a blue pencil (jottings and all) and mark the various types ministries, ways of helping people, and ways of witnessing to the saving power of redeeming love both in the healing of individual lives and society at large. Then take a black pencil and underline the reference made to various age-groups as the peculiar needs of each is ministered to.

Take for example the article entitled "MCC' Operation Uruguay," which outlines recent developments in our relief work. In the scope of just one article there is mentioned Uruguay, Germany, Formosa, Palestine, Paraguay, and Leitersburg, Maryland. At these places such ministries as material aid, medical aid, social and spiritual rehabilitation, as well as mental rehabilitation, are being supervised by consecrated Christian personalities who have given a host of well-trained minds and talents to the cause of Jesus Christ. So one might go on with the activities of the Peace Committee which has a ministry vital and indispensable in a world that worships the Prince of Peace at church on Sunday morning but Mars the rest of the week. The everlastingly penetrating thrust of our arm of Foreign Missions and Home Missions which has the basic task of the bringing of light to areas of spiritual darkness is finding its way into hitherto unoccupied areas. Like a mighty army in the unique warfare of love, Jesus Christ is winning his way into the hearts of men. Every ministry of every arm of the Church in every part of the world performed "in the name of Christ" is a new bond that is binding together a world that Satan is trying to tear apart. Use your Mennonite as a prayer guide and a guide for giving that at no point the forces of Jesus Christ will bog down because of lack of financial or spiritual resources.—JJE

To disregard evangelism entirely because some abuse it is to abuse it still more.

TO BUILD BRIDGES between "Beyond Our Own" and "Our Own" should be unquestionably Christian. A number of weeks ago we reported in the former that one of the national interdenominational church organizations, the National Association of Evangelicals, had expressed its desire to help in the task of assisting the DP's who are coming to this country. In today's issue we read that this organization has come to the MCC for help and suggestions as to how to proceed. It thus becomes evident that our concern for relief through the years has the possibilities of being used of God in helping various members of the body of Christ to better understand one another and better accomplish their God-appointed mission. OFFICIAL STATEMENT OF PEACE COMMITTEE ON NON-REGISTRATION

A statement was drawn up by the Peace Committee in session at the Bloomington Illinois, Council of Boards Meeting, February 15-17, 1949, regarding the position of the Committee toward the non-registration of men under the present Selective Service Act. This statement was also given to the Executive Committee for discussion and approval. The following points were the result:

1. As a Peace Committee we consider it desirable to restate what we believe to be the Conference position toward the draft act, namely that we do not encourage non-registration.
2. That we go on record as being eager that the fellowship with non-registrants not be broken, for in the principle of opposition to war, military training, and service we are united.
3. That we set up a definite program of visitation of these individuals who are imprisoned.

THE U. S. GOVERNMENT VS LARRY GARA

by Lloyd Ramseyer

(Editorial Note: While another member of the General Conference, Ralph Bargen, has been sentenced to a year and a day for non-registration, a concern has arisen among many who do not agree with that position. This has to do with the treatment given the case of Larry Gara, of the Bluffton College faculty, who was found guilty of counselling toward non-registration, but whose case is being appealed. Dr. L. L. Ramseyer, who does not agree with the position of non-registration, has written up the implications of this case in an editorial in the Witmarsum, the Bluffton College paper, which we reprint here.)

After two and one half hours deliberation the jury returned a verdict of guilty in the case of the U. S. Government vs Larry Gara for counseling a non-registrant. This is a verdict which should give every Christian and every lover of liberty real concern.

The Christian cannot consider the law of small import. It is the duty of the Christian to respect law, and to obey it. He should not need an enforcement officer looking over his shoulder when he makes out his income tax return, or in other ways is faced with compliance with the law.

However, it is clear that man's highest allegiance is not to law, but to God. The pioneers of freedom and religion throughout centuries have recognized the liberty, yes even the necessity, to disobey what they were convinced was an immoral law. If it had not been for this feeling Daniel would never have defied the edict of King Darius and opened his window to the East and prayed to his God; Christianity would have died in its infancy and we would have a pagan civilization, for Christianity was spread in defiance of the law; no fugitive slaves

MCC "Operation Uruguay"

Community-Center Pattern Extended

NAE Seeks Counsel

Uruguay Settlement Plans

The plan for helping the Mennonite settlers in Uruguay to become established on the land will differ in various ways from that followed in Paraguay. One reason for this is that in Uruguay there are no large blocks of unsettled land which would be suitable for a Mennonite colony. Instead, the available land is settled by individual land owners. However much of this land is not being utilized to the full extent, and it is for this reason that the Uruguayan government is particularly interested in Mennonite settlers who will be able to develop the productivity of the land.

The MCC plans to purchase a farm within 50 miles of Montevideo as a place where a number of helpless individuals can be cared for and where church, school, hospital and other group interests can be centered. From this center the immigrants will be given assistance in procuring suitable farm employment and farming means of livelihood. Assistance in the forms of tools and clothing will also be given as needed.

Community Center Projects

The work which has been done at the Heilbronn center in Germany has had such a favorable result that this pattern of community center service is being used in a number of other places in Germany. One of these is Kaiserslautern, a city in the French Zone, and another is in Berlin. The program at these centers includes sewing room, shoe repair shop, warming room, reading rooms, laundry service, discussion meetings, singing groups, religous meetings and other services.

Similar activities are also carried on at Hamburg, Krefeld and Neustadt, although in these cities no central buildings are available in which all the activities of a community center program can be housed.

In all of the relief units, the workers endeavor to serve the people of the community, not only in the direct relief program, but in incidental and indirect ways. One of the most effective ways of witnessing is to help those near at hand with help that is personal and clearly motivated by the love of Christ.

NAE and MCC

The National Association of Evangelicals has taken an interest in the Displaced Persons problem and wishes to be of service in DP resettlement. Since this organization and the MCC have many points of faith in common, they have sought counsel on various methods of work in which the MCC has had some experience. Dr. Clyde W. Taylor, the Secretary of Affairs of the National Association, has conferred with the MCC Mennonite Aid Section to determine how efforts could be channeled and correlated, particularly in Europe.

Medical Service in Formosa

Several months ago a medical clinic was opened at the village of Karenko on the Island of Tiawan (Formosa). Although providing only the barest essentials, the building and facilities are better than those found in most of the homes of these Aboriginal people.

The Clinic serves two purposes: a hospital where acutely ill persons may be cared for, and a hostel where persons from distant villages who come for treatment may spend the night until they can return to their homes on the next day. During this period in which the hostel has been in operation, a total of 281 cases have been treated, 54 of which required surgical procedures.

MCC Worker in Palestine

Titus Lehman, R.N. of Lancaster, Pa., who previously served a term in MCC relief work in China, has recently joined a relief team stationed at Gaza, in southwestern Palestine. This team, including eight nurses, and under the direction of the American Friends Service Committee, is serving among 200,000 refugees located in an Arab-held coastal strip ten miles wide and twenty miles long. The needs among these people, particularly for medical care, are reportedly very great.

Completion of Farm Equipment Program Urged

Many communities have given good response to the appeal for agricultural equipment for the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay and Uruguay. In a number of places a very efficient organization has been set up in which certain local individuals are responsible for various aspects of the work. Items which have reached the warehouses so far have generally been in good repair. Preparations are being made for the export of the first carload.

March 15 was designated as the date by which all contributions should be in.

Relief Shipments during February

The following shipments of material aid contributed by the Mennonite churches in U. S. and Canada, with total evaluation of $128,141.55, left port during the month of February.

To Paraguay, 20 tons raisins; to Austria, 4 tons raisins; to British Zone Germany, 16 tons lard, 32 tons syrup and sugar, 1 ton powdered milk, 30 tons soy bean flour, 29 tons dried fruit, jams, and peas, 39 tons mixed foods, 19 tons bedding, clothing, shoes and soap, and 11 tons other food and clothing; To French Zone Germany, 27 tons mixed foods, 11 tons clothing, bedding, shoes and soap; to American Zone

Our Peace Witness in '49

by Albert Gaeddert

Our Peace Committee ventures forth in an aggressive program, which reaches out in several directions, but primary emphases are given to two: 1) Peace Education, and 2) Voluntary Service.

The minister in his local congregation continues to stand as the key person in promoting peace education. In his sermons the note of the Peacemaker should sound clearly, and in the pastoral work the keystone of Peace should stand forth. Our Committee encourages ministers to be Peacemakers. We are continuing the publication of The Peacemaker, and send it to every minister in our General Conference. The Reporter likewise goes out to every minister in the States, and to every Elder of a congregation in Canada. One lesson of Peace per quarter is urged upon those responsible for the Sunday School quarterlies. This year a new book is being published, THE PRINCIPLE OF NON-RESISTANCE IN THE TEACHINGS OF JESUS, of which Dr. H. A. Fast is the author. Especially valuable for teachers and students, this book should find favor both within and without Mennonite circles.

Our primary efforts will go toward the promotion of the Voluntary Service Program. Through this program we are enabling our young people to serve voluntarily in a time and in a world where the need is great for people who are driven by an inner compulsion to a service of love. Four-fifths of our budget will be applied here. It requires $50 per month for every volunteer entering the MCC Voluntary Service Program for one year or more. We will need young people who can give their time, and we will also need young people who can give of their means for the support of those who can go to serve.

Our budget is large; it totals $35,000. We think we have ways and means of reaching the same, and that our people will want this budget raised so that we need not turn down applicants for voluntary Service.

The budget looks thus:

Literature	$ 500
Travel	500
Voluntary Service Program:
General Conference Summer Service Program	1,500
G. C. share of MCC Short Term Program including projects in the States and in Europe	6,500
G. C. volunteers in MCC Voluntary Service Program for whom we pay $50 per month per person	20,000
Toward the MCC Peace Section	4,500
Publication, and miscellaneous	1,500
Total	$35,000

would have been sheltered by a friendly North; Gandhi would not have led India to freedom but it would still be bound by British imperialism; and Martin Niemoeller would have continued to preach an abstract religion, oblivious of the injustice about him, instead of spending years in a Nazi concentration camp.

The Christian must be ready to follow God rather than man if it becomes necessary. I personally do not feel that for me registration for conscription presents such an alternative. There are those, however, and they are many, who feel that even registration is a military act in which God would have them take no part. I, as a Christian, must respect that conscience if it is arrived at thoughtfully and prayerfully. I too, would have to say to such a person, "Don't let them coerce you into changing your mind," with all of the implications which that word "coerce" carries with it. Coerce does not mean to convince or to pursuade, it means "to compel" "to constrain by force or fear." No one who believes in the sacredness of conscience would want that conscience violated by the use of force or fear. That is the sentence which Larry Gara uttered to Charles Rickert which formed the basis for the indictment against him.

As I understood the evidence presented at the trial, Larry Gara was never guilty, within the jurisdiction of this court, of advising anyone not to register. He declared without contradiction that he did not and would not advise anyone not to register unless he had already reached that decision through his own conscience and was prepared to take the consequences of his act. He did advise one perplexed student to obey the law, when it was evident that the young man was not convinced that he should not obey it. He never even talked with Charles Rickert before Charles refused to register and so notified his draft board. He was friendly and sympathetic with him after such refusal, but since when does that constitute a crime in America? They did talk over things of common interest, but that is only natural and certainly is not punishable. He even advised Charles to change his stand and register if at any time he felt that he should.

If the law is interpreted in such a way that no father, no teacher, no minister can provide friendly ministration to one who is acting through Christian conscience, then truly our freedom is in danger. This, in my opinion, would be a violation of both the freedom of speech and freedom of religion guaranteed to us in the fundamental law of the land, the constitution.

Do not take this case lightly. It is crucial and may be epoch making. Freedom in America is precious. If it is lost, it will be because we have allowed it to be thrown away in our very attempt to defend ourselves. When we realize what we have lost, it may be too late to regain it. We must be constantly on our guard. At whatever cost, I must insist on being counted with those pioneers of religion and liberty to whom we owe our present freedom. That is noble company.—Reprinted from The Witmarsum.

Challenged as Never Before

by Howard G. Nyce

The annual meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions was held in Grace Methodist Church, Bloomington, Illinois, February 15 to 17 inclusive, with all Board-members present. The president of the Board opened the meeting by reading the missionary verse, John 3:16. Then he referred to John 4:35. He said John 3:16 calls attention to the gospel and 4:35 calls attention to the field. Here we have a challenge to look out upon the fields. The chairman then stated, "There is another verse I want to call attention to found in John 9:4, 'I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day.'" Then he added these stirring words, "The church is challenged today as never before and if we fail, we are failing our Lord and failing to bring the message of salvation to them who are in darkness. We don't know how long this day of opportunity may last."

A $26,000 Slice out of Reserves

The first resolution was in reference to the division of time for the meetings. The second the accepting of the agenda, presented by the secretary. The minutes were read and approved. Then we heard the treasurer's report, read by Mr. Adam Mueller, office manager. In a condensed form the report was as follows: "For the calendar year of 1948 the Foreign Mission Board had prepared a budget which called for the disbursement of $330,000. Contributions received which could be used for the budget expenditures amounted to $234,364.97. During the year, the Board spent $260,613.29. The deficiency of $26,248.32 had to be made up by drawing on cash on hand at the beginning of the year."

Changes in Arizona

In discussing the Arizona Mission field, the report of the brethren Wedel and Nyce was considered and it was decided to re-arrange the workers on the field. The Daniel Schirmers are on an extended furlough. Brother Schirmer is at present taking some work at the Bible Institute of Los Angeles.

Twelve Voluntary Service Workers Accepted

Miss Erna Friesen met with the Board in reference to Voluntary Service Workers for the Indian mission fields and stated that Montana had asked for four workers, Arizona for six, and Oklahoma for two. The Board passed a resolution that we would accept twelve voluntary workers for a period of two months.

The Board decided to purchase a truck for the American Indian field, to be used on the various stations as needed. The truck has since been purchased.

New Recruits to Congo

Wednesday morning, while discussing the work in the Congo, Rev. R. L. Hartzler met with us in the absence of the executive secretary, Rev. C. E. Rediger. Brother Hartzler gave a brief report of the work in the Belgian Congo and stated that the John Jantzens are concluding their work at the Kennedy School of Missions and would be leaving for the field the latter part of the summer.

The secretary then read a letter received from Rev. D. J. Unruh, pastor of the First Church, Newton, Kansas, stating that the church at its annual meeting decided to pay the salary of a missionary couple. A resolution was adopted thanking the First Church for their liberal offer.

At the combined meeting of all boards the night before, the suggestion was made that several boards or committees might be willing to make $100 available for the publication and distributing of the booklet, "The Master Calleth for Thee." The Board passed a motion that we would pay $100 for that purpose.

The Oklahoma Field

The Oklahoma missionaries presented a recommendation that the Board pay the first quarter salary prior to the annual meeting. Heretofore, the budget of the year was paid on the basis of the previous year's budget. The Board considered this at length and then suggested that this matter might be presented at the Council of Boards meeting. This was discussed at the evening meeting and it was decided that the Council of Boards meeting should be held soon after Thanksgiving. This would mean that our annual meeting hereafter would be held at this time of the year instead of the second week of February.

The Board then considered the Oklahoma building program, resulting in the motion that the brethren Goering and Wedel be asked to survey the field and in consultation with the workers on the field, take steps for building and propose recommendations for conducting the mission work there.

Brother Kreider, president of the Board, stated that he believed that money should be made available through the Relief Committee for relief to be administered by our missionaries in China. The following motion resulted: "Moved that we ask the Emergency Relief Committee for an allotment of $2,000 for relief needs in the General Conference mission field areas in China."

Milestone for Oklahoma Point

The secretary reminded the Board that the Clinton Church, Clinton, Oklahoma (Indian Church), would celebrate their 50th anniversary February 19 and 20. The Council of Boards also took action and sent a letter to the mission workers. The motion passed by the Board and sent by the secretary read as follows: "Resolved that the Mission Board, in gratitude to God, recognize the completion of fifty years work in the Clinton, Oklahoma, Church, and the devoted labors of those who have served there,

All the Problems of Virgin Soil

by Alice Bachert

Only six months ago this commercial centre presented to me all the problems of virgin soil. All my inquiries seemed to be answered the same way—"This town is undesirable in every way," and "We can say nothing good about it," although it is the county seat and should be an example. But several months before that, I was convinced that the time was "God's time" to come in and tell the good news of salvation to a dying people. God's orders were—"Go forward and I will be with thee." The early rains had fallen to prepare the soil, and my prayers were being answered even before I came to know any of these souls who wanted the light.

Newspaper Ad—Prayer's Answer

Shortly before entering, a short article by the town reporter was found in the daily news asking for a Protestant minister to come and adjust at least the spiritual side of conditions if not the political, "to remind us at least that there is a God." At once measures were taken to distribute gospel portions, some Bibles were sold, and a meeting was held in one of the homes offered. Not many days passed when the enemy realized that souls were awakening to realities, so a persecution propaganda was begun in order to keep people under the dictates of the priest. Many kinds of threats were used to keep people away from services, but the children had no fear whatsoever.

Consolidation of Evangelical Effort

With the help of a young student I was able to give them some classes in the afternoons. Soon the parents, as well as the children, were asking for an all day school. But what was needed first was a consolidation of evangelical effort. Bible study classes were begun to give the believers a firm foundation in the faith and to prepare them for attacks launched against them to disanimate and keep them from attending. Even then some of them did not want to pay the price and only the staunchest went on with the Lord. However, this sifting was necessary and the spiritual life was notably deepened after that.

Opposition Attempted Forced Exit

Then a new place to live had to be found which was a difficult task, not only because the houses in a livable condition were few, but also because special propaganda had been prepared by the priest to force an exit of the entire work from the town. But the Lord did not find it difficult to point out the chosen and further pray that the work may continue to prosper under God's guidance for the salvation of souls and the glory of His Name."

Outlook in Colombia

Miss Mary Becker, missionary on furlough to Colombia, was present when we considered the South America field. She told the Board that she is greatly encouraged with the future outlook in this new field. She presented a letter by the American Mission to Lepers asking her to be one of the main speakers at their annual meeting. Because of the support received from this organization, the Board passed the following resolution: "Resolved that Miss Becker be authorized to be present at the Annual Meeting of the American Mission to Lepers in Chicago in 1949."

Concern in Puerto Rico

Mr. Kenneth Bauman, president of the Young People's Union of the General Conference, presented a report to the Board which referred to the possible opening of the work in Puerto Rico. Part of the report reads as follows: ". . . the young people of the church have a continued interest in Puerto Rico due to the experience of young people in CPS there. They have keenly felt the need in that island of physical and spiritual poverty. Last year at the Council meeting we went on record with the following recommendations:

A) If the Mission Board undertakes a mission field in Puerto Rico, we as a YPU commit ourselves the purchase of the land, with approximately $5,000 as the estimated cost.

B) That we incorporate $2,500 of this total amount of $5,000 in this year's budget.

3) If Puerto Rico is not accepted by the Mission Board, the Council recommends that $2,500 be used for the work in Colombia.

AT PRESENT the door to Puerto Rico is not fully open to our mission endeavor. In faith and hope the YPU is continuing its interest and support of the Puerto Rican mission and working toward the $5,000 amount set last year with the hope that doors will open . . . . the YPU urges the prayers, work, and efforts of the young people in support of this project, seeking that doors may be opened and that Puerto Rico may become a mission point in the work of the church."

It was recommended "That $1,500 of the total budget for the new fiscal year be included for Puerto Rico."

The Executive Secretary was instructed to again try to contact Puerto Rico concerning the opening of work there. Mr. N. Paul Stucky has volunteered to write again for an immediate reply.

The president of the Board then called for a report of the Women's Missionary Association. Mrs. W. C. Voth reported that Foreign Mission Projects would amount to $8,106.22; special projects $7,460.34; and last year's total receipts, $20,288.30.

In a later issue we will continue this report.

Home Missons

North of the Border

by Benjamin Ewert

The young people of the church, under their own leadership, have organized a spiritual group which meets very Monday evening with students of the University and Normal-school. Frequently the young people and students of the Canadian Mennonite Bible College give programs in the church.

At the opening of the winter semester, five new students entered the Bible College making the total enrollment forty-three. All of them show great interest in all meetings and activities of the Bethel Mission.

The ministers and deacons of Manitoba held a special meeting in the Bethel Mission Church for the discussion of the attitude of our young men in case a new war should break out. About one hundred persons attended. Plans are being made to continue this discussion in the near future.

We have had frequent visitors with us. December 1, Miss Helen Reimer, assistant superintendent of nurses of the General Hospital and relief worker in Egypt, China, and the Formosa Islands, reported about her activity and experiences there. December 19, Miss Hilty, from Pandora, Ohio, a relief worker in Holland and Southern Germany, was with us. On January 18, Elmer Ediger, of the MCC, director of the voluntary service of Christian Fellowship, told about opportunities for young people. January 30, Missionary Albert Jantzen, who was interned on the Philippine Islands during the war, gave three reports in the interest of missions and the activities of the General Conference. Distinguished business men from Winnipeg have also held special lectures in the church.

The German Sunday meetings from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m. are becoming increasingly popular with the congregation. Every second Sunday, Rev. Jakob Toews, of Glenlea, is in charge while ministers of the Bethel Mission and others from the Bible College serve during the remaining services. Attendance at the English services has also been considerably greater.

Our church held its annual meeting on January 19, when officers for the church were elected and reports read. The church council, consisting of ten persons, meets every first Saturday of each month. The choir practices every Friday evening and the Women's Mission group and Men's Fellowship are also very active.

Each Sunday since January 11, Elder Friesen has taught catechism to a number of young people. Somewhat later in January, Rev. Jakob Toews also began teaching catechism in German.

In closing, I want to inform all my friends that I, regardless of my seventy-eight years, am in comparatively good health. I still can be active in many ways. For this I am deeply grateful. Greetings to all my beloved friends.

Holy Week Witnessing

Is It Really True?

Is it really true that a person who does not believe in Christ is lost? Must Jesus be taken seriously when He says, "but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned," or when He says, "he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him"? Surely the Son of God speaks the truth. If Jesus speaks truthfully in these words, then think of what they mean for our non-Christian friends and neighbors. Surely we will want to go and invite them to accept Christ and the gift of eternal life He offers.

Should it be Hard?

Going to non-Christian friends is often not easy. The attitude in which we go to them is very important. It we find it hard to go to them, it may be that our attitude is not right. Would it be hard to go to tell a neighbor of a medicine that would cure his chronic colds? And should it be hard for us to go to our non-Christian neighbors to tell them that Jesus offers to give them forgiveness of sins and eternal life? We do not go to preach to them. We go to tell them of what Christ desires to give them if they will but receive Him.

Where is our Authority?

When we make this offer to people we must be sure to point to Scripture passages which promise these things. It is not we who offer the gift. It is Christ. It is God through Christ, and we must allow Him to speak for Himself through His Word. The Holy Spirit uses the Sacred Page to bring conviction of the truth to the hearts of people.

Sometimes we can share a tract to bring this offer of Christ to people and to point out to them what the conditions for its reception are. When we use a tract we should not just hand it out, but use it as a witnessing tool. Tell what it has meant to us and point out why we want our friend to read it.

Not Force but Persuasion

Jesus has not commanded us to force people to accept the Gospel, but He has commissioned us to be His witnesses and to present the Gospel of His saving grace to lost sinners. If you have such people in your local community, consider yourself charged with the duty to go to them and in love to make Christ's offer to them.

Your service may count for the Kingdom of God for generations. We usually say that William Carey started the modern missionary movement. May we not say that it was started by Carey's fellow-apprentice who spoke to Carey about God and won him to Christ? Future generations may thank you for whom you win to Christ.—The Evangelism Committee

Annual Layman's Fellowship Meeting

Laymen from all sections of the Eastern District Conference attended the Annual Father and Son Fellowship meeting, held at the Zion Church, Souderton, Pa., on March 5.

Walter A Haman, formerly of the United States Secret Service and a personal bodyguard of both presidents Roosevelt and Truman, who resigned his position to become an evangelist, delivered a forceful message on the theme of "The Indifference Of Church Members to the Present Day Crime Situation." Earlier, he showed a number of interesting pictures covering historic tours made with President Roosevelt abroad, where he met such reknowned figures as Churchill, Stalin, and other world leaders; also visits to the Holy Lands. Mr. and Mrs. Haman also furnished several selections of instrumental music.

Refreshments were served at the close of the meeting in order that the laymen might remain after the formal meeting to become better acquainted with each other.

Devotions were in charge of Melvin Clemens. The committee in charge of the meeting included: Wilmer Reiff, Chairman, David Clemens, Horace Kratz, Melvin Clemens. John E. Fretz, President of the Brotherhood, presided.

The Denver Brotherhood, Lancaster County, announced their Annual Banquet for March 19 with Rev. Abram Schultz as the speaker; also a Mennonite Men's Fellowship Dinner at First Church, Philadelphia, for March 21, with Rev. J. N. Byler, director of the Relief Section of the M.C.C., bringing a report on his world tour to the areas where our relief work is being carried on.

When You Order

Summer Bible School Materials

The Board of Education and the Board of Publication of the General Conference suggest, for your earnest consideration, whether it might not be best for you to place an order large enough for more than just one year. The materials will not be revised for some years to come, and such orders placed very soon would assist your Conference boards in putting out these materials very considerably.

Place your order with the General Conference Book Store nearest you—Mennonite Book Concern, Berne, Indiana; Mennonite Book Store, 710 Main, Newton, Kansas; Mennonite Book Store, Rosthern, Saskatchewan.

NOTED SPEAKERS AT SEMINARY

Dr. Paul Harrison, for forty years a missionary among the Mohammedans among Arabia, will bring an address in chapel next week called "The Kingdom of God in Arabia." He is sponsored by the Student Volunteer Movement.

The first session of the "Anabaptist Seminar" was held under the direction of Dr. Franklin H. Littell. One of the things quickly apparent in this course is that it is highly desirable for a Mennonite to know German and Dutch for purposes of research in the primary materials of our church background.

The glory of God as Creator was beautifully expressed through the illustrated message of Professor John P. Klassen, of Bluffton College, here at the Vesper service last Sunday. Even though educated in the Fine Arts in the leading universities of Germany and Russia, Professor Klassen has retained a simple, unspoiled appreciation for the created beauties of life. His touching love for animals, birds, and above all for the boys and girls of the family itself was expressed through a series of photographs taken of his own wood carvings and sculptured objects.

Among our new students this term are Missionary Harold Ratzlaff and family, who have arrived from India for a furlough in this country.

Ph.D. TO BETHEL PROFESSOR

J. Lloyd Spaulding, assistant professor of economics, will receive the Ph.D. degree from the University of Minnesota on June 11. He took his oral examination on his dissertation at Minneapolis, March 4. The title of Professor Spaulding's dissertation is, "Criteria for the utilization of the value premise as an analytical device examined with special reference to certain studies in rural land economics."

Eight new students have enrolled at Bethel College for the spring quarter. The new enrollees are: Vera Yoder, Newton, former MCC relief worker in India; Rosa Linda Bartel, Aberdeen, Idaho, assignee to the Home Mission field in Kentucky; Alvin Franz, Marlin, Wash., formerly attending Mennonite Biblical seminary; Ralph Goering, North Newton, returned relief worker from Puerto Rico; Reuben Krehbiel, McPherson; and Florence Michael, Carl Wiebe, and Charles Sigler, all of Newton.

Programs will be given by the Bethel College Peace group on the last Sunday of March and on the week-end of April 2 and 3. These programs will be presented at Inman, Kan., and Fort Cobb, Okla. respectively.

The Social Service Commission of the SCA is sponsoring three Sunday afternoon play periods at the Methodist Children's Home, Newton. The leaders for the first Sunday afternoon, March 13, were Joanne Buhler, Alice Ruth Pannabecker, Evelyn Pankratz, Leland Voth, and John Harshbarger.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The trial of Larry Gara for counseling a non-registrant was held in the Toledo Federal Court March 9-14. The court room was packed throughout the trial. Many students and faculty members attended. After two and one half hours deliberation a verdict of guilty was returned. The case will be appealed to a higher court. Charles Rickert, a non-registrant now in prison in Milan, Michigan, was a defense witness. The charge involved counseling Rickert, in spite of the fact that Gara didn't even meet Rickert until after he had refused to register, and had reported to his draft board that he could not conscientiously register.

On the closing day of the Christian Life Week Rev. Don Smucker conducted a consecration service at the morning meeting and in the evening a communion service. The week of special meetings seemed to be very effective.

The Peace Club is planning a Peace Institute. Tentative dates are March 25, 26. Plans are to have off-campus persons for lectures and for resource leaders in study and discussion groups.

The college Faculty Club entertained the teachers of the public schools and their wives at a social event Friday evening, March 11. Each year the faculties of the two schools get together in this way for a scoial evening.

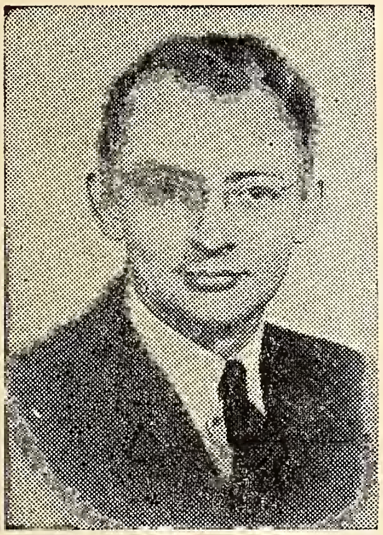
BIBLE WEEK AT FREEMAN

March 20-25 is the date of Freeman Junior College Annual Bible Week. The speaker will be the Rev. Russell L. Mast, pastor of the Mennonite Church at Wadsworth, Ohio. In morning chapel periods Rev. Mast will speak on the theme "Beliefs that Matter." These are his topics for the week: Monday, "I Believe"; Tuesday, "I Believe in God"; Wednesday, "I Believe in Jesus Christ"; Thursday, "I Believe in Man"; Friday, "I Believe in the Church." The general public is invited to attend the evening meetings to be held in the College Gym. The theme for the evening services is "The Crisis of Our Age." The topics of the evening service are: Sunday, March 20, "Five Minutes to Twelve"; Monday, "The Accents of the Age"; Tuesday, "Seeing Life Through a Basement Window"; Wednesday, "The Best Things in the Worst Time"; Thursday, "The Commission of the Peacemaker"; Friday, "Life's Unfinished Symphonies." Evening meetings begin at eight o'clock.

Rev. Albert Ewert was guest chapel speaker on Monday, February 28. His talk was entitled "What Have you in Your Possession." He used Moses and his rod as an illustration, showing how the rod could be used if given to God.

Waltner to Bethel

Dr. Erland Waltner, pastor of the Bethel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota has accepted an appointment to join the faculty of Bethel College as Assistant Professor of Bible and Christian Education, effective September 1, 1949.



Dr. Waltner brings to his new task a wealth of training and practical experience. He received his undergraduate training at Freeman Junior College and Bethel College graduating with an A.B. from the latter in 1935. His graduate work includes the S.T.B. from the Biblical Seminary in New York in 1938; two summers of study at the University of South Dakota, the Th. M. from Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary in 1940; special courses at Temple University and Princeton Theological Seminary; and, the Th.D. also from Eastern Baptist Seminary in 1948. The subject of his Th.D. thesis is "An Analysis of Mennonite Views on the Christian's Relation to the State in the Light of the New Testament." He traveled in Europe and the Holy Land in the summer of 1938.

Dr. Waltner has served three churches of the conference. First, as supply pastor, he served the Salem Church at Wisner, Nebraska, during the summers of 1936 and 1937. He served the Second Church, Philadelphia, 1938 to 1941. Since 1941 he has served the Bethel Church at Mountain Lake. While attending seminary he served as mission worker at the DeWitt Memorial Mission, New York City, from 1935 to 1938.

In Conference work, Dr. Waltner has served on the Eastern District Educational and Peace Committees. He has served as president of the Northern District Conference as well as on its Education Committee. In the General Conference he has served on the Board of Education since 1941 and on the Seminary board since 1947.

After being engaged in two months of work as instructor in connection with the European Summer Peace Institutes sponsored by the MCC peace section, Dr. Waltner will move with his family to North Newton.

She has returned to her work there as supervisor of the hospital in the M.C.C. unit in LaPlate where she has served one term.—Mrs. John K. Friesen, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: February 20 Rev. Orlando Waltner, missionary to India now on furlough, presented the morning sermon and showed colored motion pictures for the evening service. President Ramseyer of Bluffton College spoke February 27 on "But What Are These Few Among So Many?" Thirty-three Christian Endeavorers from our group attended the annual county banquet recently. The Ladies Missionary Society participated in the local World Day of Prayer Service held March 4.—Mrs. Ivan L. Badertscher, Corr.

—Meadow Church, Colby, Kansas: The Lord's supper was observed in our church February 27. In collecting wheat for relief mostly cash was received, the wheat was sold, and the cash was sent in, total $1350.05.—Mrs. Peter J. Franz, Corr.

—Zion Church, Donnellson, Iowa: The Rev. E. W. Zimmerman from Hutchinson, Kansas, secretary of the Northern Bible Society, was guest speaker Sunday morning, February 27. Our pastor, Rev. Elmer Basinger recently attended the annual ministers convocation held at Eden Seminary, Webster Grove, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Galle observed their golden wedding anniversary February 19. Our pastor is conducting mid-week prayer services which are held in the homes of members.—Mrs. Milton Krehbill, Corr.

—Gospel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: The congregation recently decided to enlarge our church building. Ground-breaking services were held here March 6 in charge of our pastor Reverend Suderman. The service consisted of a short history and development of our church organizations, music by the choirs, and a message by our pastor. His subject. "The Gospel Mennonite Church," was based on Romans 1:16. Discussion was held on the sub-topics (1) Gospel meaning; (2) true Mennonite heritage; (3) the Church. A lunch was served to all present.

—Immanuel Church, Delft, Minnesota: Mrs. Abraham B. Friesen passed away March 4. The young people are in charge of the evening program every third Sunday for the next three months. Last month Reverend Roth from Oregon spoke at their meeting. A young people's paper is also being started. The men's choir is practicing for a program to be presented in the Union Gospel Mission in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, sometime in April.—Mrs. Russell Goertzen, Corr.

—Grace Church, Enid, Oklahoma: The Student Volunteer group from Bethel College presented a program here March 6. A week of special services in charge of Rev. D. J. Unruh, Newton, Kansas, was held here March 6-11. In January a special collection for relief beef canning of $127 was taken.—Mrs. Kliewer, Corr.

—First Church, Beatrice Nebraska: Rev. Victor Sawatzky, pastor of the Mennonite Church in Hutchinson, Kansas, will be the speaker for the annual pre-Easter services, April 10-15. An all-church choir has recently been organized. A total of 1,784 cans of pork and 1,479 cans of lard have been canned for relief. The men of the church are continuing in the farm implement project.—Mrs. Abraham Jantzen, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: The girls gospel team from Bluffton College presented a morning service here March 6. Those taking part were Mary Ann Kraft, speaker; Mary Gallagher, Anita Pannabecker, Claire Landis, and Margaret Salzman comprising the quartet. Rev. Harry Yoder, Bluffton, Ohio, preached here February 13. A book review on "Cheaper by the Dozen," was given by Mrs. Earl Stutzman, Orrville, at a meeting of the Christian Endeavors and Willing Workers February 15. A chalk artist and a men's quartet from Martins Church gave a program February 13.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

—Walton Chuch, Walton, Kansas: E. W. Zimmerman, a representative of the Northern Bible Society from Hutchinson, conducted the morning worship service February 20 in the absence of the pastor. During the annual business meeting of the Christian Endeavors George Koehn was chosen as president of the Senior C. E. and Karl Friesen as president of the Junior C. E. The Ebenfeld young men's chorus presented a sacred musical program here February 27.—Ella Voth, Corr.

Three Attitudes Toward Movies

by Melvin Gingerich

It has been estimated that one-half of the American people attend the movies more or less regularly. Perhaps this estimate is not correct, but we are sure the number amounts to millions each week. Among these are large numbers of regular movie-goers. These regular attendants may patronize the movies for various reasons. Some may attend because it has become a habit which is a part of the routine of their week's activities. Many others attend regularly because they find real life to be dull and uninteresting. Or because they experience many frustrations and continual defeats, they seek to forget their real world by escaping into a dream world of unreality where they may identify themselves with the heroes and heroines appearing on the screen. A well-known writer, Louis Untermeyer, recently explained that among the reasons he attends the movies is "to luxuriate in a world of illusion, a never-never land of impossibly pure color and bright adventure where romance is around every corner, where danger threatens deliciously but in the end everything comes out all right." He continues by saying that since life is difficult and often dull, only a stubborn person who enjoys suffering would refuse to use the movies as a means of forgetting his troubles.

Here is material for a program at which the pros and cons of movies may be discussed. Three people could be assigned to uphold the three attitudes toward movies. By free discussion of movies by youth, a more wholesome attitude can develop. By letting young people freely evaluate, the cleavage which develops between adult and youth when movies are attended on the sly can be made less severe.

Many individuals do try to forget their troubles by attending the movies. The movies can and have become an opiate for many people. Attendance at movies is their way of escaping life's problems temporarily just as it is the drunkard's way to escape his difficulties by drowning his troubles in drink.

I ask you, "Is this the Christian way of meeting life's difficulties?" Is it right merely to try to submerge our difficulties in our subconscious minds, or is it not the Christian way to face life honestly, admit our own shortcomings, appraise the world correctly as a place in which sin and injustice are common and then humbly with God's help try to correct these situations but leave the matter in the hands of the Great Judge, who is the Lord of love, justice, and righteousness?

In passing, it might be added that those who go to movies regularly have in most instances not developed a critical sense and seldom analyze the philosophy of the picture they have seen. Because it has a catchy song, beautiful scenery, lavish costuming, or an attractive character, they call the picture a good one and praise it without questioning whether it is true to life or whether its viewpoint is Christian or un-Christian. The average movie audiences, said a critic quoted by Time some time ago, believe that "anything is physically and materially possible . . . . (They are) a race of people who operate . . . politically and economically in a total vacuum."

There are others who attend movies only very rarely. I know of families and individuals who although they have no particular conscience against movie-going, attend perhaps only a few times each year. They attend rarely, because they have other more worthwhile ways in which to spend their leisure time. They are busy in community and civic enterprises that they consider more important than the entertainment they would receive at the movies. These families would rather spend their money for good books, concerts and other forms of entertainment and recreation than for the movies, which they consider on the whole to be beneath their cultural level. They would not think of walking into a book shop once a week and buying any book the salesman offered them. Why then should they go to the movies regularly and accept whatever is being offered? They would consider buying and placing in their home of culture perhaps only one book out of a hundred coming from our American presses. In a similar way, they would reject the greater share of the sheet music, phonograph records, paintings, and magazines available in our stores and would find only a very small per cent acceptable for their homes. Persons such as these, therefore, are very discriminating in their choice of shows, learning in advance what the critics say about the picture and not accepting the advertiser's propaganda.

These individuals would agree with Wolcott Gibbs who some time ago explained to the readers of the Saturday Review of Literature why he resigned his position as a movie reviewer for a New York paper. He said, "The cinema resists rational criticism almost as firmly as a six-day bicycle race . . . . Ninety per cent of the moving pictures exhibited in America are so vulgar, witless, and dull that it is preposterous to write about them in any publication not intended to be read while chewing gum." The only exceptions are the "documentaries, which have . . . only very limited opportunities to distort life; frank melodramas, which have nothing to do with life; . . . and the occasional pictures, one or two a year at most, which defiantly photograph some recognizable fragment of our common experience and generally lose a good deal of money."

The third class of people is the smallest of all. It is the group that does not patronize commercial movies. These individuals feel that the commercial movies, because they are produced primarily to make money, are made to appeal to mass audiences of our citizens and therefore are not Christian in their emphases and philosophy. The western cvilization, of which America is a part, is not Christian; it is materialistic, secular, neopagan. Our movies represent that kind of civilization and appeal to the masses of people who are the products of this kind of civilization. "The exploitation of leisure has proved to be a profitable financial venture for those business interests that play upon human weakness and promote habits that tend to degrade rather than to build up," wrote Jesse F. Steiner, sociologist from the University of Washington. "It has therefore, been necessary to regulate and control commercial amusements by law," he adds, "although the methods have often not been very successful."

[I attend movies] "to luxuriate in a world of illusion, a never-never land of impossibility pure color and bright adventure, where romance is around every corner, where danger threatens deliciously but in the end everything comes out all right."—Louis Untermeyer

In the case of the movies, certain regulations have been set up which have prevented "the public showing of films deemed to be vulgar or indecent or of a type that might incite to crime," explains Steiner in his book Recreation and Morale. The letter of the law is generally kept, even if the spirit is often violated, so that, contrary to the opinion of certain movie critics, the films generally do not show the kind of vulgarity that they are charged with by those who do not patronize them.

The most intelligent criticism of the movies is directed against a much more subtle danger than the above. It is based upon the concept that the ideals most generally and nearly always shown in the movies are materialistic and secular ideals, which are far removed from Christian standards. In a study made by Professor Fred Eastman of the University of Chicago of 574 films, it was found that in only nine per cent of these shows were the goals of the chief characters in the pictures socially desirable based upon the concept of unselfish service for others. Ranking high were the goals of professional success, revenge, crime for gain, immoral love, and the seeking of thrills. The winning of another's love is by far the most common theme. This may be a perfectly desirable goal, but the movies play it up entirely out of its proportion in life. Europeans who see American films get the idea that most Americans spend a greater share of their time trying to win the affection of some one of the opposite sex. This is a part of life, but not nearly so large a part as the films would make us believe. The films therefore, present a distorted picture of life.

Because the films represent the thinking of a civilization that does not place God first, they constantly place something else first, with the thought of God and His worship pushed out entirely or given a minor place. Great emphasis is placed upon worldly and professional success, and upon material comfort luxurious and often intemperate living. The movies see life as a whirling, rushing, confused struggle after money and things. The movies emphasize such words as "smart, sophisticated, daring, bold, clever, rich, thrilling, big-stupendous, exciting, passionate, and dazzling," wrote Professor Eastman in his series of Christian Century articles. Hollywood does not emphasize such words as "unselfish, honest, hardworking, competent, faithful, poised, restrained, patient, thrifty, and kind."

It is still true that the films show with approval too many drinking episodes, too many crime scenes in which the criminal does not have to pay the penalty of his crime, and too many bedroom scenes, but the chief danger of the movie is its falsification of human and Christian values, its distortion of what is required for satisfying life, and its crowding out of the American mind the reflection required to solve the ills of our society.

Charles Clayton Morrison, in writing a series of articles on commercialized entertainment two years ago, shows how those who regularly subject their minds to this kind of influence lose the ability to think clearly. This barrage of stimuli from the movies and other sources has produced a mind that is incapable of thinking seriously about and which will not "respond to moral ideals and the ultimate values which are the substance of religious faith. . . . When exposure to the glamorous, the fantastic, the false, the artificial, and the merely silly or merely clever becomes habitual, the effect upon the mind is bound to be disintegrative."

Morrison continues by showing to what extent the American mind has been damaged by its subjection to this kind of influence. The ordinary movie goer measures a movie entirely by the techniques displayed in the acting. "Was the play well done?" is always the question when it should be primarily "Was the play worth doing?" "A good subject matter presented with sincerity and simplicity, but with an amateur technique, will be more highly appraised by a healthy-minded society than a bad subject matter presented with technical brilliance and originality. Increasingly, our society has become incapable of reacting in this way."

It is, therefore, not satisfactory to measure movies only by whether vulgarity and objectionable love, sex, and crimes scenes have been eliminated. There are many injurious pictures that pass this test. The analysis must be much deeper. And since the great majority of pictures do not pass satisfactorily this more rigid test, there are those individuals who feel they cannot patronize the commercial movies. In taking this position, they do not condemn the movies as such, for they recognize the usefulness of this visual aid in the teaching program of the school. They recognize too that certain Christian organizations are now experimenting in the production of Christian films that may well prove to be a great blessing in religious education.

It is true that according to the standards of these severe critics, a few films are annually produced that have not objectionable scenes, portray worthy motives, and are true to life. What should be our attitude towards these? Some think these should be patronized in order to encourage good films and to insure their economic success, since this type nearly always loses money for the producers. Several questions, however, must be answered at this point. Can we patronize these higher-class pictures without at the same time seeming to be supporting the movies in general? Can the patronage of better pictures by discriminating individuals ever be very effective in changing the nature and motives of the movie industry? Or is it not true that those who would patronize the better pictures have too many other interests to become regular movie attendants and thus to furnish a large enough audience to make the steady production of high class, expensive films profitable? Our answer to the above questions dare not be given lightly and must be based upon the consideration of the effect of our decision and actions not only upon ourselves but also upon others. At the same time, in order to make our position consistent we must examine more honestly and critically our attitude towards radio programs, high school plays, comic strips, magazines, books, paintings, and music. In all of these areas what is acceptable and in keeping with the Christian view of life is only a small fraction of the total production.

We're All Out for Basketball

The heavy basketball fever which comes with winter winds and snows and remains until the first spring thaw each year is coming to an end again this year. Talk over the soda fountain in the local drug store all winter long has been about the "ref" who called them too close against our side (Has there ever been a "ref" who called them too close against the other side?), the chances our men had, how the coach could strengthen the team, the neat shots our tall forward makes, the good and bad breaks we had, and so on.

In most mid-western communities, basketball fever is so high that all other things must take second place until the patient is nursed back to health. The pep team must generate lots of pep, the cheerleaders must girate to perfection, some special club or group in school sells popcorn, ice cream, candy and soft drinks, the money being used for a special project—senior trip, score board, new uniforms—or what?

It's all a lot of fun in spite of frayed nerves, hoarse throats, weary bodies. It is all a lot of fun and who would deprive youth of the excitement of basketball fever?

There are exciting tasks in the church for young people, too. Many interesting jobs need to be done all of which are fun. To raise money for retreat and spend a week at retreat meeting, many other young people, worshiping, playing, living together for a glorious week. Relief projects are interesting, especially when you get in touch with a new-found friend across the sea. Special programs in the local church for Christmas, Easter, Thanksgiving enlist the talent and interest of youth. Your own youth fellowship group becomes a source of inspiration as you worship, play, and learn together. Voluntary service provides you an opportunity to have a great variety of experiences. Conferences, rallies, dinners, class afairs each suggest a broad range of things about which one may "get a fever."

We're all out for basketball and with these possibilities, we're all out for church, too!

Painting Mail Boxes a Good Youth Project

by Lotus Troyer

The Junior C. E. Society of the Carlock Mennonite Church in looking about for ways to finance their week at summer church camp, conceived of the idea of painting and putting on names on rural mail boxes.

So, armed with paint brushes, a can of aluminum paint and an enthusiasm for the task, they set forth in cars to take orders to paint the boxes. After soliciting the farmer, he wrote his name on a sheet of paper as he wanted it to appear on the box. The rusty spots were sanded and the box was given a coat of aluminum paint and the flag was painted red. At the end of the day, from a master stencil card purchased for 25 cents, name stencils were printed on the oiled cardboard from the back of a mimeograph stencil which had been saved over a period of time. (Manilla folders also may be used.) By the trial-and-error method it was determined that the stencil could best be cut by placing the cardboard on a piece of wood using an Exacto wood-cutting knife to cut out the letters. (A single edged razor blade can also be used but is more difficult.)

The next day the same route was covered and the named was stenciled on the mail box with black paint. Here again the trial-and-error method reveals the secret to success. One factor is the amount of paint in the brush, as it was found that a little paint dobbed on with a stencil brush was best. Many of the farmers were glad to purchase the used stencil for use about the farm thus making for increased profits!

Had the local mail carrier known of the project sooner he would have aided the project by placing cards in the boxes which did not bear names, informing them that it was a postal regulation that they should! With very little overhead the project was entered into with a great deal of enthusiasm and netted the local society more than $90 in net proceeds. It was a project in which both the Society and the community benefited.

50th Anniversary celebration of

General Conference Mennonite Missions in India

M. Rufus Asna, one of the outstanding Indian evangelists, had grandparents and parents who were Christians. His father, a minister and an evangelist of the Lutheran German Mission, at one time had 47 evangelists and 11 teachers under his supervision.

place in order to allow His work to develop. The owner was willing to do any repairing necessary and was not worried by any political drive against him. The house was very suitable for a school and many of the town at once asked for a real school to compete with the ones that did not give the children the help desired. This challenge was not accepted because we could take only a limited number even if we had the necessary funds and a teacher.

In Case of Death—No Burial Privileges

The end of the year was approaching and what would be the plan for the new year? The Lord knew, but as yet I knew nothing. Not until the third week of December did I understand how a school could ever materialize. Some Christian gifts came labeled for personal use which at once were placed in the school fund. Still I had not found the teacher to help me in the project. I sent Christmas greetings to a teacher friend saying I was needing a teacher. An answer came before expected saying perhaps she would be able to come providing the Lord would close a door to her which had seemed to be open for her. He did. Then encouragements came from every source, especially from parents interested. Propaganda against the work had apparently ceased, but it was not long until it was revived with greater force, but this time more definitely against the parent. They would certainly lose their good standing in the Roman church and in case of death would have no burial privileges. Threats were announced that this house would be burned to the ground. But up to the present moment the Lord has kept us from all harm.

Matriculation of an Altar Boy

One day the son of one of the workmen here came to solicit matriculation. He had been one of the faithful altar boys, but was now resolved to break away definitely in order to take his fourth grade work at our school. He was severely reprimanded, but still remained firm that he would come. Also another boy in the fourth grade has given up his employment at the post office as delivery boy. Several of the children have already accepted the Lord as their personal Saviour, and are praying for the salvation of their previous friends. One of the boys was accosted the other day by a fanatical boy nearby, who called out to say, "The evangelical school is a bad school, propagating bad teachings." Why was he attending such a school? His soft answer must have been given him by the Lord when he said, "Come in and see, then you'll be able to say what it is like." We have many praying friends and will appreciate if you will continue to pray.

The new pamphlet, THE MASTER CALLETH FOR THEE—twenty-four page booklet attractively illustrating the various opportunities for young people in the work of the church—is available for free distribution and young people in our churches surely should have these little books available for study and reference.

One Year Volunteers from General Conference in MCC Program

At present there are eleven persons from the General Conference in one-year Voluntary Service under the M.C.C. The eleven persons, their home addresses and the place where they are serving is as follows:

Marvin D. Bartel, Burrton, Kansas, Gulfport, Mississippi; George Bohrer, Bloomington, Illinois, Nathrop, Colorado; Roland Ediger, Buhler, Kansas, Nathrop, Colorado; Agatha Friesen, LeRoy, Sask., Canada, Mexico; Lawrence Harder, Mt. Lake, Minnesota, Nathrop, Colorado; Katharine Linscheid, North Newton, Kansas, Mexico; Ina Plank, Goshen, Indiana, Mexico; Alfrieda Regier, Moundridge, Kansas, Mexico; Elizabeth Regier, Burrton, Kansas, Mexico; Clara Schellenberg, Hague, Sask., Canada, Mexico; Harold L. Voth, Newton, Kansas, Mexico.

Germany, 6 tons food and clothing, 15 tons raisins; to the Philippines, 2½ tons beans.

Summer Service Information

A folder is being published and will be available soon, to inform interested young people regarding opportunities in MCC summer voluntary service and calling attention also to the programs under the direction of the individual church groups. Copies may be secured by writing to the MCC office, Akron, Pennsylvania.

Occupational Therapy

At Brook Lane Farm plans are being developed for occupational therapy as one aspect in the treatment of the mentally ill. Ada Frey, who had been enrolled in special therapy training at Cleveland, Ohio, has completed three months of training and is now at Brook Lane assisting in the organization of the occupational therapy program there. At present there are 5 patients being cared for at Brook Lane.

New Voluntary Service Projects

One of the objectives of MCC Voluntary Service is to explore and experiment in new types of service projects. Peter S. Bartel, of Hillsboro, Kansas is working for a period of several months from the Akron office in making a survey of various new possibilities in institutional and other service projects. It is felt that there are many opportunities even in such places as prisons, where Christian young people, organized as small units, can give a unique witness for Christ as they serve.

Beyond Our Own

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY. — Rabbi Israel Tabuk, president of the Rabbinical Council of America, predicted recently that the third Jewish commonwealth will produce a new religion of international morality which "will go forth to influence mankind." He stated that scholars from all over the world are working today in Jerusalem on new religious writing which may become a third Bible, ranking along with the Old and New Testaments. The first Jewish commonwealth, Rabbi Tabuk pointed out, created Judaism and the Old Testament, and the second saw the establishment of Christianity and the New Testament.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—"The Greatest Story Ever Told," a book published by the Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon St., Boston 8, Massachusetts, or 19 S. LaSalle St., Chicago 3, Illinois, is written by the creator and author of the radio program under the same name, Fulton Oursler. In his new classic Mr. Oursler recaptures the original setting of the life of Christ, true to the four Gospels.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA. — Slot machine kings in Los Angeles are spending more money and effort than ever before in trying to break through the strong front that keeps them out of the city limits. Frank Costello is said to be "lord of the underworld of the entire United States," for the Coin Machine Institute of which slot machines are the leading money makers.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—The department of international justice and good will of the Federal Council of Churches convened in the third National Study Conference of the Churches on World Order, adjourning on March 11. There were 400 delegates present representing 35 denominations.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY. — A Catholic information center, whose major purpose is to make information about Catholicism readily available to non-Catholics, opened recently here. Prof. John A. O'Brien, of the University of Notre Dame, said, in a sermon at the cathedral before the ceremony, that there are at least 100 million churchless people in the U.S. whom Catholics should reach for conversion.

WHILE JESUS WALKED STEADILY TOWARD THE CROSS, the disciples walked steadily in another direction. While Jesus was announcing that the way of power was the way of self-giving atoning love, the disciples were still insisting that the way of power was to get the chief seats. In the Lenten season of 1949, when Jesus is still walking toward the cross in the hearts of men, even those who call themselves by his name, are selfishly walking their own way. It is still true that the Master longs for our understanding and fellowship in behalf of that for which he died. Are we living that kind of a pure, wholly dedicated, Christian life bringing Christ into all our relationships that will inevitably involve knowing Him "in the fellowship of His sufferings"? Or are we consciously avoiding opportunities to take our stand fearing suffering, the very experience that was turned to the redemption of the world?—JJE

EVALUATING RECENT CHURCH EVENTS in Hungary that have reached American shores in the form of headlines featuring the idea of systematic persecution by communists—particularly of Bishop Ordass of the Hungarian Lutheran Church, and Cardinal Mindszenty—of all this Kingsley Martin, editor of the well-known New Statesman and Nation, of London who recently visited Austria, has this to say: "What communism has done in predominantly Catholic countries, like Poland and Hungary, is to destroy the immense and unjustifiable wealth of the church, to distribute its great estates and begin the process (long ago complete in the Western world) of secularizing education and undermining by a variety of means the political influence of the Church."

Here we have the inevitable result of the temptation on the part of the Church to use its worldly accretions to lord it over man instead of pouring them out in the service of man. When the Church misuses its resources, it should expect persecution, and no amount of fighting back can get the Church back into the plan of God.—JJE

IN OUR MENNONITE COMMUNITIES the temptation is a similar one. To live close to God often results in a frugality that permits of accumulation. When our ancestors came they were poor; but their godliness was reflected in their material progress as time went on. Material goods usually involves opportunity for influence. Are we being faithful stewards of our possessions? Or will we fall into the same old temptation of letting our goods become a barrier between others and God rather than a bridge. We can use wealth as a club or as a means of mercy. If God has "freely given us" all things in Christ, when can we dare withhold of our means and talent to help others?—JJE

TOWARD THE CLOSE OF THE MINISTRIES of both Dwight L. Moody and "Gypsy" Smith, they directed their preaching as evangelists toward members of the Church as a means of winning others. "Gypsy" Smith is reported to have made the observation that there is something inherently magnetic in the preaching that honestly grapples with sin in the church and seeks thus to brighten the Light of her Gospel. The sinner will be more attracted to the church that lets the truth shine on its own sins than on the church that constantly asks others to repent without doing so herself. May this be the reason why a lot of evangelism falls flat? "Judgment must begin at the house of God."

THERE WILL CERTAINLY BE THOSE who will ask questions when they read the article in the present issue entitled "Fifty Years, an Indian Church." In the article it calls attention to the fact that the youth among the Indians are concerned about the condition of their church building on this Oklahoma Mission station. One glance at the pictures accompanying the article will make us concerned about the matter too. Surely, even though it may not be possible nor wise to build a modern up-to-the minute church plant, it would still seem that simple, neat, structure is the least that this mission point should have as a material witness to the Gospel that makes men's hearts clean from the filth of sin. But having said that let us be careful to understand why these conditions may be such. And furthermore, let us not react to this situation in an isolated way by suddenly thinking only of this point of need in missions. In a case like this there may be some reasons from the standpoint of the field itself that make the leaders hesitant to do for the people what the people can do for themselves. But one is inclined to wonder whether the cause is not deeper; is it possibly due to the general cut-back in funds that are being contributed to missions by our churches so that the Board has no other alternative but to wait? Here is one of the areas where the Conference has been longest; this is one of the areas that has been our special "Macedonian Call" and we seem to be neglecting it! Can it be that we have too readily and too prayerlessly overlooked some of our own immediate missionary responsibility? In reacting to this need it would be wrong if headquarters received a number of checks from churches for this very need. Earmarking funds more often than not can mean inefficiency. It is not altogether impossible that a need of this kind may exist because too many funds for missions may have been earmarked for less pressing needs. Let us respond to a specific need of this kind by strengthing our backing of the Mission Board by heavy contributions for their general fund.
—JJE

The new pamphlet, THE MASTER CALLETH FOR THEE—twenty-four page booklet attractively illustrating the various opportunities for young people in the work of the church—is available for free distribution and young people in our churches surely should have these little books available for study and reference.

Looking Toward Conference Sunday

by Walter H. Dyck, Executive Secretary of Conference

Within a few more weeks we will have followed our blessed Lord, in the meditations of our heart, through His passion. We will have seen the palm-waving crowd proclaiming their loyalty to Him; we will have heard the Lord's parting counsels to a fearful disciple band and the earnestness with which He spoke the high priestly prayer. In shame we will have seen him taken through those judgment halls to "the old rugged cross" where He shed His blood for our sin. We will have rejoiced in the glorious victory of the first resurrection day. We trust that, with thankful hearts, we will have said, "Because He lives, we shall live also." We will have admonished each other, "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above . . . . "

Then, and then only, will our thankful hearts look for ways and means of expressing our love to Him. We will think of the local church and its responsibility in the larger General Conference fellowship. We will think of our missionaries, our relief workers, our ministers and evangelists, our teachers in our schools, our students preparing for Christian service, our hospitals, our old people's homes, our brethren in the faith who are being established in new homes. In what narrow circles we move. We need to be reminded of the wider fellowship, its witness, worship and work.

To meet this need the General Conference Executive Committee has set aside the last Sunday in April as CONFERENCE SUNDAY. This year it falls on the Sunday after Easter, APRIL 24.

May we urge upon every pastor, every Christian Endeavor program committee, every church board concerned with our Conference undertakings, that definite plans be made for the setting aside of APRIL 24 as a day of which "praise and prayer" be offered before the throne of grace for our blessed heritage and privilege.

Our congregations need a revival of heart-felt Christian faith and life. Those called to proclaim, teach, and live the blessed gospel of Christ, need to be upheld—need to feel the power of the Holy Spirit of God guiding and blessing their ministry. Pray that every member may have courage to witness faithfully in thought, word and deed.

More definite suggestions will be presented in the next issue of THE MENNONITE.

"In Judea and Samaria"

by A. J. Neuenschwander

Grateful to God for support to carry on the work, asking for guidance, all Board members took part in the opening prayer period. Since many resolutions are routine business and would not be of interest to all readers, we give the high points of our Board decisions of the Sessions held at Bloomington, Ill. Feb. 15-17

In Paraguay

The educational program in Paraguay will cost approximately $2000.00. Our plans include some support to the three Central Schools in the three colonies and also a provision for the Executive Committee of the District Conference in Paraguay to select a number of promising students to send them to Bragado, Argentina, Bible School conducted by the Mennonite Conference. Our subsidy to the schools conducted for the children, will enable a goodly number to attend school who could not do so without aid.

A number of ministers are to get a small monthly allowance since the local congregations are unable to pay their ministers anything and they need some remuneration for time given for spiritual work.

In Brazil

Aid is given in part to Ministers in Brazil for help that they must engage in order to do their work effectively. One minister is engaged as Bible teacher and traveling minister and two seminary students are supported who are preparing for service.

The German Conference paper, Der Bote is again being sent to about 1,200 families or individuals, many of whom are refugees in South America and some in Europe. The Relief Board assists in this project.

Several hundred dollars were voted to support some of the many orphans in Paraguay, especially among the last refugees that came from Europe. This money is taken out of the Memorial Orphan Fund. If anyone is interested in this kind of work, you can help by contributing to this fund and we will be glad to do more in the future.

The Secretary to Visit South America

In order to get a more complete picture of the task before us and to be able to have personal contact with the problems in the various countries and colonies, the Board voted that Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander visit our Brethren in South America this summer. Plans are being made now for the trip.

In Canada

Twenty five Ministers in Canada receive some support from the Board. The monthly pay roll is $1500.00. When a Congregation is small or new and unable to give any support to their shepherd, the Board comes to their aid. Such a group is as deserving of a minister as an older and well established church. The strong must help the weak.

If the Board of Home Missions in former years had not helped in Church extension, many of our present

Relief Board Outlines Huge Task

by John C. Mueller

At our Council of Boards meetings the Emergency Relief Board has again been forcefully challenged in the work that confronts us.

When we take a glance into the past, to evaluate what we have accomplished in the year gone by, we feel so humbled, realizing that we fell far short of what we could have done, had we dedicated our lives more fully to the task. Would that our prayers might always have been: "I yield my powers to Thy command, to Thee I consecrate my days, perpetual blessings from Thy hand, demand perpetual songs of praise."

But a tremendous work lies ahead. In planning to accomplish it, we find that we have before us various fields of activities.

Material Aid

The need for material aid such as food, clothing, farm implements, tools, etc., is still continuing. Some areas are quite self-supporting and a number of unit centers could be closed. More funds are needed to keep the hungry fed and the naked clothed, and new workers are needed as the term of those now serving expires.

Resettlement

There is the tremendous task of resettlement of displaced Mennonites. First we have to find a place for them to go, then to secure transportation to their destination and provide food and clothing until they can care for themselves. The also need farm equipment, of which there is quite a supply among our Mennonite farmers. Much of it very servicable yet, but has been discarded and modern power machinery used.

The New Area of Need

As some former needs are decreasing new ones are taking their place. Among the most important at present is the establishment of mental hospitals for our Mennonite patients who should receive better Christian treatments than they do now in state institutions. The plan of the M.C.C. is to erect three such homes. We are glad that the first of these in the East was able to start operation on January 1. The second home is to be located on the West Coast. A site has already been secured. Funds will be solicited now and building operation will begin as soon as funds are received. The third of these homes is to be placed in the central part of the U.S. Much interest of this is already manifested, but plans will be developed as possibilities present themselves.

In other Kingdom work of mission, education, and relief, we share the expense with other boards and committees.

Our prayer is that God May continue to bless His work.

members and churches would have been lost to our Conference.

In Mexico

We thank God for the faithful support you have this seems to be in the center of a large settlement of many Mennonites and it is our hope to enlarge our efforts in this district.

In United States

Our monthly pay-roll is about $850.00 in the fifteen fields. Congregations that have grown stronger receive less and new ones get more help, this is our system of working. Five new workers in the United States will need our prayers and interest.

In 1949 we decided to send 300 copies of the Gesangbuch to the refugee Brethren in Uruguay, South America. Four dozen copies of the German Catechism and four dozen copies of Kinderlieder were sent by parcel post to the same place.

We thank God for the faithful support you have given for this work and pray that the Lord may richly bless the givers and the fields where the gifts were applied and all the workers.

50th Anniversary celebration of

General Conference Mennonite Missions in India

We have a 36-bed hospital in our Champa Leprosarium. We should have 80 beds. There are about 20 practical nurses and dressers who are themselves lepers. We are greatly in need of a full-time doctor for our leper hospital. Miss Eva Pauls R.N. is giving her full time to work among the lepers.

Fifty Years, an Indian Church

by Arthur Friesen

Exterior view of Clinton Indian Church. It was built over 50 years ago with lumber hauled from El Reno for $500. The Missionary home is in the background. The tent was put up as a kitchen for the Anniversary program.

On February 19 the Indian Mennonite Church near Clinton, Oklahoma commemorated its fiftieth anniversary. It was in 1899 that Rev. M. M. Horsch organized the Church and received the first members. Of the five Indians and Christine Horsch received into membership at that time only Christine Horsch, now Mrs. H. J. Kliewer of the Bethel Home at Newton, is still living.

Other Indian Churches Join

The Indians of the Clinton Church gave their wholehearted support to the two-day celebration and with eager hands helped to make February 19 and 20 days full of blessings and days to be remembered. It was good to have Brother and Sister J. B. Ediger, who served the Church for 40 years from 1907 to 1947, in our midst for the important occasion. On Saturday, February 19 the other Oklahoma Indian Mennonite Churches joined us in a Fellowship Meeting at an Indian Camp three-fourth mile from the church.

Indians—Members for 42 years

Guy Heap of Birds of Clinton led the opening song service on Saturday forenoon and the songs chosen by the audience revealed the thought of the group. These were, "Amazing Grace," "Nothing Between," "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." John Heap of Birds from Thomas then used the parable of the Ten Virgins as the thought for the devotions. The Clinton Church sang "I am Thine O Lord" and "Savior Like a Shepherd Lead Us." Three Indian women, member of the church for forty-two years recalled experiences of the past and gave their testimony and expressed their feeling toward the church. The statement of Jesus, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," will someday also be said to Indians. Mrs. Ediger reminded us of the joy there is over one sinner who repents and enumerated such experiences as the burning of their home just a short time after coming to the mission station. Strong Indian men had held Mr. Ediger back from entering the burning building once more as the roof fell in. Their's was a life full of rich experiences. Brother Ediger then used the text, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."

Teen-Agers Participate Too

Saturday afternoon Brother and Sister Herbert Dalke had a thirty minute children's service and then three high school students gave short talks. One had chosen to speak on what the Bible and the Church meant to her. Another student expressed the wish for a new church with a basement. She doubted whether the church could stand much longer. At least she hoped that at the one hundredth anniversary when she would recall her remarks at the fiftieth anniversary she would not then still be wishing for a better church building. The church like the body houses the Holy Spirit and it should be attractive. She read Psalm 127. A young man then chose to read from Philippians 3. "I count all things but loss . . . that I may win Christ . . . that I may know him . . . this one thing I do . . I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

After a special song by the Longdale Church, Homer Hart of Hammon, a worker in the church for thirty years, gave a meaningful message on everlasting happiness in Christ. He pled with the young people to give their all in the service of the church for the Lord. Brother Alfred Wiebe then directed our thoughts to "What of the Future, for the Christian and the non-Christian."

Would the Church Be Large Enough?

Sunday, February 20, was to be another inspiring day. Rain was freezing as it fell. How would things go? Would the church be large enough? Could we keep it warm? We were glad the Saturday services had been in the hall at the camp for the one hundred sixty people could not have gotten into the church. On Sunday again the Indians turned out in goodly numbers so

The Board of Education

Conference Custodian of the Future

by L. L. Ramseyer

The Board of Education met February 15-17 at the time of the meeting of the Council of Boards in Bloomington. Three full days were required to complete the business in hand. Perhaps a good idea of the work of this Board can be secured by a very brief recital of the business acted upon at this meeting.

Youth First Concern

A report was received of the voluntary service team which visited church communities in Illinois and Indiana during the summer of 1948. The Board was the sponsor of this team. The foreign-student program was discussed, and details referred to a sub-committee, the Inter-School Committee. The Executive Secretary of the Board has gathered a list of Mennonite students attending non-Mennonite schools. This report was examined and action taken to contact these students in the interest of this continued connection with the church. Contacts are to be made through the YPU, through ministers located adjacent to these schools, and through the formation of fellowship groups on some of the campuses. A plan for ministerial scholarships for those preparing to enter the ministry had been worked out by a sub-committee and was approved by the Board. A report of the Visual Aids library, sponsored by the Board, and which is still in its infancy, was received, and plans were made for its enlargement.

Creating Materials—Second Concern

The Curriculum Committee, a very active sub-committee of the Board, reported. Through this committee new Daily Vacation Bible School materials are being made available, and editorship is provided for quarterlies and papers. A booklet The Master Calleth for Thee was recently published and plans were made for its distribution. A youth hymnal is being considered and a committee was appointed to examine the need for such a book and to make suggestions as to its type if there is a need.

Statistics and Organization—Third Concern

Plans were made to gather statistics from the Sunday schools annually in cooperation with District Education committees, using the same blank for both purposes. The YPU reported to the Board. A new Advisory Committee for the YPU has been recently set up which gives promise of giving considerable help to the Young People's work. The Advisory Committee consists of three members. A plan for closer cooperation between the Board of Education and the Board of Publication was worked out in joint meeting with that Board. The Ministers Retreat Committee, working under the Board, reported on plans and program for the 1949 retreat at Estes Park. These plans were approved and a retreat committee apointed for 1950. A meeting was held with Boards sponsoring the CPS Rehabilitation Fund. It was discovered that approximately $10,000.00 will be needed to pay 1948-49 tuition bills, but that sufficient funds are on hand to meet all bills prior to the current school year. Plans were made to continue the committee whose duty it is to raise funds for this purpose. The Catechism Committee, another sub-committee, reported. It was decided that this committee should proceed with the publication of a student handbook to accompany the catechism.

The Budget

To carry on the work of the coming year a budget of $24,500.00 was adopted. Of this amount an estimated $7,250.00 will be in transfers from other boards or committees leaving $17,250.00 to be secured in other ways. In the published report of board budgets in The Mennonite of March 1 only this $17,250.00 was mentioned. In totals published for previous years transfer funds were also included, which makes a much greater apparent drop in the budget for the coming year than is actually the case. Some of the major items of the budget are, salaries and secretarial help, $2,825.00; expenses of the Board and its sub-committees, $2,600.00; Foreign Student Exchange, $5,000.00; CPS Educational Rehabilitation $10,000.00; Young People's Work, $750.00.

REPORT OF THE PENSION AND MINISTERS' AID COMMITTEE

by Clinton Kaufman

We were happy that all of our members could be present at the meeting at Bloomington. The work of providing pensions and aid was carefully reviewed and plans made for the coming year.

The Pension Plan is well received by the churches. Many of the ministers and their churches are now participating in the plan or are in the process of making the necessary arrangements. Furthermore the Foreign Mission Board is enrolling the younger missionaries.

The number of retired ministers and ministers' widows who are receiving aid has gradually increased and apparently will continue to increase for some time to come. These people have served willingly and we are grateful that the churches are providing the necessary funds to help them at the close of their periods of service.

The committee plans to continue its policy of giving information on the Pension Plan and the need for aid through the church papers and by letters to the officers of the churches.

The following budget was adopted:

Funds for needy ministers	$6,000.00
Travel expenses	210.00
Secretarial salary	240.00
General printing	100.00
Postage	50.00
Total	$6,600.00

This budget is included in the General Treasury budget.

Holding Forth the Word of Life

by Elsie Pfister and Margaret Slotter

We rejoice in the privilege which is ours of holding forth the "Word of Life" in classrooms where those schooled in their profession hold forth the knowledge of history, spelling, arithmetic and reading. Many of the teachers know and love the Saviour as we do and with such we become "laborers together with Him" in making Christ known to thousands of girls and boys. Gospel messages are given by object lessons, flannelgraph or Bible-story method; hymns and choruses are taught; the Scripture-Memory plan is offered in each school. For reciting five verses the children receive a Gospel of John; twenty-five verses a New Testament; twenty verses a Story Book; seventy-five verses a Bible; and another seventy-five makes them eligible for one free week at Camp Nathanael.

The School—Contact for Summer Camp

We praise the Lord for those who are hiding some or all of these assigned verses in their hearts. We thank Him, too, for those who really enjoy learning them, knowing they will not be permitted to go to Camp and so many times for no other reason than denominational prejudice on the part of parents or some one in their community. How good to know that the power of the Word is not limited to the workers of the Scripture Memory Mountain Mission or to Camp Nathanael! It is a privilege to be the human instrument to encourage them in getting acquainted with the Word and to pray the Lord of the harvest to use it in His own way and place in each heart and life.

"After teaching a lesson on Martha and Mary and the need of having Christ in our hearts and homes, a little girl volunteered this, 'That sure enough is what's wrong with my home.'"

Interesting Responses

The Lord often encourages our own hearts in this phase of the work by remarks and questions from the children such as, "I didn't know I was a sinner 'till I learned these verses. Is joking and smoking wrong? Is it sin to have musical instruments in church?" After teaching a lesson on Martha and Mary and the need of having Christ in our hearts and homes, a little girl volunteered this, "That sure enough is what's wrong with my home."

At Camp Nathanael

We believe the school-visitation ministry to be God's plan for beginning of Bible camps each summer. Children who are eligible for camp are making big plans, too, as we hear them say, "I can hardly wait to go." Some of them are beginning now to plan what they will need for that week. What are God's plans for them as they go? He is not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance. He plans for a large family—and that each camper should become one of that family and be like His Son, Jesus Christ. Some of you may say, "Does it pay spiritually when you have a child only one week out of a year?" Listen to just one of their own testimonies—"Do you remember what took place in my life six years ago today? Well, right here at Camp I gave my heart to the Lord and He has been with me every day, helping me through many hard places. Jesus saves and keeps and satisfies." Those of us who live and work with them need to be willing to be kept close to Him for they read our lives, especially when they are conscious that they are making things hard for us and making trouble for other campers and workers, too. This was revealed by the words taken from a campers' prayer one night: "Lord we know these counsellors must have the love of God in their hearts or they would be using their belts on us."

"Those of us who live and work with them need to be willing to be kept close to Him for they read our lives, especially when they are conscious that they are making things hard for us and making trouble for other campers and workers, too. This was revealed by the words taken from a campers' prayer one night: 'Lord, we know these counsellors must have the love of God in their hearts, or they would be using their belts on us.'"

For the Campers—the Joy of Christ

Campers riding to Camp Nathanael seldom sing but after a week during which many of them receive joy, real joy, wonderful joy through the Lord Jesus as personal Saviour, they return to their homes filled with praise to Him whom they have come to know and love. Many of them leave us requesting our prayers, that they might live for Him in their communities. They would ask the same of any of you.

Thanking you for keeping us in your prayers. May you share in the blessings of His work as you pray and give.

The above article gives you a picture of two phases of work as carried on by our Kentucky mountain workers. They are also busy on Sundays in various Sunday-schools, and take part in church services as opportunity presents itself. Yours in Christ. A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary Board of Home Missions

With MCC in Kashmir

A recent report from the workers in the Vale of Kashmir, bordering on the northern part of India, summarizes the work of the past few months as follows: 25 villages were visited; 1,811 houses were investigated; and, 10,765 garments were distributed. This work was terminated because the area, surrounded by mountains, was about to become isolated for the rest of the winter by snow. Milk canteens serving about 740 people daily in one city were to be continued for a time by local missionary personnel, with the supply of milk provided by the relief units. The workers who had been engaged in this distribution felt that the need truly had been great and the work very much worth while.

Helping the Most Needy

Most acute needs in Central Europe exist among a few specific catagories of people: old people, widows, orphans, sick, and returned prisoners of war. During a recent month at Hamburg, in the British Zone of Germany, clothing was given to 70 families of war disabled, girls in five orphan and refugee homes, and children's homes. The number of people helped with shoes and clothing totaled 5,180. One hundred bales of clothing and 20 cases of shoes were used.

Other projects carried on were food package gifts to 60 returned prisoners of war chosen by doctors as being especially needy. Thirty persons receive regular monthly food parcels. Senator Schmedemann, of the Hamburg city government, has written a special letter of thanks for food packages distributed to convalescents released from hospitals in the city of Hamburg. He gives assurance that "this gift will contribute to reduce the period of recovery and help to a more rapid restoration of physical strength, than would be possible with our small food rations. I further believe I am authorized to render you my sincerest thanks on behalf of the persons who will profit from this act of humanity, and I would ask you to pass both my gratitude and that of all concerned to your friends overseas."

Summer Service Units

The following are MCC service opportunities for the coming summer: Boystown for Delinquents, Mt. Princeton Commonweal, Nathrop, Colorado; MCC Headquarters, Akron, Pennsylvania; Migrant work, Utica, New York; Gulfport, Mississippi; Cuauhtemoc, Mexico; Farnhurst State Hospital, Farnhurst, Delaware; Topeka State Hospital, Topeka, Kansas; Skillman State Village for Epileptics, Skillman, N. J.; Apple Creek State School, Apple Creek, Ohio; Christian Student-in-Industry, Chicago, Illinois; European Service Units; Canadian Hospital units at London, Ontario, and Brandon, Manitoba, and possibly also in Saskatchewan and British Columbia. For further information write to the Voluntary Service office, Akron, Penn., or to the representative in Canada, David Schroeder, 116 Furby, Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Holy Week

What Do Such People Need?

A Witness for the Grieved

In most communities we find people who quietly suffer under some hurt that has come to them. Have Christian people a responsibility here? What do such people need? Two things, it would seem. First, they need some interested sympathetic friend who will listen to their story, to whom they can unburden their hearts. Just to unburden themselves to a sympathetic friend will bring them some relief. Second, they need to know how to overcome their hurts and grievances. They need help on how to find victory through Jesus Christ. If you have found victory over some injustice or hurt that has come to you, should you not go to your friends and as you listen to their story share with them how you found victory in your experience? By such a witness you may do your friends an inestimable service, for suppressing hurts can easily grow into bitterness of soul and fester in self-pity. Help your friends to avoid that. During Holy Week share with them how Christ has given you the victory.

A Witness to Shut-ins

What shut-ins and aged people need is the interest, the fellowship and the appreciation of Christian friends. Shut-ins often feel that they are quite useless and of little worth. They may have something very vital to say, but no opportunity to say it unless people come to visit them. Often shut-ins and aged people become a real blessing and inspiration to those who visit them. Others need support and encouragement. They need to be made to feel that they are a part of the Christian fellowship.

One of the finest ways to keep them in the Christian fellowship is for groups of young people to go to them to sing for them, to read the Scriptures to them and to pray with them. This offers an opportunity to the young people to make their witness, and gives the aged folk and the shut-ins an opportunity to share with good friends what moves their hearts. Holy Week is an excellent time for young people to go out to the sick and the aged with a message of cheer. —THE EVANGELISM COMMITTEE

Are All Alcholics Drunkards?

"One can die of alcoholism without ever being a drunkard," says Dr. J. Bertillion. "Every day people die of alcoholism without ever having been drunk. Usually such a drinker does not get drunk, but slowly poisons himself without knowing it. This form of alcoholism is most frequent and insidious."—Quoted in N. Y. TEMPERANCE WORK. Nov., 1948

William T. Snyder and Raymond Schlichting left on March 17 for South America. They will spend several months in the Mennonite colonies in order to assist in the further planning and direction of the MCC program there, particularly regarding various financial concerns connected with the immigration and resettlement program.

Northern District

Advances in Montana

by M. M. Lehman

About one and one-half years ago the committee traveled to Montana to investigate possibilities of beginning new projects of evangelization and church-extension work.

At Glendive

At Glendive, Montana, the believers were called together in one of the homes and our plan was presented to them to which they heartily responded. Brother George Dick of Bloomfield served the group week nights during the winter months. Much interest was awakened and a desire was manifested to undertake something permanent and therefore Sunday services were begun. The Committee was able to secure the excellent service of Brother and Sister Leonard Harder, students of Grace Bible Institute. A hall was rented for the summer months and Sunday School and church services were begun at once. The Lord was signally blessing the work. The Harder family was asked to remain for the winter months.

A permanent place was sought for constructing a church edifice. A lot was purchased and on it a church basement was built which was dedicated in December.

Sunday School and church services have been carried on ever since very successfully. Brother Leonard Harder writes: February 15, 1949.

"We had to postpone our Evangelistic services for two weeks on account of bad weather. We had wonderful services last week and hope to have a few more this week. Rev. and Mrs. O. M. Hoff of Sidney, Montana, are conducting them. Most of the services have been well attended—as many as from 60 to 100 persons, which is about all our church basement will hold. Sunday night we had a good number of hands raised for prayer. Will you pray for them and us please! We even had an atheist in our services one night; he promised to come back."

At Wolf Point

In Wolf Point a very similar project was undertaken. A local committee was elected who made themselves responsible for looking after places where they could meet for prayer and Bible study. Brother Ben Nickel of Bethel, Wolf Point, consented to conduct week-day Bible studies. At once interest was manifest and a permanent worker was desired. Brother Lawrence Goerz and family of Washington were secured who have carried on the work since last June.

Church Is Being Built

The committee purchased a parsonage and an empty lot beside it. Services have been conducted in the parsonage ever since. The need for a church structure, however was keenly felt so plans were made to build a church. This building is now almost complete and will be dedicated in the near future.

Clarence Olfert, one of the committee members, writes as follows: February 4, 1949.

"We have had Sunday forenoon services as well as evening prayer meetings. Every last Sunday in the month we have a C. E. program. We have a fairly good attendance; last Sunday there were about 40 attending. That just about fills the parsonage, but we can always find more room if more come. The Lord is blessing this work even though it is not always all sunshine, but if we have faith and trust in the Lord he will help us.

"The ladies had their meeting yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Albertena Wilson. I think they had a good turn out. They sew and do different things to raise money for the church building.

"I told Brother Goerz I thought it would be good to report of our progress with our church building. It is quite a long way from being finished. It has been so cold that it was hard to work. The building is up, the shingles are on. The windows and doors are all in but the siding is not on.

"We have started with the wiring. Rev. Karl Dick, who has been pastor at Larslan, Montana, wired the church and supplied the material. We will still need about $1,000 to finish. If anyone would like to send a donation we will surely appreciate it."

Note to Northern District Churches

Donations for this cause can be sent directly to Clarence Olfert, Wolf Point, Montana, or to Rev. Edward Duerksen, Avon, South Dakota. The evangelization committee borrowed $1,000 from the Home Mission Board of the General Conference of which $250 has been returned. We would like to return the whole amount before conference time in June.

Many thanks for the splendid co-operation of the churches who so graciously responded with generous offerings. If there are any congregations who have not yet responded and would like a share in the building of the kingdom of God at Glendive and Wolf Point it will be very gratefully acknowledged.

MENNONITE MEN FOR CHRIST

The American Bible Society is the agency which cooperates with Christian groups in supplying the Scriptures in the language of the various peoples of the world. Its aid in making the Scriptures available to missionaries and Christian workers to help them in their activities is of great value and deserves our prayerful support. Not only does this society prepare the printed Word but also publishes the Scripture in Braille, and the spoken Word for those who cannot read the message. Contributions toward support of this work helps the spreading of the Gospel message to those in need of it. The Layman's Organization of the General Conference has the support of the work of the American Bible Society as one of its projects.—Walter H. Temple

Students Elect at Freeman

Election results for officers of the Students Association are as follows: President, Rosemary Linscheid; Editor of The Star, Maynard Kaufman; Associate Editor, Marles Preheim; Business Manager, Vernon Ortman; Assistant Business Manager, Betty Fliginger. Voting for the adoption of the new Constitution will also be held in the near future.

The Winter Quarter here at Freeman College ends Friday, March 4.

Pastors in the surrounding community continue to furnish our chapel talks. Rev. John Deurkson pastor of the E. M. B. Church gave us a short talk on Noah. "Who could it be but Jesus" was the title of the message delivered to us by Rev. Peter Stahl pastor of the Hutterdorf Church. For the Music Chapel period the Men's Octet favored us with several numbers.

Bethel Teachers to National Posts

Several appointments of national importance have been granted to Bethel College recently. Dr. R. C. Kauffman was elected to the committee on Liberal Arts of the North Central Association. This is the committee that plans the work for the study in Liberal Arts Education.

Dr. J. L. Spaulding was appointed on a committee of the National Protestant Council on Higher Education to work out the suggested curriculum of church colleges for economics from a Christian point of view.

The National Protestant Council on Higher Education selected Bethel College as one of the 80 church colleges for cooperation in a research project of the College Teacher and Student Religion conducted as a Yale Study on Religion in Higher Education.

The last of the Memorial Hall series will be the One World Ensemble on April 4, 8 p.m. Several nationalities and races are combined in a quartet to give a concert of vocal and instrumental music.

Seven representatives from Bethel College have been accepted by the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated colleges to go to Europe on the third annual tour of students. The group will travel in seven countries and be a part of a four-week work camp in Germany planned by the MCC Voluntary Service section. Students from Bethel include: Marjorie Fast, Edna Peters, and Arlene Neufeld. Ruth Baughman of the Bethel faculty and three former students—Frances Ewy, Hazel Graber, and Helen W. Penner constitute the Bethel contingent.

Dr. Erland Waltner, pastor of Bethel Mennonite church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, will be associate professor of Bible and Christian Education beginning next fall. Mr. Elmer Suderman will be instructor in composition and English. He is doing graduate work at the University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kansas.

Bluffton College

Lawrence Burkholder, recently returned from China, was the speaker for the college "Y's" Wednesday evening, March 16. After the "Y" meeting George Houser spoke before the Peace Club on the proposed North Atlantic Defense Alliance. He spoke in chapel the following morning on non-conformity with the world, stressing the fact that the useful Christian will be maladjusted to the world as it is, and that perfect adjustment is not desirable in a world of evil.

Dr. J. S. Schultz attended a work-shop on general Education at the University of Minnesota March 21-23. Pres. Ramseyer expects to attend a meeting of the North Central Association in Chicago the last week in March.

Resource leaders selected by the Peace Club for the Peace Institute sponsored by it were Carl Landes, Dr. Guy Hershberger, and Dr. R. C. Kauffman.

The Music Department sponsored a concert by the Ohio State University Men's Glee Club Monday evening, March 21. On the 22d the Blafka Instrumental Trio gave a concert in Ramseyer Chapel, a number on the college concert series.

Dr. Bernard C. Claussen, pastor of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland, Ohio, has been chosen as the commencement speaker. The commencement service will be Monday, May 30. Dr. Claussen has specialized in religious work with students and contacts with young people. He is the author of more than a dozen books and has been a pioneer in radio broadcasting. He speaks annually in the chapels of outstanding eastern colleges and gives a score of commencement addresses every spring.

Seminary Seniors Take "Comps"

The Seniors have completed their comprehensive examinations which must be taken prior to the granting of the B. D. degree. These comprehensives cover the entire course of the three year period.

Mrs. Harper Will, wife of the pastor of the First Brethren Church, addressed the Seminary Women's Fellowship which met in the apartment of Mrs. Delbert Schrag on March 14th. Assisting hostesses were Mrs. Marvin Dirks, Mrs. Harold Ratzlaff, and Mrs. Orlando Waltner.

Don. E. Smucker is delivering a series of Lenten addresses each Sunday evening at the Eighth Street Mennonite Church of Goshen, Indiana, concluding on April 3. He will address the Christian Worker's Organization of Goshen College on the morning of March 27.

Next Thursday evening concludes a series of lectures on Child Training, conducted by Dr. Jesse Ziegler of the Bethany faculty. These addresses have been sponsored by the Women's Fellowship and have been deeply appreciated by the women of our group.

Teaching As a Vocation

A growing and alarming shortage of elementary teachers points to the needs in this vital and satisfying form of service.

by Eldon W. Graber, Chicago, Illinois

The desperate need for elementary teachers leads one to wonder if enough Mennonite young people have considered teaching as a vocation. When one realizes that over 75,000 teaching positions remain unfilled, and that over four million children of school age are not attending school at all, it is clear that something is wrong in the little red school house. The trouble is that the teacher is not there!

There is no indication that the situation will improve in the next year or two. Bad as conditions are now, they are likely to get much worse. The reason for this is due partly to the increased birth-rate during the recent war. This flood—and in the larger cities it is a flood—of war babies is beginning to hit the elementary schools. Kindergartens and first-grade teachers are already in great demand. That is not all. Statistics seem to indicate that the birth-rate has not declined since the war, and that the population of the United States has increased substantially in the past decade.

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

There are now 4,000,000 children of school age who are not attending school at all.

Since 1940 more than half of our teachers have left teaching. The loss in men teachers has been particularly great.

There are 75,000 unfilled teaching positions in the United States today.

More than 100,000 teachers are now employed who have emergency certificates or are not properly certified to teach.

Enrollments forecast by the United States Census Bureau list a 40 per cent increase in the elementary grades in the next ten years.

The President's Commission on Higher Education maintains that we will need 1,000,000 more teachers to staff schools on all levels during the next ten years.

Four times as much is spent for alcohol and tobacco each year in the United States as is spent for education

Students whose fathers were farmers and those who come from villages and rural areas have a better-than-average chance for success in teaching.

Need Eight Times As Many Elementary Teachers!

The next decade is to see an increase of 40 per cent in the enrollment of the elementary school. This means that it will be necessary to prepare eight times as many elementary teachers each year as were prepared during the year 1947-48. Our high school population may increase by as much as 30 per cent; however, most of this increase will not be evident until after 1955. By that time the increased enrollments from the grade schools will enter our high school. Forecasters do not foresee a drop in elementary school enrollments even then. If high school facilities are made available in communities where students now cannot attend because of a lack of schools, and if there are any further shifts in population trends or an increase in immigration, the above estimates would certainly be too low.

It is interesting to note that in some areas there is no shortage of high school teachers at the present time. Several states report a surplus of social science teachers; Kansas has not employed all of the coaches that were graduated during the past two years. However, no state has reported an adequate supply of elementary teachers, and many areas are eagerly looking for kindergarten, first-, and second-grade teachers.

Has the Lot of the Teacher Improved?

Why is there such a shortage of teachers, and why do not more people go into teaching? Why has there been such a turnover of teachers in the past five or six years? Several answers could be given to such questions, but no one would deny that the conditions of teaching and the low salaries paid to teachers have been two factors limiting the supply of teachers. By conditions of teaching are meant such things as class size, extra-curricular activities, equipment, housing, and status in the community. In many communities teachers have almost no social status, and boards of education have been known to prescribe the number of week ends to be spent in town and the type of entertainment which teachers could participate in.

Conditions of teaching have improved in many localities. As more money becomes available for education, class sizes can be reduced and better equipment provided. Something has been done about salaries. The question is—has enough been done? Women can earn more money in teaching now than they can in any other occupation provided the amount of training is the same. In 1940 the average public school teacher earned $1,441; in 1948 the amount had risen to $2,644. While this is a little below the income of the average worker, it represents earnings for a nine-months period only. Many teachers augment their earnings through vacation jobs. There are also some trends which seem to indicate that progress is being made in the attempt to raise the standards of the profession. Yes, the lot of the teacher has improved, and will continue to do so.

What Does This Mean for Us?

The rewards of teaching are manifold and in all cases can compensate for lack of a high salary. There is joy in doing for others, and "he lives most who serves best." Educators are beginning to see that every child needs moral and spiritual guidance as well as mental and physical training. What a splendid opportunity this offers for Mennonite youth who really want to teach and to lead children as they grow! The Sunday school teacher sees her students one hour or less each week; the elementary teacher sees hers twenty or more hours each week.

Mennonite young people have seen visions of service in relief work and mission work at home and abroad; they have seen opportunities in mental hospitals and in migrant work; they can also find opportunities in teaching. The doors are open and the needs are great!

4,502 Classified IV-E

As of December 31, 1948, 4,502 registrants under the Selective Service Act of 1948 were classified in IV-E (deferred CO), according to National Headquarters of Selective Service.

Western District Youth Hold Meeting on Retreat

A special Western District Youth Meeting was held at the Emmaus church, Whitewater, Kansas, concerning the newly purchased retreat grounds. The program, held the afternoon and evening of March 20, dealt with the theme of "Forward in Faith through Retreats." In the afternoon a round-table discussion on the retreat program was held. In the evening there were pictures and talks on camp-site development. The Western District plans to construct buildings on their site this summer using voluntary labor.

What the Y.P.U. Does

1. Through the Y.P.U., in cooperation with the Peace committee of the General Conference, the program of Voluntary Service sponsored annually has become a reality.
2. The four-page section of The Mennonite, called "Mennonite Youth," is published weekly under the sponsorship of the Y.P.U. in cooperation with the Board of Publication.
3. Funds have been raised through Y.P.U. channels to give a training to foreign students preparing them to return to their people, serving them as Christian leaders.
4. Conference-wide retreats have been held at which young people get inspiration, learn new acquaintances, and return home better-equipped to serve in home churches.
5. Cooperation in developing literature and study materials has been undertaken by the Y.P.U.—material of interest to youth regarding the work of the church.
6. Local institutes have been held under sponsorship of the Y.P.U. to gain larger visions of work in the local church.
7. The Y.P.U. is an organization endeavoring to tie together Mennonite youth in a fellowship in which Christ is a living center and in which youth may have visions of Christian discipleship and the part youth may have in such discipleship in these times.

Pastors! -- Youth!

"The Master Calleth"

Pastors will want to keep a copy on their desk while counselling with young people, for distribution in cathechism classes.

Young people's program committees will find it valuable to build several or more programs based on the content of the booklet.

A check sheet on the last page gives each boy or girl an opportunity to analyse himself carefully in the light of the various types of work available.

So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
  So near is God to man,
When Duty whispers low, "Thou must."
  The youth replies, "I can."

Y.P.U. Holds Annual Council Meeting

This year's Y. P. U. Council meeting, held in Chicago, had some new features included in it as well as the review of work laid out a year ago. The meeting had a two-fold purpose. First it served as a clearing house for the discussion of youth work—a program, and the needs. Rev. Andrew Shelly led a discussion along this line in which a number of needs were brought out, needs which must be met before the Y.P.U. can be an effective organization. Lacks mentioned include (1) lack of information about the Y. P. U.; (2) lack of an understanding of the total work of the General Conference; (3) there is need for a total program for young people in our churches; (4) there is need for a personal contact with leaders; (5) there is lacking adequate leadership training and an opportunity to develop leadership; (6) a knowledge of program materials and where to obtain them is lacking; (7) a sense of duty is lacking; (8) the correlation between church, district, and General Conference is inadequate, and (9) the Y.P.U. possesses an inadequate mailing list.

Meeting Needs

To meet such needs, it was felt at the meeting that there should be more printed materials—printed materils describing the youth program, providing materials for local youth groups to use, and acquainting youth with larger opportunities. Y.P.U. representatives should visit local churches and youth leaders should become better acquainted. A program of dynamic leadeship should be developed through more contacts and experiences together. Provision should be made for a balanced youth program that touches all areas of life, both on the local as well as the district and Conference level. The retreat program which is now in operation needs to include in it opportunity to become better acquainted with the church youth organization.

By this it can be seen that a rather large program is in store for those who will undertake to carry through such a large program as can be realized in the church youth organization of the Conference.

Financial Report

The financial report revealed some interesting information. From July 1, 1948, the beginning of the fiscal year for the Y.P.U. to January 31, 1949, young people's organizations of the General Conference contributed the following for the several causes listed:

Balance July 1, 1948		$ 604.46
Receipts for General Fund		566.75
		$1,171.21
Disbursements		699.31
Balance Jan. 31, 1949		$ 471.90
Receipts other than Y.P.U. General Fund
Foreign Student Fund		297.40
Mission total divided as follows:
Puerto Rico	$ 46.89
General	617.19
Protege	,478.76
Other	569.13
		1,711.97
Relief		885.20
Voluntary Service		44.52
Home Mission		75.79
CPS Rehabilitation		114.69
YPU General Fund		566.75
		$3,696.32

It can be seen by this that the Christian Endeavor and young people's organizations are giving through the General Conference treasury. These figures also suggest

The annual Council Meeting of the Young People's Union was held in Chicago at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, February 10-12. At this meeting, representatives from all districts of the Conference came together to lay plans for the coming year and hear reports on the present year's work.

Those present at the meeting and the districts they represented are as follows: Young People's Union officers: Kenneth Bauman, president; Verney Unruh, vice-president; Myrtle Wasser, secretary-treasurer; Esko Loewen, editor of "Mennonite Youth." The Advisory Committee to the Y.P.U.: Ronald von Riesen, Erland Waltner, Andrew Shelly, and Elmer Ediger.

District representatives: Eastern District, Grace Moyer, Allentown, Pennsylvania; Middle District, Robert Amstutz, Bluffton, Ohio, Orlin Frey and Mrs. Henry Grimm, Chicago, Illinois; Central District, Richard Baum, Melvin Norquist, Dean Heiser; Western District, Maurine Siemens; Northern District, Erna Friesen; Pacific District, W. Edgar Nafziger; Saskatchewan, Issac Epp; Ontario, Henry Epp; Alberta, Henry Poettcker; Mennonite Bible College, Bill Dick; Freeman Junior College, Ralph Graber.

N. Paul Stucky served as advisor concerning the Puerto Rican mission project.

that the Y.P.U. budget can be met if the contributions include the items on the budget. As it stands there are here represented many individual projects which are worthy to be carried on and which should be carried on. The larger projects which local groups cannot themselves undertake also need support. The Y.P.U. faces the problem of getting these larger projects into the interest and eye of local groups so that they will be adequately supported.

The budget for the fiscal year of July, 1948 to June 30, 1949 is as follows:

Y.P.U. General Fund	$1,000
Prayer Calendar	500
Missionary Education Fund	1,200
Puerto Rico	2,500
	$5,200

Budget for '49-'50

The budget for the fiscal year of July 1, 1949, to June 30, 1950, is as follows:

Y.P.U. General Fund	$1,000
Missionary Education Fund	1,000
Prayer Calendar	500
Puerto Rico	$1,500
	$4,000

The General Fund of the Y.P.U. is used to pay costs in connection with the editing of "Mennonite Youth," the four-page section of The Mennonite. It covers executive travel, postage, stationary, supplies, publicity literature, folders, etc.

The Missionary Education Fund has provided money for four students studying in Conference schools. Three of the students came from Puerto Rico and one from Paraguay. These students plan to return to their people serving them in church work, education, public health, or medical work.

The Prayer Calendar consists of a Calendar with art work, prayer items for each day, and information about the work of the church.

Puerto Rico is a mission field as yet pending actual work by the General Conference. The Y.P.U. is seeking to raise funds in support for such work.

that over a hundred joined us in worship and fellowship. We wish we could give you a picture of the place of worship being converted into a dining hall where maybe one hundred twenty people crowded into the church to eat soup, using chairs for table or no tables at all

The forenoon service consisted of Sunday School with all three classes taught by the regular Indian teachers and preaching service by the present missionary of the Clinton station, Arthur Friesen, speaking on the Church at Antioch. Believers were called Christians. Its leaders saw possibilities in others. It was a redemptive church.

Sunday afternoon Guy Heap of Birds talked on Love. (1 Cor. 13) Love must be central in a Christian's life. Mr. Ediger gave a challenging message on "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and forever." What is he to each one of us? Some one then chose the song, "Jesus is all the World to Me."

The Witness of Oldest Araphoe

Probably the oldest Arapaho Christian and his wife from Canton maybe also the first two Arapahoes to have been baptized at Cantonment, were present. After the Indian man had spoken a few well chosen words in English he requested his nephew to read Revelation 21:1-8. "He that overcometh shall inherit these things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." His wife then asked for a Bible and she read from John 14. Someone called for the song, "The Haven of Rest" and Brother Ediger closed the Anniversary service with prayer.

Fifty years ago the church was built for the Indians. The 50th anniversary was to be for them and by them. It was their service. We were not disappointed. Much more could be said. The Missionary News and Notes might have an account of the meals. The Indian women planned them and prepared them and also served them. It was an Indian audience except for the four missionary families. Most of the program was by the Indians. The Spirit of God was upon us those days and we pray that it may continue to be the guide of the Clinton Indian Church in the coming years.

Rev. Aaron Epp and family of Inman, Kansas, were among our recent visitors.

Prof. Marvin J. Dirks will present a sacred concert at the Vesper service this Sunday, March 20. Mr. Dirks has also announced that during the summer he will supply the pulpit of the Bethel Mennonite Church, of Mt. Lake, Minnesota, while Rev. Erland Waltner is in Europe prior to his appointment at Bethel College.

Benton Rhodes, who has just opened up a new field for the Church of the Brethren in Ecuador, South America gave a message on the work there. The interesting part of this address was the announcement that this mission is essentially functioning on the pattern of the old lay ministry. Benton Rhodes and the other Brethren missionary are supporting themselves by farming. The reason for this is that the Indians of Ecuador—and most Ecuadorians are Indians—have come to believe that the white man will not work, but comes only to exploit and to hire Indians to do his work. Like all people who understand the situation in South America, Benton Rhodes painted a rather dark picture of the impact of Spanish Christianity on South American life. Religious apathy, moral decline, and various other signs of evil make the preaching of the gospel very challenging. He showed how simple Bible teaching still brings a response as long as the common people believe that the missionary is coming to help, rather than to exploit. Certainly American Christians need to use their special privileges, both spiritually and temporally, for a deeper obedience.

Beyond Our Own

TOPEKA, KANSAS.—The last Kansas CROP car shipped overseas before the 1948 CROP year closed February 28, was a car of powdered milk from Topeka contributed by public school children of Kansas.

REGINA, SASKATCHEWAN. — Strong objection to the possible appointment of a Canadian envoy to the Vatican was registered at the annual meeting of the United Church of Canada's Board of Evangelism and Social Service, held in Toronto.

NEW YORK.—Henry Smith Leiper of the World Council of Churches recently declared that American Jews should not identify themselves with the political state of Israel if they want to be considered real Americans. In a further warning he called upon Jewish leaders to come out publicly with an expression of sympathy for the 800,000 victims of the expulsion of Arabs from Israel.

NEW YORK.—One of the largest mass meetings of Protestants ever held in this country will take place in Madison Square Garden on May 10. This event will serve as a climax to the Christian World Missions Advance launched in Columbus, Ohio, last October. Music will be furnished by a mass choir of over a thousand voices with several hundred Christian nationals from abroad taking part in the ceremonies. On that day clergymen everywhere are asked to stress the Christian role in world recovery and outline their denomination's program of advance in foreign missions.

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA. — Conditions for a true revival were listed by Edwin Dahlberg, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Syracuse, New York, at the annual state pastors' conference held here recently. These conditions include: a return to a dynamic personal relationship with God, a theological reawakening, a deeper social consicence, and a sincere passion for the souls of men.

GREECE. — Execution of a Greek Jehovah's Witness, John Tsoukaris, because he refused to do military service, has raised strong protest in this country. Besides statements from the War Resistor's League and the Fellowship of Reconciliation, three Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish leaders wrote to the Greek embassy in Washington pointing to the imprisonment of Cardinal Mindszenty and adding:

> " 'This similar action by the government of Greece is equally abhorrent to us. We wish to express our strong condemnation of the execution and we hope that many others will join us in our protest.' "

"TETELESTAI!"—with this word Jesus spoke the triumphant fact "It is finished!" of our English Testament. The world writes "It is finished' after every great war as it futilely seeks to crush evil with evil only to find that nothing was settled. Only at Calvary where perfect love met evil in all its naked brutality could "It is finished" be said with finalty.

"THE GREATEST TREASON is to do the right thing for the wrong reason." These words of T. S. Eliot pointedly epitomize the tragedy that is Palm Sunday. It was unquestionably right that they should have praised Jesus; but he was praised as a potential political deliverer rather than the deliverer of men's souls. Most men would still use Jesus Christ for any possibilities he may seem to offer them to accomplish their worldly ends rather than have him deliver them from the darkness of selfishness that dwells in their souls. The Palm-Sunday tragedy was repeated again last week when on Saturday evening, March 26, Mr. Truman called the nation to liberal giving to the cause of relief on the three-network hook-up presenting "One Great Hour." There was no question about the rightness of this message and the greatness of the need to which he called the nation's attention. But on Tuesday morning we read in our papers that Mr. Truman had assigned budget experts to work on a big program of supplying arms to western Europe—a program that is expected to be submitted to congress as a follow-up of the North Atlantic defense treaty. As much as one and one-half billion dollars may be asked to arm treaty nations! Will the churches once more permit themselves to become mere tools in the hands of governments that are blindly leading their peoples to desstruction? Yes, we must respond to the deep physical needs of the world; but we must also lift up our voices and if need be our lives against the utter hypocrisy that would walk around with charity in one hand and atomic bombs in the other.—JJE

THE GREAT HERESY of the Twentieth Century is that we have turned a battle cry into a slumber song. The great message that has come down the centuries from the hill of Calvary calls the children of God to a death-struggle with sin in all its forms. But how many of our songs, sermons, and prayers are filled with the implications that the struggle ends when we have accepted Christ! Such a message simply does not square with the Scriptures. While it is true that the blood that was shed for us at Calvary cleanses us and makes us new men, it does not follow that when we are converted all we need to do is sit back and sing about heaven. That is misunderstanding Calvary completely. Faith in the finished work of Christ is, alone, sufficient to make us a member of the body of Christ; but having become a member of that body we sense "the fellowship of his suffering" in that the work is not finished in the lives of thousands who have not believed. With all the resources of a consecrated life, prayer, faith, love, courageous Christian living and suffering, and even dying for Christ we are to batter down with the Gospel the wall of sin that hinders precious souls from reaching Chirst.—JJE

THE MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL has a two-fold task. In standing between God and the people he has the task of the priest when he speaks to God in behalf of the people as, for example, in prayer. But he also has the task of the prophet when he speaks to the people in behalf of God; thus when he preaches the Word he is performing his prophetic task. It is in connection with the prophetic aspect of the ministry that there is complete disrespect for the minister in our time. When a congregation extends a call to a man who himself has felt the call of God, then the people of that congregation is saying in essence to that man, "We believe that God can use you in a unique way to speak to our needs." The minister consequently feels a sense of freedom to speak that which is in his heart as given to him of God. When he speaks for God, he himself as well as his congregation stand under the judgment of God. The minister is not speaking his own words; he is God's ambassador among His people. Yet how often in the minds of the people is the situation reversed! It is the minister who stands under judgment of the people. If he doesn't preach just exactly the way they think he should preach, they don't listen any further; or, they may imagine to whom his sermon is directed that morning. They don't come with a desire to see their life under the holy light of the Gospel of Jesus Christ that will reveal every stain of sin. It is reasonably certain to assume also that they have not come with a prayer on their lips for their pastor and for themselves that they may have eyes to see their sin. The hands of the minister are tied, his enthusiasm for the Gospel is made to wane, when he senses the people come to judge rather than be judged of God even as Jesus himself could do no mighty works in his home village because there was so little faith.

IN THE TRIAL OF LARA GARA it came out that his counsel consisted of the words, "Don't let them coerce you into changing your mind." On the strength of these words, such as any Christian might utter to any man anywhere and at any time who was attempting to follow the guidance of conscience, Gara was convicted for counselling a non-registrant.

Why this obscure young instructor should have been chosen as the first to be tried under this section of the draft law it is hard to say; several hundred prominent members of A. J. Muste's "Peacemakers" have been challenging the government for many weeks past to arrest and try them for avowed infractions.

Hunger Removed

The Pangs of Spiritual Starvation Strike

by William Keeney

This is a year of transition. Time, the currency reform, Marshall-Plan Aid and the will of the people are creating a more normal economy in Germany. Almost gone are the exciting and dramatic days of the soup line, the mass, indiscriminate feeding and clothing of all people. Very seldom do you see a person in rags, or signs of hunger in the form of pitting oedema. Every town has the tree waving from the top of newly constructed buildings. Germany is acquiring the "new look." Going, but not entirely gone, are some of the relief agencies such as the national Red Cross groups: The British, the Swiss Red Cross.

The Shift from Physical to Spiritual Need

But the need is not gone. Some of the relief agencies are staying and will need to stay for some time. The need is shifting from that of the purely physical need to a more spiritual need. The governmental and secular organizations are leaving, but the religious organizations see a large job yet to be done. This job is perhaps the more important one. The shift is from the emergency relief situation to the task of rehabilitation. The people are no longer starving physically. But as the pains of hunger are removed, the pangs of spiritual starvation strike deeper. The people realize more and more the spiritual bankruptcy that 15 years (1933-1948) have left them. Only the old and the very young have not spent their formative years under a regimented social, political and economic order. Leadership that is creative, democratic and Christian is badly needed.

Needed, Creatively Christian Leadership

This is particularly true for the young people. Inner discipline was not developed during the days of the Hitler Jugend. The young people can still respond to a strong hand, and an outward program of regimentation. They find it more difficult to restrain themselves when allowed freedom and responsibility in conducting their own affairs or utilizing opportunities afforded them. We see this in our library and in our Saturday game-evenings. Elizabeth P. Lam reported more fully on this in the Christian Century for Dec. 22, 1948, in an article on "German Youth to America."

Shift in Kind of Material Aid

What does this mean for the Mennonite Central Committee, and particularly for the Mennonite people? It means that we will need to plan for a long-range program. We will need to plan for continued giving, and perhaps a giving that will require a greater sacrifice. The need is not just for our surplus. Heretofore, the need was so great and so general that almost anything was needed and could be used. The present situation requires more specific items—those items not produced on the German economy, or so scarce as to make them prohibitive to many of the people. It will also mean that we will have to carry on more specific projects, such as community centers, service to students, and voluntary service programs. These require particular items, some of which are not produced by Mennonites and will have to be purchased. This will mean a greater money contribution, while the material contributions are diverted to areas of the world where the relief situation is more of an acute, emergency condition such as in Palestine, Greece, or the Far East.

Needed—Best Personnel and Longer Service

These types of projects will also require a more specific type of personnel. We will have to give not only our good people, but also the best of our trained people. The need will be for people with training in such areas as the general field of social work, recreation, youth work, religious education, perhaps someone who can organize cooperatives, etc. It will also mean that some of those now on the field will need to feel the call to remain for longer periods of service. They will be needed because they understand the people, the situation out of which they have come, their past, present and future needs; and, they know the language.

The Mennonites have been expressing their love largely through a material-aid program. It will also need to be expressed in a more lasting and in a more basic program of spiritual aid. This program is not envisioned by the governmental and secular relief organizations. It places a greater burden of responsibility on those religious organizations who strive to meet the total needs of the individual and the society in which he lives. We profess to be this type of an organization. We have said that we are different from some of the organizations now withdrawing. Some people may question this. The challenge of today will demand a clear answer from us. The burden of proof to the German people will be carried in this continuing program.

A Missionary's Day

Bazaar Preaching in India

by Edward Burkhalter

"Everybody in?"

"Yes, Sahib," comes back the answer, and the jeep gives a few extra grunts as we bump over the plowed rice field from camp to the main road. As we look backward to check that the bamboo roof of the trailer will clear the over-hanging branches we see the cheerful faces of evangelists, Bible women and Bible School students—all eager to sing and tell the gospel to those attending the weekly bazaar at Bhaisma. This bazaar, the largest open-air market in the vicinity, attracts hundreds of people, so it is a wonderful opportunity to preach the gospel

Eight Miles in 90 Minutes!

The comparative smooth sailing on the main road comes to an abrupt end as we turn off to a distinctly 3rd-rate road. The jeep whines and lurches as it twists back and forth, trying to avoid the deep ruts cut by the heavy, lumbering Indian carts. Oh! Oh! What's this? A washout that has not been repaired since the rains. Two young men quickly jump out with hoe and crowbar in hand to cut down the high places and fill in the holes. But now— the road seems to end! Oh, there it goes through the rice fields again! That means that more mares (low walls surrounding rice fields) must be cut to make a path for the jeep. But we plug steadly along toward our last hurdle, an unbridged stream. We put the jeep into four-wheel drive and low-low gear. It starts out with a purr of great determination; at the half-way mark gives out an uncertain sputter; and shakes like a dog after a swim as its wheels catch hold of the firm ground on the other side. After covering eight miles in an hour and a half, we arrive at Bhaisma.

The Jeep and Mary Kay's Blonde Hair

One "hears" the bazaar even before he sees much of it, for all 1,500 people are actively engaged in selling their products and buying up another week's supply of food and necessities. As we skirt the edge of the bazaar, the very presence of the jeep—and Mary Kay's blonde hair—attracts a crowd. We quickly set up our portable loudspeaking system, as people press toward us, against the mission out-station fence bordering the bazaar.

Facing Eternity Unprepared

To the satisfaction of the people, the group of evangelistic workers begin singing a gospel bhujun with all its repetitions and oriental tune. As the music goes out over the amplifier, more people turn aside from their buying to see what is happening. The native evangelist leads in prayer and the program is underway. Still more inquisitive faces turn toward the speaker. They are interesting faces—faces of bright, young boys and girls, with life before them; faces of dissatisfied men and women, tired of their lives of sin, superstition and fear; faces wrinkled with age, facing eternity unprepared.

Through the Crowded Lines of Shops

The program continues with a testimony of a young cleansed leper who praises God for salvation as well as His healing grace. There are special Scripture verses given by the various Bible School students. There are solos, group songs, and messages showing the true way of salvation. After the program, the group goes through the crowded lines of shops in the bazaar, talking to individuals and selling gospels, New Testaments, and song books. These are sold cheap enough that even the smallest child can buy something. After a short while the group reassembles to give another program before the sea of human faces.

Another bazaar day has passed and we return to camp, confident in the assurance that, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

"A crowd gathers as we pull up in the jeep." Mary Kay and Mrs. Burkhalter are on the right.

Evangelism

The Universal Christian Responsibility

by Wilmer Shelly

The word "evangel" is a noble word, as are the words formed from it, viz: evangelist, evangelical, evangelism and evangelize. In its fullest sense it expresses the assigned work of the church which is to tell the good news of the Gospel. The term has been neglected in some areas and abused in others. We need to dissociate the practices of certain men from the true meaning of the term evangelism. If we refuse to be evangelistic we will cease being bearers of the good news, and we will muffle the passion that must be in the heart of a disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ.

A Christian has something to tell to others. The man who was blind and received his sight made the very positive statement, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." When we come into the light from spiritual darkness we should want to tell it with equal fervor.

> The local church, under the leadership of the pastor, can prepare its own evangelistic program instead of transferring this responsibility to others. The line of least resistance is the bringing in of the professional evangelist. We should rather commend inviting an experienced pastor to bring a series of messages for spiritual refreshing and through a program of lay evangelism develop a new evangelical mood in our churches.

Jesus Commanded It

Evangelism is the method employed by Jesus and His followers from the very beginning. Jesus called Philip, and Philip found Nathaniel. Andrew heard John the Baptist declare, "Behold the Lamb of God." Soon we read that "he first findeth his own brother Simon and saith unto him, 'We have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ,' and he brought him to Jesus." Evangelism is but the carrying out of the great commission of our Lord given to His Church (Mark 16:15). This simply means to go into all the world and evangelize the whole creation, and making disciples of all men.

Lay evangelism offers boundless opportunities to do exactly the task Christ assigned to us. This means the training and sending out of the men and women of the church to contact and reach and win for Christ those who have not confessed Him. This is an undeveloped method and resource. Jesus adopted it and commended it when He sent out the seventy, two by two. The Apostle Paul included it when he wrote (Eph. 4:11-12) "and he gave some . . . evangelists . . . for the work of the ministry, . . . "

Lay, and thus personal, evangelism is the personal effort of a Christian to win an unsaved person to accept and follow Christ. The summit of Christian joy is the knowledge that one has been used of God to lead a soul to Jesus Christ. Every layman in every church can feel under full authority to go to friend, neighbor and stranger to tell very simply and humbly the story of the Gospel of Jesus Christ which is the power of God unto salvation.

The Church Employs It

The local church, under the leadership of the pastor, can prepare its own evangelistic program instead of transferring this responsibility to others. The line of least resistance is the bringing in of the professional evangelist. We should rather commend inviting an experienced pastor to bring a series of messages for spiritual refreshing and through a program of lay evangelism develop a new evangelical mood in our churches.

In 1941 the Evangelism Committee of the Home Mission Board of our General Conference published a booklet entitled "Other Sheep I Have." The committee had circulated a questionnaire and reported its findings and observations. One observation was that "too many churches rely on special services for evangelism and do not utilize lay members to carry on a year-round program of evangelism." This same booklet listed six possible methods of evangelism: catechism classes, mass meetings, altar calls, decision cards, street meetings, and personal evangelism.

Steps in Preparation

The lay evangelist will need some preparation. (1) He should develop a personal spiritual life through prayer, the study of the Scriptures, and regular worship; (2) He should develop a desire to do this Christ-commanded work. The best way to learn is to start. Proficiency comes by experience; (3) Commit to memory some appropriate scripture verses such as John 1:12,, 3:16, Acts 4:12, 16:31, Romans 3:12 14: 12, or II Corinthians 6;2.

Overcoming Difficulties

There are some difficulties and objections. (1) Some think they are not good enough. If witnessing needed to wait for the perfect witnesser none would be good enough; (2) Some feel too timid, and they are sincere about this. This will usually be overcome after several visitations. Going two by two will usually be the answer to this problem; (3) Some feel that such personal work is for the pastor. It is his responsibility, not theirs. Consider Christ's command, and consider the practice of the early church. The pastor's physical and nervous strength have limitations, as well as the time available for this manifold duties; (4) There is also the fear of failure The possibility of failure is a fact in any endeavor but we nevertheless attempt many things in the secular world. The possibility of failure is usually a challenge to spur us on. If the desire is present, we will go and plant and water and leave it to God to give the increase. The best way to overcome the hindrances for lay evangelism

Foreign Mission Board Reorganizes

Last summer it was decided that the Board should reorganize and a committee was appointed for that purpose. The Committee gave its report at the annual meeting. The Executive Committee consists of the chairman, Rev. A. E. Kreider; recording secretary, Rev. D. J. Unruh; and treasurer, Rev. Sam J. Goering. Members of the Personnel Committee are Rev. P. A. Wedel and Dr. S. F. Pannabecker. The Promotion Committee consists of Rev. J. J. Thiessen and Rev. D. J. Unruh. These committees are to assist the executive secretary and the Board members will share in responsibilities. The executive secretary is an ex-officio member of each committee. All correspondence is to go through the hands of the executive secretary unless otherwise arranged for.

The Board passed a motion of appreciation to the Rev. Walter H. Dyck who served faithfully as Treasurer, and another motion of thanks to Mrs. Howard G. Nyce for typing reports.

The Budget Set Forth

The Board accepted the following budget.

American Indians	$ 32,118.90
China	51,351.36
South America	18,549.63
India	120,974.10
Congo	17,242.10
Administrative Expenses	7,500.00
Pensions	3,958.00
Pension Premiums	3,500.00
Unassigned	4,805.91
Total	$260,000.00

The Budget Explained

The above includes the salaries for each station a well as the field budget. At present our largest work and greatest expense is for India where we have most of the missionaries in one field. The administrative expenses include traveling for furloughed missionaries and other home expenses. The money for pensions is used to pay the pensions of retired missionaries and the money for pension premiums is used to pay the Board's share of the premiums of missionaries under the Pension Plan adopted by the General Conference. Money unassigned is used for emergencies and other purposes that may arise during the year. The budget has been cut just as much as possible and unless the money is obtained, the mission cause must suffer.

Promoting Missions

The Promotion Committee was given the task of selecting a date for the annual Mission Sunday and prepare or recommend suitable literature to be sent to all the churches prior to Mission Sunday.

The Board voted to give $100.00 to the Literature Committee of the Women's Missionary Association.

The Board also discussed the Missionary Handbook. These are out of print and are to be re-written and prepared for the next session of the General Conference. In reference to this booklet the following motion was made:

"MOVED That the executive secretary request a statement, within three months, from each Board member and from each mission field or other interested parties, giving suggestions for revision of the Missionary Handbook and that these be co-ordinated and definite plans for a new Handbook presented to the summer meeting with the aim that the book be ready for presentation by the time of the General Conference, 1950."

The Board voted to inform the China missionaries that if they are still of the opinion that they would like to move to Kweiyang and surrounding territory, it is agreeable to the Board.

The Board made a motion requesting the secretary to arrange for at least one missionary to attend the Missionary Conference at Grace Bible Institute the latter part of March as requested.—Howard G. Nyce, Executive Secretary is to develop the gift by using it. "Stir up the gift of God which is in thee" II Tim. 1:6.

Some Suggested Techniques

An actual procedure for the lay evangelist could be the use of the Gospel of John. Read to the person interviewed from the third chapter the account of the conference between Jesus and Nicodemus. Then verses 14, 15, and 16 can be read as well as verse 36. Reference can then be made to 5:24 and other previously selected verses. Remember the method of Philip the evangelist with the Ethiopian. Most people cannot understand what they read except some man guide them. The lay evangelist may be that man. The Gospel of John is peculiarly adaptable for personal work.

Some techniques can be suggested: (1) Make known immediately the purpose of your call letting the insurance agent be an example for getting to the point; (2) State your mission positively, without apology or evidence of weakness; (3) Pray about your interview, even while it is in progress. (4) Be respectful and sympathetic, you are not a hawk pouncing on a victim; (5) Do not give up to easily. Be sure to plant the seed, even if you must hoe to get some loose soil; (6) Endeavor to get the prospect to speak. Let your visit be a conversation, not a sermon; (7) Avoid argumentation; (8) Do not get people to merely join the church, rather lead them to Christ as Saviour; (9) Lean on the Lord and the Holy Spirit It shall be given you what to speak; (10) Jesus sent out the seventy. Going in pairs gives encouragement; (11) A glib tongue is not as important as a warm heart and a desire to be helpful; (12) Be confident God is ready to do great things through you; (13) Leave some printed matter, a New Testament, a single Gospel or a tract.

Hidden Resources

Finally prayer is a power in lay evangelism.

Home Missions

To Those without Means or Privilege

by Samuel Ummel

". . . . And the Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved" Acts 2:47.

Every community has its unchurched people. Some, because of indifference, would not want to live where there are no churches, yet do little or nothing to support the cause. Then there are those who are void of understanding as to what the Church is and stands for, even though Jesus spoke clearly when he said, "I will build my Church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Still there are some who are not in the Church because they have not the means nor the privilege of sharing with God the rich blessings of Christ Jesus through the Church.

Life Richer because Someone Cared

A mother who lives in one of the homes shown, said it made life so much more worth while when they knew someone cared for them and that she would be satisfied only when she with her six children and their father would all be safe within the Church.

Words alone not Sufficient

A little girl, six years of age, when asked if she would come to Sunday school, looked at us for a moment, through eyes that were circled with sadness, then replied, "We go to the poor people's church," meaning the Salvation Army. It seemed hard to believe that here was a little child with no fault of her own, having already classified herself as one not privileged as others she knew. There are hundreds of such unhappy children in our cities, but what a joy it is to tell them that God is no respecter of persons, and that He loves all with that love in which He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. It is not always easy to convince children of this great truth and words alone are not sufficient. The manner of service spoken of by John was, "My little children, love not in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and truth." This, we feel, is the spirit and the mind of our people as they bend to the task of Home Mission work, and we know it to be the mind and spirit of those who are united with us in this great work in Peoria.

"A little girl, six years of age, when asked if she would come to Sunday school, looked at us for a moment, through eyes that were circled with sadness, then replied, "We go to the poor people's church," meaning the Salvation Army. It seemed hard to believe that here was a little child with no fault of her own, having already classified herself as one not privileged as others she knew."

At Least . . . an Opportunity

It is true we may not be able to save all, we do know God is saving some, but that does not mean that everyone shall not at least have an opportunity to be saved. "Go," said the Master, in faith believing that we would, "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. He that believeth not shall be damned."

God still is saving men today in every walk of life, but the channel is one—"The Church."

But having chosen this case, the government should be made to stand on it. It is so weak a case that it should be made to stand on it. It is so weak a case should be appealed, if necessary, right up to the Supreme Court.—The Christian Century.

Life in the Chaco

by A. W. Friesen

Nine months ago we left the city of New York for Paraguay, the land where thousands of our brothers and sisters have found a home in the last nineteen years.

At present we are located in the midst of the new settlement about twenty miles south of Philadelphia, the center of the Fernheim or Old Settlement. Two years ago in February the first settlers, composed mostly of the Volendam group, settled here. Neuhalbstadt is about centrally located in the new settlement. Here we have a branch of the co-operative store. Other industries will be established here in the near future.

A small hospital has also been built in this village. To date it has been used mainly for maternity cases and minor treatment. An epidemic of sore eyes is sweeping the territory, especially among the children. It is caused, no doubt, by the many small flies which afflict the children during the few hours in the morning and evening.

Land of Pestilence and Perenniel Harvest

In some villages we find that the grasshoppers have destroyed everything several times, but the people are always replanting again. The planting season began in October and will continue into February if the rains set in. It is strange to see a field of kafir with full ears and another field where the same is still planted. We had our first watermelon on Christmas day and now they are our chief item on the menu. Many of them are still being planted.

Last week we had the sight of our lifetime. A swarm of grasshoppers flew over our village for about two hours at a speed of about twenty miles per hour. It appeared like a long, low, floating cloud. As far as we know they did not land on any of the villages.

Another pest which is abundant this year are the caterpillars. Most cotton-fields that were spared from the grasshoppers fell victim to these insects. If enough poison were available they could be kept under control.

Most of the settlers are eating of the first of the land though they have been on it only three months, but still they have planted a small garden. This may sound very encouraging and optimistic, but these people are far from supporting themselves as yet. If it was not for the help coming from the United States and Canada, starvation would be prevalent. Everyone was so glad when the clothing was distributed just before Christmas. The children were especially pleased to receive school bags and the many other gifts included in these packages.

Food Situation Still Serious

The food situation is still serious here in the new settlement. Flour is rationed to eight kil (about sixteen pounds) per person per month. For many families that is not enough. We meet many who tell us that they are out of flour before the month is over. This was especially the case before there were any garden vegetables such as beans and watermelons. Other vegetables will be planted in March, but will still be in the experimental stage.

On the Spiritual Side

We have started a catechism class which is held in several villages because of the transportation problem. Other ministers will also assist in this instruction. Baptismal services will be held in a few months for the thirty who have enrolled in the class.

We have so many requests and invitations, especially for Sundays, that we cannot do justice to all. On Sunday morning you will find us up around 4 or 5 o'clock getting things ready to go out to a distant village. A ride in an ox- or horse-wagon for 3-5 hours generally brings us to our destination. While visiting in the old settlement, we stayed at the various places for the nights, but in the new settlement this is out of the question in most instances.

We had the privilege of having Rev. and Mrs. Ernest Harder with us for a service. They are still located at Asuncion. They report that the group there is growing. Recently Rev. Jacob Isaac gave his report of the Mennonite World Conference. M. C. C. workers, Menno Klassen and Mr. Enns from Philadelphia, also Rev. Peters from British Columbia, who is teaching in the Bible school, visited us for a short time.

May God bless all efforts that are made to prosper His kingdom. May this incomplete report also serve as an answer to the many friends who sent us Christmas greetings and letters. We appreciated them all. Letters via air mail reach us in about three weeks. (Letter dated Jan. 24)

OFFICIAL CONFERENCE ANNOUNCEMENT

Some time ago we made a request for funds for the Charity Fund of the Western District Conference. To date there has been very little response. Now the treasurer informs me that he has made a bank loan which bears 10 per cent interest, to make last month's payment for some very needy cases. Unless the churches or individuals make contributions soon the committee will be compelled to withdraw help from these needy ones, and thus they will become government cases. We therefore make this special request that you send contributions to Rev. Waldo Kaufman, Hydro, Oklahoma.—H. P. Fast Chairman, Charity Committee.

First Mennonite Family Visaed

Witness Through Children's Home

Ruth Hilty Returns to Europe

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA.—To date only about 10,000 displaced persons have entered the United States under the U.S. DP law. None of these have been Mennonites. Several weeks ago the State Department sent word to Europe giving assurance that the Mennonites' unwillingness to bear arms should not make them ineligible for U. S. immigration.

We have now received word by cable that the first Mennonite family, one of the fourteen that have been at the IRO camp for several months, has been visased. Five other families are to appear before the consul this week.

Service Through Children's Homes

The MCC workers in the Weiler and Nancy children's homes in France find great opportunity to be of service in providing for the physical, moral, and spiritual development of the children in their care. Each child presents an individual opportunity. How much of this experience they will remember as they leave the home, cannot be known; but some lasting impressions are made, as is seen from a letter which one mother wrote after her daughter had returned from the home. "Never will I know how to thank you enough for all the good you have done for my little girl. I get so much pleasure in seeing her as she is now. In the evening before going to sleep and in the morning too, she sings the songs she learned at your home. She also thanks God for having let her stay with you where she was so happy, and she asks God to bless you."

Contacts with parents and friends of the children, with local Mennonites and with the community also afford opportunity for an outreaching witness. This is one of the continuing types of relief work which is designed to make a long-range rehabilitation contribution, in contrast to the emergency method of relief which was used in years past and which is not as necessary now in a number of European countries.

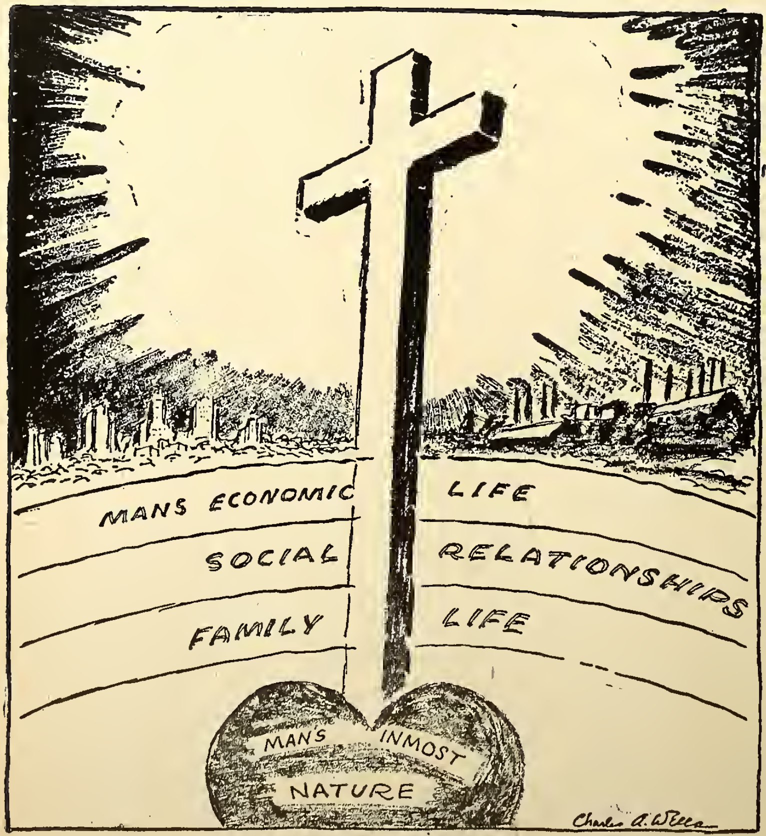
Relief Worker Personnel

Viola Duerksen returned from Paraguay March 14. Ivan Moon returned from the Philippines, reporting to Akron March 19. Atlee Beechy and family returned from Europe March 23. Dale Nebel, recently returned from China is scheduled to report at Akron March 26.

James Good of Nampa, Idaho, and Ruth Hilty of Pandora, Ohio, sailed March 23 for Germany, the latter for a second term of service. John Howard Yoder of Wooster, Ohio, sailed for France March 23. Mary Friesen of Yarrow, British Columbia, left March 25 for Paraguay.

Peace Booklet Still Available

A fourth printing of the booklet Before You Decide will soon be off the press. Quantities of this booklet will be available for Peace Institutes or youth conferences during the spring and summer. Price, 20c per single copy, 15c each in lots of 12 or more. Order from the Peace Section, MCC, Akron, Pennsylvania.



IT TOUCHES ALL LEVELS

By Charles A. Wells

The teachings of Christ have shown the amazing quality of not only fitting into the needs of every generation with modern freshness but in also touching all levels of life in each era. If we ever needed indisputable evidence of the divine nature of Christ, here it is—overwhelming,—for no other pattern of thought or system of teaching has matched this increditable record for scope and application. So many other religions have emphasized one portion of man's nature and need—but ignored the other areas of human experience, until in a few generations the teachings of that prophet have either been abandoned entirely or disintegrated into some remote system of theology and idolatry. But with each new generation the teachings of Christ challenge men in every area of their lives. For men cannot just be Christian in one department of their living. The dominion of Christ is exacting. He will command all of your life—or none of it.

Bluffton 'on the Air' Every Sunday

A half-hour broadcast is given by the College each Sunday afternoon at 1:30 over station WIMA of Lima. The first program was given by the Men's Glee Club and the second by the Gospel Teams.

The public speaking department is presenting a series of one-act plays March 29, April 5, and April 12. The plays are "Minnie Field," "Sparkin." "Riders to the sea." "To Crooks and a Lady," "Trifles," and "The Terrible Meek." Players from Ohio Northern University presented a portion of the play, "The Rock," at a chapel program. The College men's quartet will give a chapel program at Northern in a return engagement.

A meeting of alumni and friends of Bluffton College living in Indiana was held at the Fort Wayne YMCA Friday evening, March 25. The Men's Quartet of the College furnished music and Pres. Ramseyer gave a report of College activities and showed European pictures.

Pres. Ramseyer attended a meeting of representatives of all General Conference schools in Chicago, March 29. He also attended the North Central Association meetings, also held in Chicago.

The Men's and Women's Gospel Teams cooperated in a program at the Berne, Ind., Mennonite Church Sunday evening, March 20.

Strong Voluntary Service Interest at Bethel

Fifty-six Bethel College students attended the voluntary service meeting held under the direction of Bertha Fast and Eldo Neufeld. Approximately one-half of the group indicated their interest in voluntary services for this coming summer in the MCC or in General Conference projects.

European students from Bethel College, accompanied by Dr. J. Winfield Fretz, attended the conference of exchange students attending Mennonite and Affiliated colleges at Bluffton College, April 1, -3. The Bethel representatives were: Helga Kemnitzer, Wolfgang Fieguth, Gustav Reimer, and Heinold Fast, Germany; Erna Franken, Mary Schultz, Teatske van der Zypp, and Anna Homan, Holland; Gustavo Tron, Italy; and Augustine Coma, France.

Pres. Ed. G. Kaufman attended four conferences in the Chicago and Bluffton, Ohio area—the inter-school committee meeting of the Board of Education of the General Conference, the North Central Association session in Chicago, the exchange-student conference, and the meeting of the presidents of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges in Bluffton.

Dr. R. C. Kauffman was present at various meetings the latter part of March—conference on general education at the University of Minnesota, a peace institute at Bluffton College, and the North Central association meeting in Chicago.

The Bethel College Men's Octet presented its first home concert, Sunday afternoon, March 27, in the College chapel. The octet has presented 40 concerts in churches and schools in Kansas and Oklahoma communities.

The senior class play, "The Servant in the House" by Charles Rann Kennedy is to be given on May 6 and 7.

"The Seven Last Words of Christ" by DuBois will be presented by the Bethel College Choir under the direction Prof. Walter H. Hohmann, Sunday, April 10, at 3 p. m., Memorial Hall. This is the 27th annual rendition of the oratorio.

School Presidents Gather at Seminary

On Tuesday, March 29, seven presidents of General Conference institutions of higher education met here at the Seminary. Those present will include: E. G. Kaufman, Bethel College; L. L. Ramseyer, Bluffton College; E. J. Miller, Freeman Jr. College; K. G. Toews, Rosthern Jr. College; Paul Schaefer, Mennonite Collegiate Institute; Arnold Regier, Canadian Bible College; S. F. Pannabecker, Mennonite Biblical Seminary. Most of these men will stay over for another three days for the sessions of the North Central Association convening at the Congress Hotel.

A mission program was presented at the Brighton Mennonite Mission on Sunday, March 27, by a group composed of Grace Liu, Erna Friesen, Frieda Claassen, Paul Boschman, and Rudolph Martens.

Classes were dismissed Thursday forenoon, March 24, in order to give full time to the consideration of Christian vocations. Among the speakers was Don. E. Smucker who spoke on the challenge of church vocations.

Dr. Franklin H. Littell addressed chapel this week. He declared that it is high time American Protestantism makes more out of the Christian fellowship. He referred to the loneliness and isolation of the 20,000 students attending the University of Michigan, on whose staff he serves. With this kind of impersonality in the world it is extremely important for the church to provide the equivalent of the prayer meeting, where a small group of believers draw nigh for four different things—individual and group prayer; study, which includes daily Bible study as well as a consideration of other great Christian books; a program of Christian action; and a program of Christian stewardship.

John Bartel, Shafter, led the opening service while Rev. W. Harley King of the Second Mennonite Church,, had charge of the dedicatory ceremony. Guest speaker was Rev. Myron D. Hilty, Winton, California. Reverend Rahn, chairman of the service, read a brief historical resume of the church prepared by the former pastor Rev. Christ Hege. The church choir and a bass sextet from the Second Church furnished special music. The evening services was in charge of the young people who invited the Clarion Quartet, Reedley, go give the program. This quartet also sang at the other services.

The new Sunday school addition is 18 by 40 feet and is connected to the church sanctuary by removable doors which can be opened and thereby double the seating capacity of the church. The entire interior of the church has been remodeled and the arrangement reversed with a new vestibule added so as to make a side entrance to the church. The total cost of the building program amounted to about $6,500, not including the labor donated by members of the congregation.

Into the Beyond

MRS. JOHN P. SCHROEDER, a member of the Zion Mennonite Church in Donnellson, Iowa passed away March 6, 1949, at 78 years of age.

MRS. BENJAMIN EWERT, of the Bethel Mission Church, Winnipeg, Manitoba, died March 8, at 76 years. Services were in charge of Rev. H. Wall and Rev. I. I. Friesen, Winnipeg.

DAVID JANTZEN, son of Henry and Barbara Jantzen, Beatrice, Nebraska, was born August 9, 1875, died March 15, 1949.

DANIEL SCHMUCKER, Nappanee, Indiana a member of the First Mennonite Church, was born May 9, 1980, and died March, 1949.

Among the saints of God are invalids and shut-ins and the timid who cannot go out but who can be much in prayer. A pastor visited a shut-in member of his church and remarked, "I cannot account for certain people who are applying for church membership." He mentioned the names and then the shut-in said, "I cannot visit people, and so I laid these people before the Lord in prayer and He saved them and sent them."

Europe and You

What Voluntary Service in Europe Means

by Willard S. Krabill, Goshen, Indiana

On my desk before me lie eleven unanswered letters from Ruth, Christian, Wilfried, Nico, Elfrieda, Kathleen and five others. It is already the fourth time I have heard from some of them since we lived, worked, and sang together for four short weeks in Hamburg, Germany. It was Wilfried who acted as my personal host and made me feel so much at home in the city, and who greatly appreciated the chance to use my camera occasionally. Ruth was one of the German girls who helped to carry materials to the barracks our group was erecting, and her familiar smile was a part of every day. Christian is now studying medicine, and was the life of every work day. Elfrieda could speak no English, yet she became one of the closest friends of many in the unit. Nico left our camp early to return to Holland where he was drafted into a Dutch "conscientious objector" camp. Kathleen, who was from England, had never met Mennonites before, but is expressing her deep appreciation for the rich experience she shared by volunteering for another voluntary service project in Germany this spring. These friends, and the many others I met while serving only those few weeks in M.C.C. European Voluntary Service, will be treasured all my life. My circle of friends has become international in character, and one always discovers that the bonds of international Christian friendship surmounts all national differences and prejudices.

Fifty voluntary service workers from America and various European countries gathered at Hamburg, Germany, last summer. They had the experience of becoming intimately acquainted through work, workshop, and by living together. Their project was to construct a barracks which is now used as a church institution for delinquent children.

The Nazi Germany, the youth who today are your age and mine, had very little contact with the rest of the world. For the ten years or more previous to the end of the war they lived in a state bereft of a free press, and in isolation from other national groups. The end of the war shattered and smashed into disillusion their whole outlook on life, leaving a tremendous vacuum in the minds of German youth. Thus it is that the fundamental craving of these young people is for fellowship, friendship, and understanding with the youth of other countries. This appeal is stated over and over again in their conversation, their periodicals and their letters They appreciate our gifts of food and clothing, but even more than this they want to understand and talk with you and me the young people of the church that has demonstrated its willingness to serve them "in the Name of Christ."

After a service with the Mennonite refugees in Gronau, each of us was escorted to his quarters by some of the refugees, all of them very anxious to meet other young people, especially their Mennonite friends from America. In a certain German school, one of the students, a former U-boat commander, took a long walk with me and expressed his great desire for companionship with young fellows from other countries. Our work project furnished an excellent avenue through which to foster understanding among the young people of the five nationalities represented. The reconstruction work we actually accomplished was significant and much appreciated, yet of far greater consequence are the friendship and understanding that were cultivated. In many ways it was apparent that the primary reason the European young people came to our unit was to become acquainted with their American friends.

The experience of living and working together was one which has not been forgotten by those who served. There was a keen hunger for Christian fellowship across man-made boundries.

There is a vacuum to be filled in Europe today. Those young people have an intense need for friendship, fellowship, and companionship with us. As we Mennonite young people respond to this need, may this be our rule-of-thumb: Christ first, others second, ourselves last. It is the universal spirit of Christ that gave meaning to our experience in Europe this past summer. And further, only by thinking more of the needs of others than of ourselves can our service in Europe be successful.

Of course, one cannot overlook the many great values one receives personally from such an adventure. Travel is an excellent education in itself, and one can never have a better opportunity to visit so much of interest from Mennonite history as in giving a period of service such as this. But as one looks back on a period of voluntary serivce it is not the travel itself that seems of most value— it is the service one has been able to render.

I've intended this article to be more than a one-sided report of the travels of our group of forty young American Mennonites, or a description of the various countries of Europe which we visited and learned to appreciate. I have intended it to be a challenge to all of us to respond to this primary need of our fellow young people in Europe for Christian fellowship and friendship. We can fulfill this need in European Voluntary Service. The need draws us, the door is open. Are we willing to participate in this life-enriching venture?

In Christ there is no East or West,
In Him no South or North,
But one great fellowship of love
Throughout the whole wide earth.

A District Organizd for Junior C. E.

by Verna M. Keiser

The Junior C. E. girls and boys of the Eastern District Conference Union have three outstanding events in a year.

Convention

The Junior C. E. Convention which was held in Lansdale June 5 had a morning session at 11 o'clock. This service consisted of a song service led by Mr. Stanley Fretz, Landsdale. Devotions also by the Lansdale Society Conference periods on the theme, "The Golden Rule" 1. "In the Home," by Miss Grace Moyer, 2. "In School," by Mrs William Sell, 3. "In Church," by Rev. A. H. Schultz, Quakertown. During the noon intermission games were played. In the afternoon session the main feature was the speaker Mrs. T. A. Lambie who is a missionary to Palestine.

Retreat

The next event is the Junior Retreat held at Menolan during July. Many of our Junior girls and boys attend. The children look forward to this event with joy and delight. I believe many decisions are made here to follow Christ and be a worker for Him.

Rally

On November 6 the Junior Christmas Rally was held at the First Church in Philadelphia. We had a very nice group of girls and boys attending. Two buses were chartered to take the children from Allentown, West Swamp, East Swamp, Deep Run and Lansdale. The main part of the program was a Christmas message by Miss McFarland from Philadelphia. The children brought Christmas gifts for the Indian girls and boys at our Busby mission station in Montana. We were also privileged to have slides from Rev. Alfred Habegger to show to the children. These slides were of the Busby mission station. This proved to be very interesting especially since the gifts went to those girls and boys.

Announce Summer Service Units

The following are MCC service opportunities for the coming summer: (1) Boystown for Delinquents, Mt. Princeton Commonweal, Nathrop, Colorado; (2) MCC Headquarters, Akron, Pennsylvania; (3) Migrant work, Utica, New York; (4) Gulfport, Mississippi; (5) Cuauhtemoc Mexico; (6) Farnhurst State Hospital, Topeka, Kansas; (8) Skillman State Village for Epileptics, Skillman, N. J.; (9) Apple Creek State School, Apple Creek, Ohio; (10) Christian Student-in-Industry, Chicago, Illinois; (11) European Service Units; (12) Canadian Hospital units at London, Ontario, (13) and Brandon, Manitoba, and possibly also in Saskatchewan and British Columbia. For further information write to the Voluntary Service office, Akron, Pennsylvania, or to the representative in Canada, David Schroeder, 116 Furby, Winnipeg, Manitoba.

The Dutch Society of Mennonite Youth

by Adriaan Zwartendijk, Aalsmeer, Holland

The Doopsgezinde Jongerenbond is the organization of the Dutch Mennonite young people. Many congregations have their youth clubs for persons 16 to 35 years of age, and these clubs are organized under the D.J.B.

The Organization

The D.J.B. has a managing committee of twelve members, a library, a monthly paper, an advisory board for plays, and an office for film and pictures. The congregations are divided into ten districts, each district having its own board from which one member is chosen for the managing committee. This makes it possible for better contact between the managing committee and the district boards.

Working under the D.J.B.

The work of the D.J.B. is to try to develop more contacts among the Mennonite youth of Holland, and to bring them nearer to God. It is necessary for us to feel the "ties that bind our hearts in Christian love."

The D.J.B. tries to bring the various districts nearer to God and to each other through the district and country conferences, summer camping, and by publishing a monthly paper.

District Conferences

The district conferences are held three or four times a year when the congregations of each district meet and one of them organizes the conferences. This year Aalsmeer is in charge of the last conference in District 8. They usually last two days, Saturday and Sunday.

The program on Saturday is preceded by a trip through Aalsmeer by foot. Following this a lecture on "Tolerance" is given after which discussion about the lecture is held. After supper is the presentation of a play, showing a part of the history of the Mennonite congregation of Aalsmeer. Sunday morning everyone goes to church and then to their hostesses for lunch. In the afternoon a boat trip is held which strengthens the contact among the people.

Some conferences are also held for the whole country when the leading young people of the congregations have meetings.

Summer Camps

I think this is one of the most worthwhile projects of the D.J.B. The two main camps are near lakes and have a lot of sailing facilities. Some camps are Samen Een (All One), Kraggenhuus, and others in the Broederschapshuis (Brotherhood Home) at Elspeet or even on farms. While at camp the boys and girls come nearer to God through the work, lectures, services, and hours of recreational activity.

Monthly Paper

The monthly paper consists of ten to twelve pages and contains religious articles, reports from conferences, news from the D.J.B., and letters from Dutch students studying in America. This paper also furnishes an opportunity for readers to tell their ideas and criticisms of the work of the D.J.B.

Activities of the D.J.B.

Religious plays in which the young people of the D.J.B. are the actors, are often given in the churches. A board that advises and furnishes material for the different groups is in charge of these.

A committee has been organized recently for making contacts with young people in other countries by correspondence, especially in America and Switzerland.

In this small village we have an excellent library which contains several hundred of the best books throughout the whole country. This way people in the small villages can read the best books without going to town or having to pay a lot of money for them.

I hope I have given you an impression of the activities of youth organization which tries to do the same as the youth organizations in America, to bring youth nearer to God, in Christ's name.

To Dutch youth, Elspeet means retreat. For Elspeet is the camp where Dutch Mennonite young people gather for conferences, camping, and retreats. Pictured here is the chapel at Elspeet. Dutch youth have two sailing camps, Samen Een and Kraggenhuus, as well as Elspeet.

A One Day Service Unit

by Katherine Wiens, N. Newton, Kansas

An idea forms, takes shape, then grows into an actuality. So it was with the one day Voluntary Service program now being held at the Clothing Center in North, Newton, Kansas, every Thursday.

Elmer Ediger, in charge of Voluntary Service under the M.C.C., felt that young people not able to go into Voluntary Service for any length of time, should still have a chance to experience a part in it. With this idea in mind and the help of J. Winfield Fretz, the M.C.C. headquarters contacted the Center and three colleges, Tabor, Hesston, and Bethel, who organized a committee to be in charge.

In making out the program it was decided that it should (1) render service; (2) be educational; (3) be inspirational; and (4) be recreational. It was to be service rendered in the way of helping the Clothing Center perform its various duties. It was to be educational for the young people involved and their method of working and gaining experience. In connection with this, people who actually had done relief work were to be obtained to show pictures and present them with a few facts. It was to be inspirational in connection with a worship program to be conducted each time. And it was to be recreational in that it was to constitute a trip away from home, meeting other young people.

With this four-fold program in mind, six different Mennonite groups were consulted and an agreement was made to alternately send in a group each week. Those now participating in this program are the Old Order Amish, Church of God In Christ Mennonite, Old Mennonite, Mennonite Brethren, Krimmer Mennonite Brethren, and the General Conference.

Each week there is now a group of five to twelve people working from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. The program always is in connection with the noon meal and lasts about two hours. Often they bring their lunches, and some eat up-town or in the College dining hall. Afterwards they hold their programs at the Clothing Center or in the faculty room of the College. Devotions are arranged by the leader of the group; and the foreign students have been quite popular as program speakers. They leave the group with a better understanding of what it really is like abroad.

The girls help pack the bales or mark new clothing as to size and then put on the label, "In the Name of Christ," for no article leaves the Center without that marking.

The fellows help in pressing bales and covering them with burlap, weighing, evaluating, and stenciling. Others help at the food warehouse up-town by processing food. This is used for the purpose of getting food ready to ship and includes looking for spoilage, packing cartons with cans of food, and then straping them.

Often as the group leaves, someone is heard remarking as to how much they enjoyed the day and they hope it will be possible to come back again.

The original idea grew into an actuality, and once more the Mennonite Young People found another way to serve our Lord through Voluntary Service.

Future Farmers Stress Spiritual Values

Religious and spiritual values are gaining new importance in the program of the Wisconsin chapter of the Future Farmers of America a group that includes thousands of young farmers enrolled in agricultural courses in small town high schools.

A newly adopted list of work projects for local groups includes as a major objective the "nuturing of the spiritual life of FFA members." This spiritual goal is given equal place with such occupational and economic interests as soil conservation, improvement of livestock breeds and farmstead beautification. According to the work program, local chapters will stress regular church attendance, encourage members to take part in church youth work and invoke God's blessing at chapter meals and meetings.

The Wisconsin chapter of the FFA was the first in the nation last year to elect a state chaplain.

Brethren Advise Concerning Draft

The Brethren Service Commission has issued a one-page sheet entitled "Am I a CO?" to give some guidance to young men who are facing the draft. In three sections, the first says "You are probably not a CO if—" for instance, you believe that America should be prepared to fight, that God may, in some circumstances, wish you to go to war, or if you are willing to work in a job directly connected with the war effort. You probably are a CO, the sheet goes on, if you believe that it is always against God's will to wage war, that this country should spend its energies making peace, with none left over for war preparations, or if you believe that a truly Christian America would not drop a bomb on Moscow, even in self-defense.

Then it adds, "To be a CO, you do not need—" to be perfect; to know exactly what you would do if your family were attacked by a maniac; to know exactly what Russia would do if America suddenly became pacifist; or to renounce the idea of a police force that uses some force to capture an individual criminal, but does not bomb thousands, or destroy cities. It advises, however, that these questions will almost certainly be asked, and should be thought through as far as possible.

Copies of the sheet, which is a bit more detailed than has been indicated here, may be obtained from the Brethren Service Commission, 22 South State Street, Elgin, Illinois. Reprinted from Fellowship.

Beyond Our Own

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON. — A Christian high school, sponsored by twenty Protestant churches in this community, will open here next fall.

WASHINGTON. — "Nothing less than a fatal blow" to Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish spiritual influence were the words used by Rev. Dr. Samuel M. Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, in testifying against a house bill designed to up postal rates on religious and other non-profit publications. He also stated that this increase in postal rates of second-class material would have a "crippling and disastrous" affect on religious and non-profit periodicals.

UNITED STATES.—A series of two Easter programs are being broadcasted over the ABC network on April 10 and 17 at 6:30 p.m. EST, on "The Greatest Story Ever Told."

ENGLAND.—The Church of England, at its spring Church Assembly February 21, voted to investigate desirable changes in its status on an "established" church. A danger of close state-church ties in a period of "totalitarian ascendency," was revealed in ecclesiastical suits the final court of appeal, which is appointed by the State, making it possible for the State to use the Church for its own purposes.

NEW YORK.—The vanguard of eighty German clergymen and lay religious workers, have arrived in the United States to spend three months studying American religious life, part of an effort by the American Military Government in Germany to "promote peace and constructive relations in the post-war world." First of the pastors sponsored by the Federal Council to arrive in this country was the Rev. Robert Geisendoerfer who will make a special study of the techniques of American national and local religious radio production.

GERMANY. — Martin Niemoeller, president of the constituting synod of the Evangelical Church in Hesse and Nassau, vigorously opposed the "Bishop" on himself, saying the present title of "Kirchenprasident" was more suitable "because it safeguarded the leadership of the church against misunderstanding in the clerical sense."

The synod finally rejected the title of "Bishop" by 116 votes to 20, and retained the title of "Kirchenprasident."

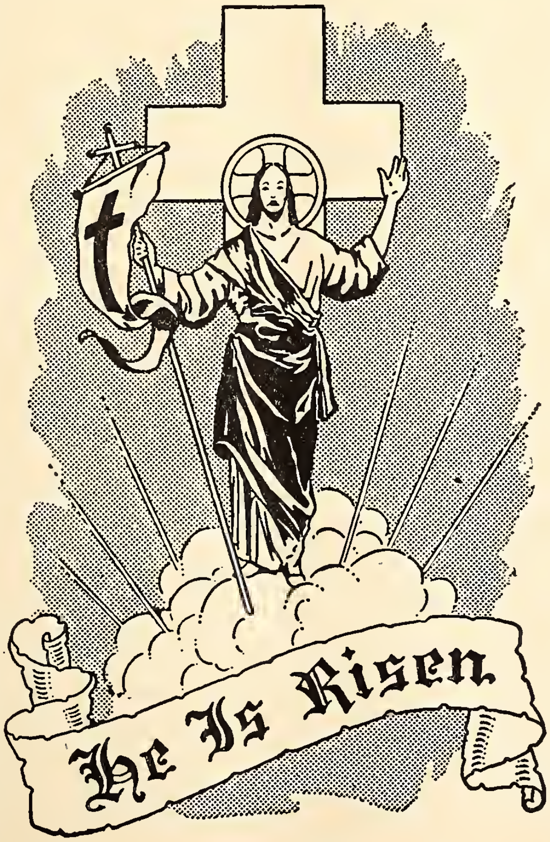
Easter--Demonstration Not Speculation

An Editorial

The indisputable supremacy of Christianity is built upon the fact of the resurrection of Christ as attested by the direct experience of the founders of the Christian Church and the vitality of the Church in history. Christianity is built not on a fanciful logical mode of explanation and speculation; it is built on the bed-rock of demonstration and experience!

The ministry, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ was not an experiment by God to see what would happen when the Son of Heaven made His abode among men. God was not engaging in research. Rather, God was standing before the classroom of all mankind, and carrying out an experiment for the express purpose of demonstration. At Calvary and Arimathea's tomb God was not speculating, he was demonstrating!

Like the science teacher who leads his classes into the secrets of the natural universe by means of his experiments so God in Christ was seeking to lead mankind into the knowledge of the secrets of the spiritual universe. What the students discover from the demonstration the professor had long known. What we see on Calvary and at the empty tomb had always been known by God—has always been going on in the heart of God, for Christ was slain "from the foundations of the world," for a rebelliously sinful humanity.



Demonstrations of the kind we have mentioned have as their express purpose to reveal to the uninitiated the underlying laws of the physical universe. Students are then to go into the laboratory and apply these laws in all the varying conditions presented by various experiments. In the midst of these varying conditions they dare not question the basic laws that have been demonstrated else their work will mean nothing; they will have no standard of measure. The Lord Jesus Christ as he lived, died, and rose again demonstrated that there is one and only one standard by which the varying conditions of life become meaningful—namely, by the immutable law and the gracious love of God. To live life on the basis of any other point of view is as absurd as to try to carry on an experiment in the chemical laboratory and deny the laws of the conservation of matter or energy or to try to work out a complicated arithmetic problem while at the same time denying that one and one is two.

Now Christians are people who have been in God's classroom. They are supposed to have seen these laws demonstrated. They are people who are living their lives, which are so full of unpredictable elements, in the light of meaningful laws—laws of which they are so sure that they confidently measure all of life in the light of them. What they have seen on cruel Golgotha and in the garden on Easter morn has led them to look at all of life from the viewpoint of God's immeasurable love for an unteachable mankind and the certain triumph of that love over the worst that Satan-inspired men could possibly conceive of doing. These are facts they no longer question, because their experience with the teacher of all mankind has convinced them.

It is precisely this certainty concerning God and the permanence of character that made Christianity such a contagious faith in those early days. Men were ready if necessary to be thrown to the lions for their faith because they knew that even a cruel death could not rob them of anything ultimately meaningful. Men and women would rather be burned at the stake than to give in to the whims of earthly rulers, for they knew that ultimate Reality had no room for people who compromise the laws of God and thus permit the very life blood of their spiritual existence to ebb away.

This certainty—radiant and contagious—must still characterize Christians. Christians should not act like those who have never known anything about these bedrock laws of the spiritual universe. In the midst of temptations they should not act as if they never knew that sin will always dig its own grave. In the midst of demands that are placed on them by an obviously godless society they should not act as if this society instead of God is determining their destiny. Living in a world full of every manner of evil and uncertainty, Christians should not act as if

by Walter H. Dyck

The Lord's Day following Easter, April 24, has been designated by our Executive Committee as "Conference Sunday." Although during the whole year our 230 congregations share the fellowship and witness of our Conference enterprise, one special Sunday is set aside for "praise and prayer."

An appropriate observance of "Conference Sunday" will include sermons based on one or more of the cardinal tenets of our faith. Pastors will do well to base the morning sermon on one of the great texts of the Bible, such as I Cor. 3:11.

Our Unalterable Biblical Principles

In order to refresh our memories, the General Conference Constitution presents "Our Common Confession" (Art. 10)—our unalterable Biblical principles of faith—in the following brief and pointed way:

"The Conference recognizes and asknowledges the Sacred Scriptures of the Old and New Testament as the Word of God and as the only and infallible rule of faith and life; for 'Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ. I Cor. 3:11.

"In the matter of faith it is therefore required of the congregations which unite with the Conference accepting the above Confession, they hold fast to the doctrine of salvation by grace through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, baptism on confession of faith, the avoidance of oaths, the Biblical doctrine of non-resistance, and the practice of a scriptural church discipline."

A sermon based on "Anchored in the Rock of Ages," "How Firm a Foundation," (I Cor. 3:11) would give opportunity to emphasize the basis of our faith. A sermon on "The Separated Life (II Cor. 6:14-15)" would bring out the heart of our Christian witness in our Christian witness in our practical life.

Again, we are not suggesting a definite form to either the morning or evening service. Every pastor or church leader will find ample illustrative material in recent issues of THE MENNONITE.

These Resources

The following are a number of important articles that have appeared in THE MENNONITE since March 1, 1949, which the pastor, Christian Endeavor discussion leaders, or those preparing themes for the evening meeting can refer.

"New Opportunities Demand New Sacrifices" (March 1, p. 8-9) gives a general view of our work as a whole, also a summary of budgets and total income for the past three years. The breakdown of the 1949 budget, totaling $752.760.00 is given. Subsequent articles have dealt with the work of the particular Board of Committee.

"Evangelism—The Universal Christian Responsibility" (April 6, p. 6) presents a continuing opportunity to our churches. "Our Mission Fields Challenged As Never Before," "For a Missionary—All the Problems of Virgin Soil" (March 22, p. 6-7). "In Oklahoma Fifty Years, an Indian Church" (March 29, p. 6), and "Bazaar Preaching in India" (April 6, p. 5) present strikingly new insights into foreign mission work.

"Christian High Schools—the Front Line of Mission Work" (March 8, p. 6) couples increasingly important challenges to both young and old. "The Board of Education—Conference Custodian of the Future" (March 29, p. 7) brings out an area of pressing concern. The "Relief Board Outlines Huge Tasks" and "Missions in Judea and Samaria" (March, 29 p. 4-5) are both striking in the appeal. "Holding Forth the Word of Life in Kentucky" is another fine Home Mission appeal. "Mutual Aid Board points Young People to Caldwell, Idaho" is another very logical application of our faith as applied to our young people.

If you have read the article "Hunger Removed, the Pangs of Spiritual Starvation Strike" (April 6, p. 4), we are presented with an opportunity to enter into a spiritual harvest—the logical outcome of the sowing we have been doing in the relief program overseas during the past years.

The March 15 issue of THE MENNONITE is an index to many other valuable articles found in THE MENNONITE during 1948. Quite a number of our churches may wish to arrange for a pulpit exchange, including an exchange of special music for the Sunday morning service. Others may wish to arrange for a special purpose which the congregation has not remembered adequately during the past year.

Send a Report

Please, a brief report as to how "Conference Sunday" was observed in your congregation. These suggestions may prove helpful to other congregations in the observance of another similar occasion. Should April 24 be altogether inconvenient to your congregation for the observance of "Conference Sunday," another Sunday is the near future may be designated and observed.

May ours be the experience of the New Testament Church: "And when they had prayed, the place in which they were gathered together was shaken; and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and spoke the Word of God with boldness . . . . And with great power the Apostles gave their testimony to the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great grace was upon them all . . . . " (Acts 4:31, 33).

Love-Impelled Service

by Linden M. Wenger

A Fundamental Study in Christian Motivation

THE servant of the Lord in the midst of the conflict against sin and evil in the world needs often to search out and purify the inmost motives of his own heart in their relation to his service for Christ. The outward and tangible aspect of any situation or calling which may challenge us to action will eventually lose their force unless our will to action has been rooted in the only virgin soil in which Christian motives flourish—love to Christ. Who understands better than those who have given their life and time to the mission field the purging that their own hearts have undergone while the Lord revealed to them the higher paths of devotion and cleared away the misconceptions and unworthy aspirations that may have first influenced their decisions in accepting the call to service.

It should be a question whether any of us at home, on the mission field, or where we be, are living wholly unto Him who died for us and rose again.

Love of Christ — the Dynamo

It strikes me that the direct commands to evangelization are not particularly abundant in the New Testament, though the few that are given are couched in words of compelling power. Rather, there is something inherent in the very nature of Christianity itself which impels the heart of him whose life has been touched by the living Christ to go and tell. We sense this inherent outreach of the Gospel message in the allusion of Jesus to the ripened harvest; we see it in the ceaseless activity of the Apostolic Church; and again in the selfless devotion of those who since then have spent their lives for the cause of bringing the Gospel to the most out-of-the-way places of earth. Indeed we do not need to look far to discover this touchstone of Christian service; for as the plan of salvation was conceived in the love of God and manifest in Jesus Christ, so all who are truly united to Him by faith are in turn charged with this outflowing compassion in behalf of lost humanity. The love of Christ is the dynamo that motivates and moves the church in every worth-while endeavor to spread the Gospel.

Compression of Our Energies

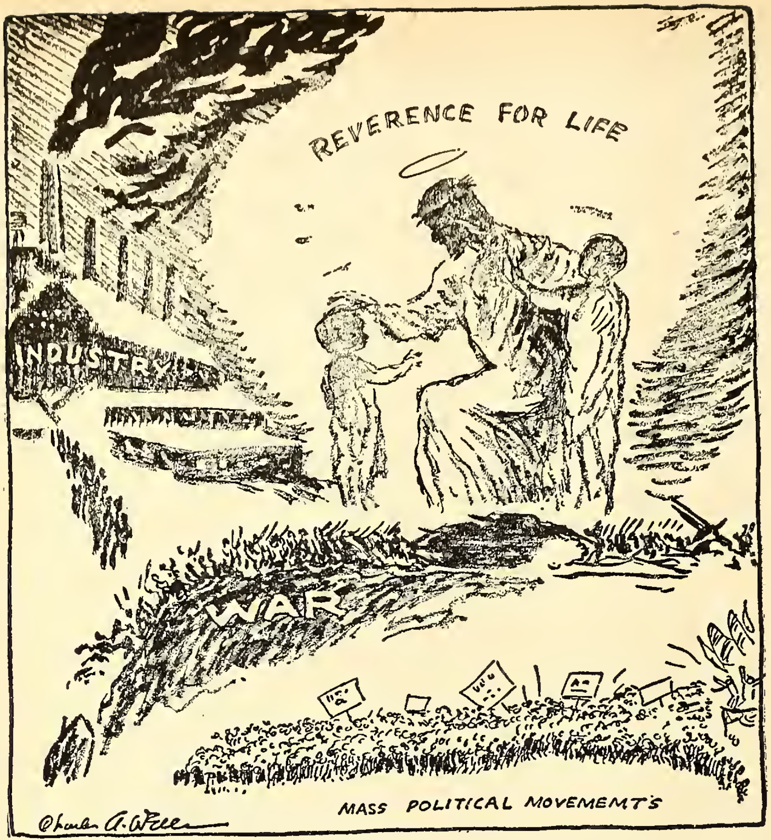
The Apostle Paul arrests us with this imperative to action in II Corinthians 5, where he presents together the deeper significance and the practical outworkings of the love of Christ. He vindicates the apparent rashness of his zeal for the Gospel with his heart-filling cry, "For the love of Christ constraineth us." The language implies a forcible compressing of our energies into one channel, a conforming of our love to the direction of that love which motivates our own. It gives a sense of being possesed of something greater than one's self, without which no man has ever known the fire of real zeal for a cause.

Forced Service Unsustaining

It does not lie in the power of human pity for human needs to sustain us in constant service to our fellow men. It does not even lie in the power of direct command to sustain us in unfaltering action unless that command is enforced by a willingness born of devotion inspired by love. There is striking difference between the tactics used to incite men to carnal warfare and those used of the spirit to enlist the services of men for the Kingdom of Righteousness. The vaunted love of country which impelled men to die on the bloody fields of battle is well stripped of its glory when we reflect that these deeds of so-called heroism were largely performed by men who had to be drafted for the job, bolstered with large shots of hate-inciting propaganda and sent to their stations under strict orders. No such coersion surrounds the volunteer for the mission field. Indeed no mission organization could have any possible use for one who required such compulsion. But a compulsion far stronger than corporeal commands moves the hearts of men who have tasted the love of the Lord Jesus toward themselves, and feel in turn this love working in them toward their fellow men.

Directness of a School Child's Reasoning

Paul is not satisfied with an abstract conception of the love of Christ. How often do we hear the first part of II Cor. 5:14 quoted, and how seldom the complete thought as given in verse fourteen and fifteen combined. Here Paul envisions both the object and the objective of Christ's love. More than that, he lays upon us the obligation of that love in the lives of those for whom it as manifest. "We thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead." Our own experience of the saving grace of Jesus is raising us from the death of sin and our knowledge of the implications of His sacrifical death should work in our hearts a compassionate understanding of the universal needs of man. "If one died for all, then were all dead." Paul's logic here possesses the directness of a school child's reasoning, yet a wisdom which philosophers could not gainsay. There is no elaborate argument about the depravity of man and the need of redemption, though he demonstrates elsewhere that his knowledge and powers of reasoning concerning those matters are not wanting. Here in one breath he sums up the whole compass of redemption in a way that ought to impress every believer with the equality of all men in death. It ought to strip us of every vesture of pride of race or position and leave us with an humble sense of obligation to all people in all places.



THE SUPREME CHALLENGE

By Charles A. Wells

One of the most important places where the teachings of Christ bring a dramatic challenge is on the value that we place on life. The great genius, musician, theologian, philosopher and missionary doctor, Albert Schweitzer, created the striking phrase "reverence for life" in his interpretation of the central theme of Christian doctrine. Today, with war reducing life to the insignificance of a long serial number on some wounded boy's jacket, with industry doing the same thing with a gate pass or name on a pay master's list, and mass political movements often reducing men to organized mobs, "reverence for life" rings out like a bugle call from heaven. No doubt the future of our civilization will rise or fall on its ability to hold that concept at the heart of its motivations. The teachings of Christ have become absolutely essential for the survival of our culture and civilization.

The Claims of this Debt

But if there has been an equality in death there is also an equality in life, for all who live (spiritually) are made alive by the death of Christ to the everlasting exclusion of all pride and boasting of the merits of self. Indeed, the claims of this debt to Christ forbid the spending of our time which we live in the flesh for our own selfish pursuits. "Know ye not that . . . ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price." We must admit the valdity of Paul's conclusion: "They which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again." Surely this challenge ought to give us pause to consider our manner of life and the extent of our effort for the evangelization of the lost.

A brief reflection on the standards of life and activity of the average Mennonite community must bring us to acknowledge that as a people we have fallen far short of this high standard set forth for those who have been made alive by the grace of God. But let us make this a matter of personal concern. Am I living for self or for Christ? It is something of a fad in the world today to advocate a soak-the-rich campaign. Whether right or wrong, we would tax the rich to make life easier for the rest. Something of that same spirit may possess us in our attitude toward the work of the church. Literally, we sometimes point our fingers at our more financially able brethren, indicating that they should bear all the burden of supporting missions and other church work and so excuse those of us not so blessed. More subtly we may feel that we have discharged our duty when we join the fanfare of the well-wishers who wave the outgoing missionaries off to their posts of service. We may even demonstrate our generosity by advocating that those who go to the mission fields at home and abroad should have things "just as good and convenient" as those who remain behind. The truth is that nothing can answer for our own individual responsibility. The Scripture is very searching and personal. "They which live should not henceforth live unto themselves."

It should be a question whether any of us, at home, on the mission field, or where we be, are living wholly unto Him who died for us and rose again. Can we be partakers of the grace of our Lord Jesus and refuse to be partakers of His suffering and compassion? It is gratifying to see the numbers of young people who have responded to the call of Christ to serve through the church. Pray God that our program of service may always be worthy, our motives always pure, our convictions always born of a deep sense of gratitude and obligation laid upon us by the constraining love of Christ. Indeed it is a high calling to serve in the cause of the Lord Jesus, for we are called to be ambassadors, as we read in the closing verses of this chapter (II Cor. 5). Our calling as ambassadors is to bear the message of reconciliation to a world of rebels estranged by sin. For God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, but now has committed the word of reconcilition unto us. The Father provides the wedding feast, but unto us He has given the charge of bearing the invitations. What gross self-interest it is that holds men back from such service of love.—Reprinted, courtesy Gospel Herald.

NEW WORKERS FOR HOME MISSIONS

1947 General Conference Directions Carried Out

by A. J. Neuenschwander

At the 1947 General Conference, recommendations of the Board of Home Missions were adopted directing the strengthening of our working force in the Southern Mountains and in Paraguay among our growing Mennonite constituency. Earlier action resulted in sending to Paraguay Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Friesen, Henderson, Nebraska, in May 1948, and Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Nickel and children in July of the year.

The new workers and their fields are as follows:

Rev. and Mrs. Carl O. Wahlsteadt
Barbourville, Kentucky

Carl O. Wahlsteadt was born in 1910 at Hartford, Connecticut. He is a member of the Calvary Temple in the city. In 1941 he as graduated by Moody Bible Institute, in a missionary course and the following year was ordained as minister in the home church. Mrs. Wahlsteadt was born in Murdock, Kansas, in 1911. She attended two years at Hesston college, Hesston, Kansas,, following her graduation from Pretty Prairie high school. For two summers she attended Bethel College and taught in Kansas grade schools for five years. She graduated by the Moody Bible Institute in a Bible course in 1942.

Randall A. Heinrichs

After their marriage in 1942 they entered home mission work, independently, in Barbourville. The Wahlsteadts have affiliated locally with the Emmanuel Bible Fellowship for more efficient work in summer Bible camp work. Mrs. Wahlsteadt holds her membership in the First Mennonite Church, Newton, Kansas.

The Wahlsteadts do mountain mission work, consisting of preaching services, Sunday school work, giving special attention to summer Bible camp work. They came under our Board January 1, 1949.

Miss Rosa Linda Bartel

Miss Rosa Linda Bartel, born in Aberdeen, Idaho, in 1917 became a member of the First Mennonite Church. She attended and graduated from Aberdeen High School and Bible Institute in Los Angeles in 1948 with a Christian Education major besides taking a child evangelism course for six months.

Miss Bartel is to teach in the Leslie County public school system during the regular school term and during the other part of the year she is to assist Miss Pfister, Incline, Kentucky,. with Sunday school and Children's Bible Camy Work, a very large and essential field.

For many years she was active in the Aberdeen Church, and in Sunday school and Endeavor work. As further preparation for her teaching Miss Bartel is planning on taking some special subjects at Bethel College and also a six weeks normal course in Leslie County. She may take up her work in August or early September. It is not possible to give her Kentucky address at this writing.

Rev. and Mrs. Randall A. Heinrichs,
East Freedom, Pennsylvania

For a period of two years, Brother and Sister Randall A. Heinrichs served in the MCC Volunteer Unit in community and clinic work at Cuauhtemoc, Mexico. Last summer they returned to their home and friends in Abbotsford, British Columbia. While making the trip Brother Heinrichs visited General Conference churches in California and Oregon.

Before entering Voluntary Service Mr. Heinriches attended Bible School in Winnipeg, Manitoba, and joined the Bethel Mennonite Church there. While en route to their field of labor, they stopped in Winnipeg, there on Sunday, February 6, Brother Heinriches were ordained as minister of the Gospel. Coming eastward they visited Rev. and Mrs. Frank P. Dyck, 140 Victor, Toronto, Ontario, whom they learned to know well in Cuauhtemoc Mexico.

In Pennsylavnia they are to have charge of the Smith Corner Mennonite Church, a Home Mission field, and live in the parsonage next to the church. They are also to have charge of the Roaring Springs Mennonite Church, Roaring Springs, Pennsylvania.

Rev. and Mrs. Ernest Harder, Asuncion, Paraguay

For the past two years, Rev. and Mrs. Ernst Harder have been under the MCC as directors of spiritual work among all Mennonites in Asuncion. Due to two factors, the rapid flow of Mennonite refugees into Paraguay from Europe, and the shortage of MCC personnel, Rev. and Mrs. Ernst Harder had to give much of their time to other then the spiritual ministry.

Since February 1, Rev. and Mrs. Ernest Harder are under the direction of the Board of Home Missions and now we anticipate a more energetic and active program of church functions for all Mennonites in this city. Systematic home visitation work is to be done in order to make personal contact with every home and every individual for which we are responsible. Special prayer and Bible study hours are to be arranged.

The Harders have accepted the offer of the Board and have agreed to remain on the field until May 1, 1950. While the main part of their work will be in

God is Working Mightly

by H. J. Brown

Thanks be unto God, who gives us the victory in Christ Jesus our Lord! Another winter has passed. Here comes the gentle spring with soft green leaves and fragrant flowers! We too feel this new life pulsing in our veins. Through His grace we have gotten the victory not only over a cold and hard winter, but also over great and severe economic and heathenish difficulties. There is a lot that lies ahead of us to be conquered. However here we raise the memorial stone with the inscription, "Ebenezer."

Encouraging Signs

We are still hopeful in that the Chinese situation will adjust itself so that the work of evangelism can go on. It surely was encouraging for us to have a letter come through from Kaifeng, telling us of the progressive churchwork, also to have a non-Christian out of Kaifeng come through in one week, reporting to us, that the churches continue regular services, our Bible School having a full enrollment, and other Protestant high schools being open to the young people of the church. Over there inflation is not quite so bad. The price of grain is more reasonable.

Trade Re-established

Although peace is as yet far off, the business people here begin to trade with cities of north China. Mail is also being sent to some larger places there. Travel however is difficult, especially in regions of the so called no-man's-land. While traveling in those regions people are generally relieved of their possessions.

Both Sides Have Transgressed

The Chinese are generally speaking, a peaceful people and they are now dead tired of this war forced upon them. Both sides have greatly transgressed against the common people. The young students often tell us, "Every thing is emptiness, whom can we trust?" Thank God, there is a Saviour and thus there is one who can fill that emptiness in the human soul!

No, friends don't give up, continue to pray for the Christian work in China. Many young people are now turning to Christ.

Two of our seminary students went along in an evangelistic party of twenty workers. On a large bus they for two months went to cities on the coast and cities in the interior. They visited many churches and schools during that time. Coming back they brought a glorious report of the open-ness of the people. Even government high schools and universities opened their doors to them. Everywhere people repented and received Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Lord. No, we are not here for nothing. God is working mightily through His humble servants for the salvation of many souls. We must continue in steadfast faith and fervent prayer of intercession!

Holy Week Witnessing

To Seek and Save the Lost

As we think of Holy-Week witnessing we profit a good deal by seeking to follow Christ the Saviour in His search for the lost, to observe His method and the places where He found the lost.

He found Matthew at the tax office. We may find lost souls at the tax bureaus even today. Peter and his companions were at the lake fishing, a good place to win people to Christ. He found a woman at the wayside well and another one at a dinner in Simon's house. The 38-year-old sick man He found at the pool of Bethesda. And strangest of them all was Zacheaus who was up in a mullberry tree. The demoniac he found coming from the graveyard, surely he was lost and needed help.

Christ did not even give up His search for the lost when He was hanging on the cross, for we see Him even there finding someone who needed salvation. Will you and I stand up and see others go after the lost or shall we join with others this Easter season to help Christ find the lost?

When Jesus met or saw Zacheaus in the tree He said, "Today I must stay at your house." We of the Evangelism committee hope and pray that many Christians of our conference may feel that must to go into someone's house during this Easter season. Go to speak to them about Christ, or invite them to church. Show one and all that you are a neighbor according to the meaning of Christ's teaching. Let us unite to pray for His blessing on these visits.—THE EVANGELISM COMMITTEE

DIVIDED OPINION

Reader number one: Concerning the Index issue of THE MENNONITE, I wish to make some constructive criticism. Since you have the Index number as one of the regular issues of the year I feel that you cheat the average reader out of one number of worthy reading material.

Having made inquiry of several persons as to their opinion about that issue I find the average reader does not care for it. One person even told me, "I can't even use it for building a fire since I use gas to heat my house."

Reader number two: The very splendid "Index Issue" of THE MENNONITE just arrived. I think it is simply a wonderful advancement, and should be extremely valuable in preserving the values of THE MENNONITE for those of us who save all our copies. NOW—you see, with my filing system, and the index, —well, what is there I can't find in a very short time!?!?

"The individual income tax is not a minor source of government revenue either; it is the major source. So it is not only a clear place to make a witness but also a most strategic one."

"I Have Wondered . . ."

by Joanna Andres

To work entirely by mail—even the fastest mail—on a piece of work such as the adaptation of the New Summer Bible School Series for our use, involved much time. As the work ran into its last stages of preparation and the final proofs were coming through, it was thought best to eliminate mail service and instead of sending packages back and forth, to send just one—myself—to Scottdale, Pennsylvania.

Voices of the Past

It was a privilege to be there. Besides facilitating the work on our editions, the experience there set me to thinking. I remembered the voices in our Conference who through a span of year's plead for a Conference printing press. I am persuaded they were men of vision.

Perhaps such a venture is impracticable for our group. I can sense, however, what strength such an enterprise could be to us.

Into All the World!

What a workshop it was! Within the confines of one building, materials are written, edited, prepared for printing, printed, and mailed out. It was stimulating to see the vast amount of positive Christian thought and teaching going forth to build the walls of faith through the medium of the printed page!

There full-time editors and artists sit in their nooks, producing all day long, all week, all month, all year. Typewriters click, presses fan their printed sheets, cutters, binders, folders, staplers, all work at full speed.

Circulation: Half a Million!

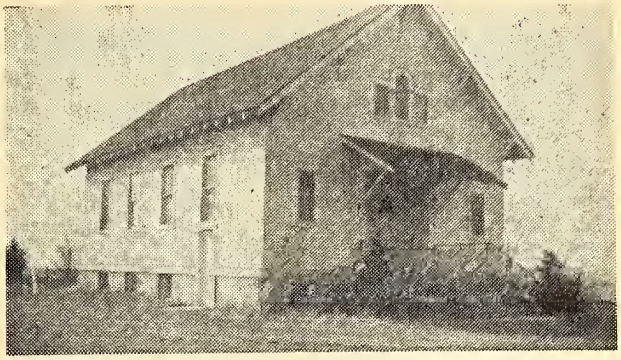
Materials go out for every department of the Sunday school—materials written by denominational writers for denominational needs. There go out Sunday school leaflets for various age groups: Beams of Light for the primaries, Words of Cheer for juniors, The Youth's Christian Companion for the young people. Besides the official church organ, the Gospel Herald, there goes out a monthly or bi-monthly mission paper published by the various district conferences. For the family there is the Christian Monitor and The Mennonite Community; for the ministry, the Christian Ministry, and for the unsaved, a small evangelistic leaflet called The Way. A total of forty-four publications with a circulation of more than a half a million, are printed and distributed from here.

The Latest

The latest and largest publication which has almost pushed back the walls of the present plant is the New Summer Bible School Series. It is an increasingly growing concern. A new large addition is at present under construction in order that demands for increased publication work can be met. Every corner of the present building is in use. Everywhere I looked there we stacks upon stacks of printed materials awaiting storage facilities.

I have wondered: What could such a place do for our Conference? Or, if not that, what could full-time writers accomplish?

BEHIND THE 100% PLAN



Arlington Mennonite Church

(Serving 12 homes)

We, of the Arlington Mennonite Church, have adopted the 100% Plan because we feel it is our privilege as Christians to be informed on the activities of Christ's Kingdom here on earth, and to become conscious of our own responsibilities toward that Kingdom.

We feel, that as members of the General Conference of Mennonites, one way to secure this information is through the reading of the official General Conference publication. We want every member of our church group to have access to that information, for thus we can share a mutual understanding of our various church activities and the problems involved. We desire for each member also the inspirational material which is brought weekly by the Mennonite. Only through constant perusal of such material can Christian growth continue.

Previous to 1905 our group was organized as a Sunday School and worshipped in district schools with the assistance of visiting ministers from Sterling and Pretty Prairie. When the church was built in 1905, John P. Linscheid was elected as pastor. It continued for years under his leadership, until he realized the necessity of using the English language in the services. Then he made room for younger men but continued an active place as elder until his death in 1937. Since that time there has been only one resident pastor, Rev. George Kopper, from 1937 to 1944. Various others have commuted from a distance, and we feel that we have had a small part in furnishing experience for a number of our present church leaders. At the present, Rev. John F. Schmidt of North Newton, is serving us in a very able manner.

We have always been one of the smaller Conference churches. We are not discouraged by small numbers. In a small group each person feels the need of his own contribution for the good of the group. On our present staff of officers and teachers each of the ten families of our group is represented by at least one member. We have as many children under twelve years of age as we have active members. These are our inspiration for the present and our hope for the future.

MCC Nachbarschaftsheim for Berlin

New Service Opportunities in California

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA. Harold and Ann Buller are now located in the city of Berlin, Germany where they are making contacts to secure a suitable building to establish a Community-Center type of relief project. Although arrangements for an appropriate building have not yet been completed, many needs among the people have been observed. Women need cloth and sewing facilities to repair clothing; everyone needs soles for shoes; many need a place to scrub their clothes students need books and a place in which to study; children need supervised play and crafts rooms; young people need a place to gather for discussions and other youth meetings; they need an opportunity to plan their lives in moral and uplifting surroundings; they need Bible Study.

The Community Center, or neighborhood house (nachbarschaftsheim) is a rather new concept in relief work, but one which has proven to be very effective. The neighborhood house, situated in a devastated area, is a supplement to the cramped and disrupted homes of the vicinity. Here there is warmth, light, books, and equipment for repairing shoes and clothing. Above all there are Christian friends. The MCC neighborhood house in Berlin will seek to be such a home of friendly aid and Christian neighborliness, similar to the various other centers in Germany.

Another Summer Opportunity

A summer service opportunity on the West Coast has been planned since the printing of the MCC Summer Service folder. The Crippled Children's Society of Los Angeles sponsors two-weeks summer camps for crippled children during June 15 to September 1. Men and women workers are wanted who can begin June 15 and serve most of the period. This will be at a new camp northeast of Los Angeles, in the mountain area. Work will be that of counseling, recreation, or construction. There will be some remuneration. Send applications to MCC Voluntary Service, Akron, Pennsylvania by April 15 if possible. Descriptive material and the regular MCC Summer Service folders are also available from Akron.

Advance Information on Christmas Bundles

A number of individuals have inquired whether there will be a Goodwill Christmas Bundle program this year. Some have found it difficult in past years to secure heavy items of clothing in the summer months when the regular Christmas Bundle appeal is made.

This is to state in advance that we are planning for a Christmas Bundle project again this summer, since this type of gift continues to fill a very useful place in the relief program. Individuals may therefore find it advantageous to buy certain items of clothing for these bundles before the early spring season is past. Contents of bundles will be similar to those of last year. Bundles are however not to be sent in until complete and detailed information is released in a few months through a special folder as in past years.

Special Shoe and Stocking Program to Close Soon

April 15 is the date by which contributions of shoes and stockings for European children, are to be sent in. Numerous parcels of shoes and stockings have already come in to the warehouses, but it is hoped that a considerably larger amount will be received.

The above termination date pertains only to the special Children's Relief Project of collecting shoes and stockings for European children. There continues to be need for children's and adult's shoes, and contributions of these items and other clothing, should continue to be channeled through the regular clothing centers.

National Family Week, May 8-15

The theme for Family Week, 1949, is "Home Builders Are World Builders." Families are called upon to realize that a peaceful world cannot be achieved solely by governments and world statesmen but must grow up from the grassroots of good will, mutual concern and a cooperative spirit in millions of families.

Suggestions for homes, churches, and communities for the observance of Family Week have been embodied, for the Protestant constituency, in a leaflet entitled "National Family Week in Every Protestant Church." This may be secured by sending a 3c stamp, or at $1.10 per 100, from the International Committee on Christian Family Life, 297 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N.Y., or 203 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois.

General Conference Mennonite Missions in India

Our Mennonite missionaries in India are looking to us for help. Many of them are carrying double loads and are tired. Dr. H. E. Dester, the chairman of the India Conference, is ill. Rev. Harold Ratzlaff, just home on furlough says, "Retraction would be nothing short of disaster." We need also to uphold them more in prayer. "We need your prayers a thousand times more even than money, to keep us going."

Bethel Volunteers in Extensive Deputation

Deputation teams from the Student Volunteers are visiting churches in Kansas and Colorado during the Easter vacation. One group is presenting programs at Greensburg, Kismet, Montezuma, Hanston, and Kingman, Kansas. The students in this group are: Benjamin Sawatzky, Paul Isaak, Betty Quiring, Margaret Jahnke, Donald Isaac, and Rosa Bartel.

The second team is visiting churches in Pawnee Rock and Colby, Kansas, and in Vona and Joes, Colorado. The members of this group are: Leland Voth, Joanne Buhler, Charlene Unruh, Joe Duerksen, and Orlando Friesen.

Mr. John Swomley, Jr. was a guest speaker at Bethel College for a morning chapel service and an evening meeting. He is the associate secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation and the director of the National Council against Conscription He was formerly vice-president of the National Council of Methodist Youth. Mr. Swomley addressed the Bethel audience on the topic "How shall we deal with Russia?"

Dr. Cornelius Krahn's classes in Mennonite history visited church services in the Amish community. Helga Kemnitzer, Teatske van der Zijpp, Gustav Reimer, and Augustine Coma, foreign students at Bethel College, spoke at a Wednesday evening Amish church gathering.

The members of the senior class took their graduate record examinations on Monday and Tuesday, April 11 and 12. Oral comprehensives are scheduled for the seniors on the Saturdays in April.

A program for the Good Will Builders, their parents, and friends, is being planned for Saturday afternoon, May 14.

Kreider Concludes Series at Seminary

"That He would grant you, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His spirit in the inner man." Ephesians 3:16. With this text A. E. Kreider concluded his series of devotional meetings which he has conducted here at the Seminary. In this closing message he declared that the Spirit of God is imparted as a gift on certain conditions. These conditions are that we must have a broken spirit and contrite heart; that we must have the self-discipline to say with Isaiah, "Here am I"; that we must undertake tasks for our Lord. In addition to speaking at the mid-week prayer service. Rev. Kreider counseled a number of students.

The Inter-School Committee of the General Conference Institutions convened here on Tuesday, March 29. Among those present not mentioned in last week's news item were George Dick, of Bloomfield, Montana, representing the Board of Education; R. C. Kauffman, of Bethel College; and Jessie Brown, of Bethel Hospital and Bethel College. On the next day K. G. Toews, of Rostern Jr. College, attended classes at the Bethany campus.

Charlotte Regier, Whitewater, Kansas, has joined our staff as an assistant in the kitchen. She has recently returned from a period of relief work in Europe and is a welcome addition to our family. Her sister, missionary Marie Regier, is also in residence here.

Mary Becker, missionary from Colombia, South America, was with us prior to her attendance of the annual meeting of the American Mission to the Lepers. Following this meeting she left for New Orleans, Louisiana, where she will embark for her field after a four months' furlough in this country.

Professor Marvin Dirks conducted special meetings at the Inman, Kansas, High School from April 10-15. These are union sessions sponsored by several Mennonite churches in that viicnity. Mr. Dirks also will sing the baritone solos at the Bethel College rendition of "The Seven Last Words of Christ."

President S. F. Pannabecker was at Bethel College on April 5 interviewing prospective students for Mennonite Biblical Seminary. Pres. Pannabecker and Don E. Smucker are scheduled to read papers at Goshen College on May 14 for a Seminar on Aanabaptist Studies.

Russell Mast Leads Freeman Bible Week

The week of March 21 to 25 was Bible Week on the Freeman Junior College Campus. Rev. Russel Mast was guest speaker. He spoke twice daily, during chapel period and evenings. The ministerial students had charge of opening devotions during chapel periods. Rev. Mast's theme for his series of talks was on "Great Beliefs." During the week the CYV Group held daily prayer meetings during the noon hour.

Faculty and students enjoyed a religious film Tuesday March 22, entitled "Queen Esther" which told the life of the Jewish queen who saved her people.

Otto G. Dallman, sculptor, gave a program for FJC students on the Student Entertainment series. During the program he made several plaster placques which he gave to individual students and a clay model bust of Abraham Lincoln.

College students taking the Teacher Training Course are now practice teaching in various schools in the community.

The student body has passed the Revised Constitution of the Student Association, a project started last year. The student project this year is the purchase of a water fountain.

Jottings

—First Church, Fredonia, Kansas: At our last C. E. meeting. Tom Flemming presented the topic "When We Go To Church," emphasizing the following points: We go as a family; we go regularly; we go on time; we are reverent; we are thoughtful of others; we welcome strangers; we take our offering; we sing with all our hearts; we pray for the minister. February 6 the Bethel College Men's Octet gave a program followed by a fellowship lunch in the basement.—Mrs. Sam Harms, Corr.

—Friedensfeld Church, Turpin, Oklahoma: The afternoon of March 6 the Meade Bible Academy presented a program in our church. March 11 the women held a surprise birthday party honoring the minister's wife. Rev. J. J. Regier from Freeman, South Dakota, held evangelistic meetings here March 14-24.—Mrs. J. G. Unruh, Corr.

—First Church, McPherson, Kansas: Mr. and Mrs. Isaac F. Schierling became members of the church March 27. Mr. Hoffman, a student at McPherson College, reviewed the Sunday School lessons for the first quarter on March 27. Miss Helga Kemnitzer, foreign exchange student from Germany at Bethel College, gave a talk for the Christian Endeavor meeting on March 27. She discussed conditions in Germany and the problems of the refugees.—Marie Stucky, Corr.

IN THE HEADLINES

Rev. William Stauffer pastor of the First Church, Sugarcreek, Ohio, has been chosen by the Rural Church Department of Drew Theological Seminary as "The Rural Pastor of the Year," in recognition of his outstanding service in the rural ministry.

Those who are majoring in rural church work at the Seminary study the work of "The Rural Pastor of the Year" that they may make their own ministry more effective. The pastor chosen is invited to speak in the various classes in the Department of Rural Work and is honored at a reception.

—Topeka Church, Topeka, Indiana: Hanno Klassen, a student at the Mennonite Seminary in Chicago from Heidelberg, Germany, gave the morning message March 27. That evening he spoke at an informal meeting. No evening services were held here March 13 and 20 because of Lenten services in the Methodist church. The youth of the churches in this community met here Sunday afternoon. March 27, to organize a Youth Fellowship for this community. A peace team from Bluffton College gave a program here recently.—Opal King, Corr.

—First Church, Allentown, Pennsylvania: At the evening service March 27, Miss Margaret Slotter correlated a gospel message and illustrations of her missionary work in Kentucky. Her message, based on Acts 9:15, centered around salvation, sanctification, and suffering through "Bearing His Name." At a recent Sunday School workers meeting we voted to purchase a slide and film strip projector and a screen as the first step in a Visual Aid Program for our Sunday School.—Mrs. LeRoy K. Weidner Corr.

—Ebenezer Church, Bluffton, Ohio: Miss Ruth Hilty showed pictures and spoke about her experiences as a relief worker on the evening of February 13. Our church has been redecorated recently, floors have been sanded and the walls painted. A special offering was received March 27 to cover the cost of this redecorating. Special Lenten services were held March 13-20 with Dr. Paul R. Bauman, Winona Lake, Indiana, as the speaker. The services concluded with the thirteenth annual youth conference using the theme "Living for Jesus." A highlight of the conference was the fellowship dinner for about one-hundred young people Saturday evening.—M. Hilty, Corr.

—Tabor Church, Newton, Kansas: The Bethel College Peace Group held a peace rally in our church January 23 and had charge of the Sunday School classes and the services. Meetings were also conducted during the afternoon and evening. Dr. J. E. Hartzler conducted meetings during the week of February 6-11. We are collecting horse-drawn farm machinery for the brethren of Paraguay.—Waldo R. Janzen, Corr.

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: The Rev. Jacob H. Jantzen, former pastor of the Waterloo Mennonite Church,Waterloo,Ontario, Canada, preached a German sermon in our church, Tuesday evening, March 22. Miss Helga Kemnitzer is scheduled to be here on Sunday evening, April 24.—Ralph Krehbiel, Corr.

—Bethesda Church, Henderson, Nebraska: Four tons of farm machinery were collected for the South American Mennonites. A special offering for relief was taken instead of a meat canning project. Catechism enrollment is twenty-five. Rev. Jacob J. Enz conducted a series of meetings here a few weeks ago. Once a month a group from our church conducts a program in the Old People's Home in Aurora, Nebraska—Clarence E. Friesen, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Sunday, March 20, Miss Erna Friesen and Melvin Funk, two students at the Chicago Seminary, provided the morning messages and evening colored slides of the Voluntary Service program under the MCC and General Conference. Our congregation has voted to purchase a property in our community for use as a parsonage. The Women's Missionary Society has now been able to send the rest of the canned goods (about 70 quarts) to the Seminary. The Society is sending $25 to Chaco,, Paraguay, for the Mennonite refugees. Rev. Paul Shelly preached on the "Meaning of the Cross" Sunday morning, March 27.—Mrs. Ivan L. Badertscher, Corr.

—Meadow Church, Colby, Kansas: Rev. B. H. Janzen was in our church March 24 and told of his visit in Mexico. He also showed pictures from the settlements of the Mennonites there. Nine students of the Berean Academy gave a program March 27. Rev. Waldo Harder, superintendent, and John L. Ewert, music teacher, accompanied them.—Mrs. Peter J. Franz, Corr.

—Zion Church, Elbing, Kansas: Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz McPherson, was the speaker at a public meeting of our Sewing Society March 23. Mrs. Lohrentz spoke on the topic, "My Privilege." She pointed out the many needs on our mission fields and the privilege that is ours in helping to support this work. The triple trio from Berean Academy sang two numbers and Mrs. Walter Dyck led in devotions. The ladies of the Grace Hill Church were our guests at this service. Following this meeting the group met in the basement for refreshments and a period of Christian fellowship.—Dorothea Dyck, Corr.

The Cross and the Revelation of Jesus Christ

A Meditation

It is well for us to think of the cross in its relation to the total revelation in Christ Jesus, as that revelation supplies a clue and gives a value to this life of ours, to the life of our day, indeed to the very universe itself. The answer to the riddle, whether it be the riddle of our own individual perplexities, or of the tragic bewilderment and strain and suffering of our time, or to the vast enigma of the whole creative process proves that. The answer if we can strain our little imagination to appreciate it, is given on the Cross. He triumphs. It takes up at that point and brings to its fulfillment the task which he had undertaken from the first, a task for which he came into the world and which lies at the foundation of his whole ministry.

> In the drama of Calvary, there is the mystery of the Cross: love's task, love's cost, love's end, set out for us in the tradition of The Seven Words; set out for us as we trace step by step how love forgives, and calms and unites, how love agonizes and is broken and in the breaking finds its fulfillment; how love appeals and achieves and abides.

Christ Identified With the Father and Men

That ministry involved, inevitably on the hand, the self-idenification with the Father, with the eternal purpose, of which the expression is the "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heavn is perfect;" and on the other hand, an equal self-identificaion with us, with mankind, with the imperfect and the fallen, with the little folk of this world, with you and me, destined to work out, step by step an approximation to that perfection, committed to a quest of a horizon, trying stage by stage, here a little and there a little, to strive on behalf of the Eternal to that task to which Jesus, by his nature and calling was committed. It involved for him, as Lent continually reminds us, from the very first the abjuring of the three ays by which men have sought to live and establish their society upon earth.

Jesus Gave Up Three Ways by Which Men Seek to Live

Jesus must give up all reliance upon material security. "Demand those stones that they be made bread," that is the voice of Satan. He must give up all reliance upon personal power and predatory strength which exploits and coerces the kingdom of the world, for these are offered by Satan and none other. He must give up, hardest task of all, the way of escape into phantasy, a phantasy world of the supernatural and miraculous. The world which religion has always dangled before the eyes of men, tempted to despair of their lives here, and to look only toward a tender God to deliver them miraculously. "Cast thyself down" that men may see God's Messiah coming in the clouds into the Lord's temple. That too is the voice of the tempter and Jesus says, "No, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, Him only shalt thou serve" and in that cry committed himself to that service identifying himself with hs fellowmen.

He Comes to His Own, They Receive Him Not

The cross becomes inevitable. "He comes unto his own and his own received him not." I suppose there are no more poignant words in all the Scripture than those which, in their stark simplicitiy, described the judgment that awaits him, not the judgment that awaits his people.

He comes to his own; they are his own; Caiaphas, Pilate, and Judas not less than his disciples and the multitiude. They are his own made for God, made in God's image, made as God's children. Yes, Caiaphas, Pilate, Judas, ,Mussolini, Stalin, Hitler. They represent that material security of the Pharisees and Sadduces.

Caiaphas, playing for safety was wise in the wisdom of this world, contemptuous and afraid of any imaginative, or rebellious initiative. He was clear only that at all costs the prestige for which they stand, the civilization which they represent, the slow ordered movement in which they cannot believe, must not be threatened or challenged.

Pilate stands for the power of the Imperial city, for the might of the marching legion, for the judge and general, who, as it seems to us sometimes, holds the destinies of the nations, of this nation and mine. Judas stands for the impatience of this world, that desire to force God's hands, that insistence that the miracles shall be wrought, that the Son of Man, whom he had betrayed, shall appeal to his Father for the legions of the angels and by a supreme miracle, even in the abyss of calamity, rescue himself and bring in his kingdom supernaturally.

It is those issues that we should bring to this time of meditation:

Our own reliance upon the things of this world, our own inherited fear and our trust in force, and our own hankering after an easy supernaturalism.

Test Men's Ways in the Light of the Cross

Test these things in the light of the judgment of the cross and see how they crucify the Son of Man afresh and put him to a perpetual shame. See them in your own lives, see them in this world of ours, this world which has gone astray after the splendor of riches after social reform, and social rightness and forgotten God, which thought that in the multitudes of the dispossessed it could establish for itself the

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

The General Conference Voluntary Service applications are coming in gradually. Those who are interested in these projects should apply before April 22. At present all projects are in need of volunteers.

A change in the minimum age for the Indian and Chicago Mission has resulted in the readiness to accept eighteen-year-old applicants. The bulleting had limited these projects to nineteen-year-olds. —Erna Friesen, director of projects future, this world threatened with wars and rumors of wars, this world, at this very moment, distracted with the pageantry of force, scared to panic by the things that are coming upon the earth.

Cast out that fear from your life and mine. Pray that God may deliver our nations from it; from temptation to the religion which finds compensation without evaluation in this world by glamour dreams of the hereafter, which tempts God to work a miracle for itself or for the world, which dares to think that it is doing him good service by contrasting the natural with the supernatural, the historical with the metaphysical, this life of ours with the life of God, this insistence that it is in the here and now. Not by immunity, nor by predatory force, nor by any escapism is the world redeemed but only by love, choosing love's way and following love's way to the uttermost, and when love's task is plainly seen and love's tremendous cost is fully paid, love may come through death into life, through dereliction into triumph.

The Mystery of the Cross — Love's Task

In the drama of Calvary, there is the mystery of the Cross, love's task, love's cost, love's end, set out for us in the tradition of The Seven Words, set out for us as we trace step by step how love forgives, calms, unites; how love agonizes and is broken and in the breaking finds its fulfillment; how love appeals and achieves and abides.

If you and I, faced with the need of our own souls, faced with these poor and stunted lives of ours; if you and I, faced with the turmoil and pain and evil of our day; if you and I living in this strange, ruthless fashioned universe of God's, are to make sense out of any one of those three involvements of his, it will surely be as we enter, self subjected and expectant, into the judgment which the Cross enables and presents:

"Not this man but Barabbas." There are the two roads awaiting each one of us; the way to Calvary or the way to aggression; the way of peace or the way of war; the way of the suffering soul, the redemptive Son of man, or the way of the brigand chief seeming lord of the earth?

And there is the judgment, the judgment for you and me.

As we confront it so we are judged.

Projects in the Churches

Inman Church, Inman, Kansas

by Caralou Kornelson

Last spring the junior students were given one dollar which they could invest in any project they wished. Some children grew potatoes or vegetables while others sewed aprons, clothespin bags, and other things as their projects. The profit from these were brought in Thanksgiving Day and given to children in other lands.

Later, during the Christmas season, the junior boys collected waste paper. This was sold and the money was given to Junior C. E. treasury. The Senior C. E. is planning to rent a plot of ground and raise potatoes as a summer project this year. These profits will go towards the Church building fund.

Summerfield Church, Summerfield, Ill.

by Kathryn Ruth

Although our Young People's group is rather small, we have successfully completed a few projects. Our money raising projects included the giving of a bake sale and the sponsoring of the movie, "The Kings of Kings."

Several of our young people gave of their time by offering their services in Bible School during the summer. A majority of the children in our community, both Mennonites and other denominations, enrolled for a two-weeks period of wonderful experience.

Our young girls' choir presented a contata at Easter and at Christmas. Another outstanding musical program was given by the choir in place of the regular Sunday morning church service. Our choir has been singing regularly on Sunday mornings.

OUR AGE IS ONE OF SKEPTICISM.—We all fear to choose. We remain, fearfully, non-committal; and so, in our crisis, we do not have the assurance of unqualified devotion. Our sin is the refusal to choose; we are purposeless; we refuse to define ourselves: we seek the good and joy of pure knowledge, and at once insist upon the pleasure of both alternatives.—Ralph Bargen.

HOME MISSION WORKERS . . . from p. 7

Asuncion, they are expected to visit all the colonies during this period of service.

More Workers, More Prayers, More Interest

We as a Board are grateful to God for sending us these workers. We enlist your prayerful support for these and the other workers. We thank you for your active interest in the work of Home Missions. May the Lord grant an abundant increase.

Holliman's Temporary Address

The temporary address of Rev. and Mrs. Andrew Holliman is Bessie, Oklahoma. Brother Holliman has been advised to visit the Halstead Clinic. We want to thank you all for your prayers and trust you will continue your intercession.

EVERYBODY LOYAL—OR ELSE

The lower house of the Kansas legislature has passed, (since passed as law) almost unanimously, a bill of which the late Adolf Hitler would have been exceedingly proud.

The measure would require literally every public employee in the state to sign an anti-subversive oath. Refusal to sign or breaking of the oath would not only bring dismissal, it also would invite penalties ranging up to a fine of $10,000 or imprisonment in the penitentiary for ten years.

The kindergarten teacher would have to sign such an oath. So would the farmer who worked on the township roads. Equally the man who trimmed the trees in a city's parks. The businessman who consented to serve on a town council. The assistant attorney general, and probably even the minister who accepted a modest fee for delivering a baccalaureate address.

Such loyalty oaths and checks were quite in the normal order of things in Germany, pre-war. The Nazis made sure than even the postmen and street cleaners were loyal party members. The Russians continue the practice today. They even employ a secret police to make sure that none of their government payroll takes his loyalty oath with tongue in cheek.

Such practices are quite in keeping with totalitarian states dedicated to the principle that everyone must think and act the way the government tells him to. But they run counter to the idea of individual freedom on which this country was built. It is to be hoped the state senate will have a sounder concept of Americanism than the house had demonstrated.—Editorial Hutchinson News Herald, March 26, 1949.

there is no use. Living in a world where death is, Christians ought to live in the joy of the radiance of immortality's light.

In fact every Christian ought to be a living demonstration, a repetition of that great demonstration that took place on Calvary, instead of being forever speculating. No, the Christian faith is not one in which people have to bolster themselves up for every trying experience, doing the whole experiment over and over and, at it were, whistle in the dark to keep up courage. In the light of Christ there is no darkness; all is light—the eternity of righteousness and love, the certain doom of sin, the ultimate welfare of Christlike character, and the eradication of the sting of death itself. With such an Easter conviction we need no longer speculate about life at every new trial. We can, like God, make life with all ills and death itself a demonstration of the certain triumph of the purposes of God.—JJE

We Must Decide Between Ideals and Might

By Ray Hammon

When Larry Gara was charged with counseling a person to refuse to register and tried and found guilty, the reverberations of this action did not only affect Larry Gara and his immediate family, it affected all those on the campus at Bluffton College. And it is affecting many more people over the nation. Here is a reaction of one of the students to this events and its significance in his eyes.

The Federal Court in Toledo was the classroom of a large proportion of Bluffton College students during the past week. The case of the U. S. vs. Larry Gara provided the subject matter.

Attendance at and attention to the proceedings indicate that interest was greater than is ordinarily obtained in college classes. Undoubtedly, various reasons contributed to this interest, but the fact remains that whatever the reason, one very important outcome has been experienced. Each and every thought concerning the vital issues facing the world, and specifically, our country today.

Basically, the issues are old ones. The issues confronting America today are strikingly similar to those faced by Germany, Italy, Japan, and Russia just a decade or two ago. Recognizing the dangers of over-simplification, the issues utimately can be resolved into a dispute of two philosophes. Are ideals, ideas, principles, etc., the basic reality or is material force? That is, is the idea inately capable of exerting itself, or is it necessary to rely on military might to perpetuate ideas? Is devotion to a principle futile and devotion to material might the only salvation? Does might make right, or does right make might? In brief: can the ideal overcome the material?

These are questions that must be thought through by everyone. No government official can dogmatically decree an answer. The issues are too great for any mortal man to answer—divine guidance is imperative! We no longer live in the ages accepting the divine right of rulers. God speaks to individuals not an individual!

Diversity of opinion and ideas was largely responsible for America's phenomenal growth. Has this principle been outmoded? Is the substitution of a strictly regulated intellectual life with the accompanying transfer of faith to the material might of the U. S. the answer? Is the principal strength of a nation its material wealth?

The questions raised at Toledo must be answered. Furthermore, they must be practiced in accordance with the accepted answer. Faith without works is dead! Larry Gara has dared to project his faith into the words.—the Witmarsum

NEW WINDSOR, MARYLAND.—To replace more than 90 per cent of the goat population of 115,000 killed during the war, gifts of goats, or cash contributions of $50 to cover the purchase of a goat, are solicited from America's rural folks through their churches. This work carried on through the Heifer Project committee in Okinawa is done in conjunction with the Army's program of agricultural rehabilitation. The goal for the year is 2,750 head with a load of 300 goats scheduled to leave every twenty days.

BELGRADE, YUGOSLAVIA. — Meeting at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, in early March, the Union of Orthodox Clergy affirmed its desire to work with the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia, and has pledged itself to the creation of "truly the people's clergy." Attending this meeting were 250 priests of the Union, members and officials of the government, and three priests of the Roman Catholic Church.

SAN JUAN, PORTO RICO.—Protestant mission work in Puerto Rico marked its fiftieth anniversary recently in a three-day celebration which more than 50,000 persons from the seventy-seven municipalities of the island attended. Until 1899, Roman Catholicism was the only faith tolerated in Puerto Rico.

WINNSBORO, LOUISIANA. —What is believed to be the first Methodist rural center of its kind for Negroes was dedicated in the Lampton community of Marion county, Mississippi February 28. Two bishops, Marvin Franklin, representing white Methodists of Mississippi, and Robert Brooks of New Orleans, representing Negro Methodists, officiated at the ceremonies.—THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

NEW YORK CITY. — "Freedom's Foundation—The Christian Home," is the theme selected by the United Council of Church Women for its annual observance of May Fellowship Day to be held May 6. Since this observance coincides with National Family Week, the Council has suggested the event be regarded as a distinctive phase of the larger inter-faith observance. National Family Week has adopted the theme "Home Builders Are World Builders," and is celebrated throughout the nation.

NORWAY. — Norwegian Quakers will pay a "peace tax" to the government instead of the so-called defense tax voted recently by the Parliament. Tax officials agreed to the peace tax after the Society of Friends had informed the government that payment of a defense tax, which is to be used for military purposes, was contrary to their religious convictions.

BELGIAN CONGO.—Mr. E. Jungers, Governor General of the Belgian Congo, announced that a total of twenty-one Protestant missions had accepted increased government aid to carry out their educational work. He also expressed his gratitude to the Protestant missions for all they have done to better the lot of the native population, and for their great work of spreading civilization.

CONFERENCE SUNDAY is an affirmation of the basic quality of the Christian life that no one is fully Christian who does not associate himself in a vital way with other Christians. This day is in recognition of the fact that when we became Christians we became members of the body of Christ and thus members one of another. The body becomes very helpless when one of its members does not function. Likewise, the Church becomes progressively impotent as members dissociate themselves from it; in fact those members are tying the hands of Christ. This basic principle may be applied to congregations that make up a conference or to denominations within the larger body of Christendom.—JJE

CONGRESSMAN REES of Kansas for several years has been trying to cut down the State Department's entertainment fund according to an Associated Press dispatch. He was defeated again this year when he tried to cut the $650,000 figure to $300,000; he insisted that he believed the people would be astonished to know how much of the taxpayer's money is used to buy liquor to entertain representatives of foreign nations. He was "booed down" by the popular kind of talk that laws have eliminated the moral issue in liquor.—JJE

WHILE THE GREAT TRUTH OF EASTER is in relation to the glorious redemption that has been wrought for us by Jesus Christ, another related conviction of which the first readers of the Gospels were much more aware of than we are is the emphasis upon the unique quality of the Christian life. The larger portion of all of the Gospels concern themselves with the passion of Jesus. It is therefore a correct interpretation that his suffering and death for us should have unique significance and emphasis; this is an inescapable Biblical conviction. But let us not fail to consider what this must have meant to the early Christians who were going through the fires of persecution for "the Way." This emphasis upon the suffering of Christ was intended to help them see that suffering was not something foreign to life. It was to show them that suffering was part and parcel of the highest kind of living; it is in the very nature of God who pours himself in atoning love into the stream of sinful humanity. To become a Christian then is not to make life easier; it is rather to make life meaningful. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above" involves knowing Christ in "the fellowship of his suffering" as His yearning heart still intercedes at the throne of the Father for those He came to save.—JJE

CONFERENCE SUNDAY is not a mutual agreement to admire an organization. In all other areas of life man has long ago found that he can do much more by working with others than he can by working alone. Imagine, for example, the difference between each family carrying on its own school and a number of families banding together and setting up a common school system. Or imagine what a city would be like if each property owner would be responsible for the stretch of road in front of his property. We rightly say it is unthinkable! But what we call unthinkable is one area we vigorously defend in another. The Reformation emphasis on individualism in the Church brought untold blessing, but where pressed to its logical conclusion it makes people do the completely irrational thing of denying their gifts or their interest and prayers to a part of the body of Christ because of some complaint while at the same time uncritically giving large sums in tax money to earthly organizations of a much more questionable nature. The support of the Church is much less optional than the support of these other organizations if comparisons are in order. Yet there are literally thousands of Christians who religiously pay every cent of their taxes knowing that part of it will go for such unquestionably wrong uses as buying whiskey to help the State department entertain foreign diplomats while they draw up agreements that will lead the world straight to war; at the same time they refuse to give to the Church—the very organization that Jesus himself ordained to help Christians bring the saving Gospel that binds men's hearts together—they refuse to give to this organization because some aspects are not quite in line with their own conceptions, and (in this area for some unknown reason) God holds them responsible for every penny.—JJE

A STARTLING REVELATION concerning the relationship of cigarette smoking to lung cancer among men was recently brought out at the meeting of the American Cancer Society in Memphis. It was reported in a study of 200 male sufferers of cancer 95.5 per cent of them had been heavy smokers for twenty years! Research doctors, apparently dreading the wrath that would fall upon them from the powerful cigarette trusts, attempted to soften the blow to the cigarette business by emphasizing the fact that there were plenty of cancer patients who did not smoke cigarettes and that there were plenty of smokers that do not have cancer! But the enormous part that increased cigarette consumption has had in the increase of cancer in America remains the emphatic message in this report.—Between the Lines.

Those who have suffered much are like those who know many languages—they have learned to understand all and be understood by all.—Selected

"That They All May Be One"

by Arnold E. Funk

Any efforts toward church unity must operate in two directions. On the one hand there must be a concern for an increasing spirit of concord and unity within the church fellowship and among the churches of the conferences. That spirit must be actively promoted. This is basic and primary. On the other hand along side of this there must be a prayerful and active endeavor to foster a closer cooperation between the various branches of the Mennonite faith and of other Christian faiths. All this is so fundamental that it is hard to see how as Christians we can neglect or avoid it.

In the Matter of Love — No Choice!

We do differ in a number of things. The fact that we differ temperamentally, that our experience varies one from another, that our cultural heritage is not the same in all respects, and various other contributing factors keep us from being uniform and from seeing things in all respects. But in the matter of love toward each other, in the matter of esteeming and appreciating each other as Christians we have no choice. To love God and to love each other is the first and greatest commandment of Christ. Without this love all effort toward unity is doomed to ultimate failure. With it no wall of separation can permanently stand between the churches of Christ.

Church Unity Sunday

With this in mind the Church Unity Committee at its session during the recent Council of Boards meeting decided to ask the Executive Committee to declare May 29th the Sunday preceeding Pentecost, as a Sunday to stress unity through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit resulting in a practical manifestation of love, power, and service throughout the churches of the Conference. We trust that this will be done and that the churches will respond to the suggestion.

Unity Pre-Supposes Understanding

But unity also pre-supposes understanding. Members within a family at times differ widely in viewpoint and in interest. Yet they consider this no obstacle to their family unity because they understand each other. They do not hold each other's motives in suspicion. It should be the same within a conference and between Christians of various persuasions.

No Understanding without Information

Therefore, anything that is done to promote this understanding is worth while. The fact that the Council of Boards meeting was held in Bloomington, near which there are a number of the churches of the Central Conference, was an opportunity to get acquainted and to promote understanding. Likewise the increasingly wide acceptance of the 100% church-paper plan within our conference fellowship will make for an informed membership. That kind of information promotes understanding. The same thing needs to be said with reference to the use of our conference Sunday School material and daily vacation Bible school material.

Only an informed membership will continue to carry on the Kingdom work which God has intrusted to us as a conference, and for which He holds us accountable. To information there is added understanding, to understanding there is added mutual appreciation, and to mutual appreciation there is added love. Only then will our Lord's opportunity to achieve His purpose in us and through us be vastly enlarged.

THE LACK OF CLEAR ASSURANCE is traceable to the lack of clear decision. If people are not sure of God, it is probably due to the fact that they have not opened up their lives by a clear decision so that He can come in and provide the only kind of proof for His existence—experience. If people are not sure of salvation, it is because not enough of their whole being—body, soul, mind, and will—have felt the saving touch of the Master's hand. If the world isn't sure about the way of the Cross it is because this way has ben hesitatingly tried and found difficult, not because it has been thoroughly tried and found wanting.—JJE

A Tornado Hits Canton

by Alfred Wiebe

Tuesday evening, March 29, we had the Berean Boys Octet with the brethren Waldo Harder and Ewert of Elbing, Kansas, with us. They gave a fine program of song, testimony, and message from God's word at the Indian church at Longdale. The people were much impressed with the singing and the program on the whole. It does our Christians good to come in contact with a group of consecrated Christians from other churches. I am sure a blessing was received from them.

After the close of the meeting we remained in the church to visit for a little while. We had four nephews in the group. By the time we got back home to Canton it was 11 o'clock. About 12:30 we were awakened by rain and a very strong wind. There was much noise in the air and objects were thrown against the house. We quickly arose and dressed, but before this was completed the wind had quieted down. However, we heard people calling, some were crying.

"De-Housed," Yet Uninjured

Going to the front door we found the porch roof torn off the house and part of it resting on the porch floor. The garage and a small shed in the back were still there uninjured. Going on to the street we found the home of an elderly couple half a block to the south completely demolished, yet they found themselves uninjured in their bed. The house across the street from them, where another old couple lived, was set over about eight feet and leaning precariously. The occupants had to be helped out through the window.

The houses on either side of ours had windows blown out, one roof damaged, a garage roof taken off, etc. A block to the north a Mormon church was completely destroyed and the Seventh Day Adventist Church just across the street from here had disappeared and so far no trace of it has been found. Very many homes and business establishments were damaged, completely destroyed, or carried off.

How Anyone Could Escape . . ?

How anyone could escape alive where houses were left in hardly more than splinters, is a miracle. Yet only one person was killed outright and two have died since. A number of people were injured. At one home the parents had just barely got their daughter out of her bedroom, when part of the house from across the street struck their house and went right through the girls bedroom. One Indian home was demolished and four of the occupants injured, two rather seriously.

At Longdale, seven miles to the north, two stores were flattened, one person killed, and one seriously injured.

Of the mission property only our front porch was torn off and the shade trees broken. The porch can be rebuilt, but it will take years for trees to grow to protect the house from the Oklahoma sun in summer. However, we have no reason to complain. On the contrary, our hearts are filled with gratitude to the Lord who has so graciously kept us from harm. Kind people came from far and wide to help those in need, and to clear away debris. We are very grateful to our co-workers from Clinton and Weatherford who arrived early in the morning to see how we fared and to help us get straightened out.

Other Missionaries Answer

What About China Now?

by Earl H. Ballou and Fred F. Goodsell

The American Board is not closing down its work, nor is it being closed out. Much—the Foochow and Shaowu Missions—continues only indirectly affected by the upheavals in the North. Important service is being rendered by all our missionaries, whether still located where they were or transferred to quieter areas. Of the 41 missionaries in the North China Mission three months ago, 29 decided to stand by. Only six left China. Two were on the verge of retirement, and three are now at work in the Philippines. The Foochow Mission has been strengthened by the transfer of two families from North China and the arrival of a new family from the United States.

Is This Determination to Stand By Justified?

Most certainly, on at least four counts:

(1) Chinese leaders requested it. Mr. S. C. Leung, General Secretary of the National Committee of the Y.M.C.A. in China and a Vice-Chairman of the International Missionary Council, in a remarkable address to a group of missionaries said: "Purely as a Chinese I would speak emotionally. This is a civil war in China. All the trouble has been created by ourselves. We have no right to expect our foreign friends to stay on and suffer with us. As a Christian, however, I must speak rationally. Whether from the standpoint of idealism or from the standpoint of realism it is better to have our foreign colleagues remain with us wherever this is possible. Ideally speaking the church is international in character and world-wide in scope. It is illogical for us not to prove that we are really an ecumenical church which transcends nationalities and races . . . The church is above politics and is religious in nature. Its object is to serve the people. So long as there are people to serve it is our duty to stay."

(2) Our own closest Chinese comrades in the North re-enforced the request. What David Stowe wrote from Tientsin when he and Virginia made their decision to stay—barely three weeks before the birth of their second child—is eloquent: "Why should we shatter the solidarity and morale which has been achieved through generations of missionary contracts, here, and through these months of common endeavor since our arrival in Tientsin? We found that our Chinese colleagues did not really feel that it was time for foreigners to flee—yet; and also that they did not worry about our being a handicap to them when the turnover comes."

(3) Our missionaries who have stayed on felt they could not do otherwise. There has been not a word of criticism of those who for sound reasons accepted the offer of the Board that they withdraw. But Stowe spoke for all who decided to stay when he said, "We have been preaching faith, courage, the utter dependability of God, to people in America and in China now for years. Was it not time to try translating those great ideas from words into action! If the church is to meet and overcome the world-wide challenge of Communism, somewhere it has to stop running and start digging in. This looks like a place to dig." Our faith and witness, as well as theirs, is strengthened by words like that.

(4) Our experience in North China to date buttresses this position. Fenyang (formerly called Fenchow) and Taiku were captured by the Communists in July. They found four American Board women there: Mary Dewar, Louise Meebold, Emma Noreen, and Gladys Williams. Word has seeped out under the curtain several times. It has been uniformly good. The pattern of Communist conduct toward Christian work, all too familiar during the past two years in other parts of the country, has been altered somewhat. Our hospitals at Fenyang and Taiku have continued to serve; our schools were asked to reopen; worship has continued in our churches.

Similar reports come from other areas. This new Communist attitude toward Christian work and foreigners—even "capitalistic representatives of imperialistic America"—may not be permanent. The screws may tighten within a few months. Our "task force" may then have to retire. To do so before then would be to acknowledge by default a defeat which may never take place.

What of the Future?

The prospects are not too bright. We know that the present liberality of treatment by the Communists is more likely to be tactical and temporary than evidence of change in fundamental policy. Yet their position in the country is shifting from that of rebels against the established order to that of rulers responsible for establishing a new order. They must, it would seem, begin to abandon practices which have been largely destructive, and begin to promote constructive efforts of many kinds. They are undertaking an enormous task, even if their control stops at the Yangtze—which seems unlikely. They must now fulfill at least a few of the promises they have made. They will need all the help they can get, and if wise they will antagonize as few as possible of those who might help the people. Our schools, hospitals, and rural reconstruction programs are too highly prized by the people to be wantonly destroyed.

Yet it requires faith almost to the point of credulity to believe that anything less than hard times are ahead for the Church in China. Such times began in North China for Lintsing and Tehsien in Shantung three years ago, and for Taiku and Fenyang last July; they are beginning right now for Tientsin, Paoting, Peiping, and Tungchow. We have no assurance that trouble does not await the Foochow and Shaowu Missions. The essential loyalty of Chinese Communist leaders to Moscow is a matter of record, oft reaffirmed over the years and recently reiterated in print, and over the radio.

Life will be hard for our work and our workers, for our missionary friends and our Chinese colleagues. Living conditions will be austere beyond anything our people have known. There will be long periods when communications with us will be slow, difficult, and perhaps impossible. There may be interdicts against foreign subsidies even for the strictly humanitarian parts of our program. There may be gradual but steady tightening of the screws—anti-religious and anti-foreign agitation, and the repudiation of some of what we regard as the essential freedoms of life.

The Past Three Years Have Been Invaluable

During this breathing space, between two struggles for survival, Chinese Christians have renewed their strength for whatever may lie ahead. They have received convincing evidence that Christians in this country—in a profound sense the spiritual parents of their churches, and under God the source of much of their religious nurture—have cared for them, do care for them, and will continue to care for them. They probably have a stronger "ecumenical consciousness" than do the majority of our church members here. They know that they belong to a worldwide fellowship.

Who can estimate what it has meant that:

Much property has been repaired and restored to active and continual use.

Relief of many kinds has been made available to meet desperate human needs.

Refresher courses have been possible for some of the more experiencd pastors and teachers.

A select few have even had the chance for a year of study and refreshment in America.

Old American friends have again been among them, serving in familiar ways, or bringinig new and fresh ideas, methods, and material equipment to replenish depleted and outworn stores.

At least a few new missionaries, young, vigorous, ardent, have become known to them, an earnest and pledge that the international comradeship of the Body of Christ shall not be broken by the inevitable attrition of the years.

We Must not Abandon Our Work in China Now

The American Board, in continual consultation with other boards as to the wisest and most effective methods, will maintain, serve and strengthen in every way possible those who are bearing the Christian witness amidst the shadows that envelop China. Our concerns are primarily with the people of China, and their needs abide, regardless of political changes. It would be cowardly to withdraw our help to Christian schools and Christian hospitals and the bearers of the Christian evangel until forced to do so by circumstances beyond our control. That time has not yet come—it may never come. Our relations are primarily with a part of the Christian community of China—our brothers and sisters in Christ, a part of the Body of Christ, the organism through which his spirit finds expression in society. We should suffer no less than they if we voluntarily cut ourselves off from them. May God help us to be as faithful as they will be!

TRANSFER OF WORLD CONFERENCE EXPENSE FUND TO MINISTERS' AID FUND

By action of the General Conference Executive Committee, in session February 17, 1949, the sum of $2,129.28. received at the General Conference Headquarters for Mennonite World Conference expenses, is being transferred to the Ministers' Aid Fund from which "needy ministers and needy widows of ministers" are rereceiving assistance.

The reason for this action is that the Mennonite Central Committee has received ample designated funds sent directly to Akron to pay for all World Conference expenses. This makes it unnecessary for our Conference to pay toward the overhead expenses originally anticipated.

The Executive Committee feels that with the above explanation donors will sanction this transfer of this amount to a worthy cause. Congregations are urged to remember the needs of the Ministers' Aid Fund.—Walter H. Dyck, Executive Secretary.

SO YOU ARE PLANNING A VACATION

nonite told us one day about his bicycle trip from Salt Lake City home to Pennsylvania in 1898 after the Spanish American war. Pushing the cycle along the railroad tracks across the Rockies, cycling over the arid, rutted, dusty Nebraska expanses came to mind over 45 years later. His daughters, also conservatively dressed, were great lovers of the open road having done a great deal of cycling and hosteling in Pennsylvania. Not only was his adventure his own, his children likewise benefited by it.

Youth of local churches along with leaders of local youth can have high adventure by planning a vacation together. By picking out points of interest including (1) points of scenic beauty such as parks, reserves, mountains, lakes, (2) visits which put you in touch with people such as at missions, churches, social agencies, camps, schools, and institutions, (3) points of cultural interest, cities, museums, trade centers, publishing firms, industry, the traveling team will make the trip a delight.

Such trips should be pilgrimages. A carload or two of young people will never cease talking about the time the old car broke down and two hours were spent wandering through the woods waiting for the garageman to make repairs.

The American Youth Hostels and the numerous hiking trails, particularly to be found in the East, offer unusual opportunities for Christian youth to have new outdoor experiences. The standards in the hostels are high, the cycling or hiking experience is most wholesome. The two following articles describe American Youth Hostels and the Appalachian Trail. For a group of young people, or for individuals who love to be out doors, here is a very stimulating way to spend a vacation.

The Reader Says

Quakertown, Pennsylvania
April 8, 1949

Dear Mennonite:—

My sojourn in the U. S. A. is drawing swiftly to a close, and soon I shall be home again trying to digest all that I have taken in here at this time—serving, traveling, visiting, and dealing with many people. All have been very good to me putting up patiently with my faltering English, taking care of me in the fine living quarters provided for me, trying to overfeed me at different tables, and surrounding me with friendliness and consideration in general.

Most of the meetings are well attended, and I believe the Lord is blessing His work. The harvest on the Day of the Lord will show what good came of the seeding which I was permitted to do.

It will do me good to return home to my house and family and to rest a while. Traveling grows more and more burdensome for me in spite of the many conveniences which can be bought enroute for a pretty penny. The trouble with me is that my pennies, as a rule, are not quite "pretty" enough to buy all that I could use; but I usually have what I need. It worries me, though, that I cannot stand as much inconvenience any more as I used to. In the night of March 27-28 I was rather sick in my berth between Chicago and Philadelphia, and I was afraid death had come to find me in the fast moving train. But I have thought that before, and I am still here. This time, also, I arrived at my destination alive, if not feeling too well, and was received kindly, first by Rev. and Mrs. Walter Dick, Philadelphia, and then by Rev. and Mrs. A. J. Neuenschwander, Quakertown, Pennsylvania. Tender care helped me to recover sufficiently, in time, to carry on with my program.

In Newton, Kansas, I spoke in two parallel series of services on the Bible, The Written Word of God," and "Jesus Christ, the Word of God Made Flesh." Here in Pennsylvania I am preaching, March 29 to April 10 intermittently, on "the Basic Principles of Christian and Mennonite Faith and Life," in two different meeting houses, and the attendance is usually good. Of course, if a great concert incidently coincides with my lecture, I come out second best. I hope that is because of me, and not because of the old gospel which I preach. That will not readily be modernized like the concerts with their sweet, (tranquillizing) melodies. The Gospel judges us, it lifts us, up, but it is generally disquieting, burdening us with responsibilities, and, therefore, not so easy to take.

Pennsylvania is beautiful in springtime with its farm lands, its big and small, clean villages, towns, and cities. I am glad that I could see it once more, and I hope, Ontario will don its best garb to greet me when I return home next week.

Jacob H. Janzen,
Waterloo, Ontario.

The Washington Scene

by Paul Goering

A relatively dead issue in national legislation is that of temperance. However, a number of bills have been introduced regarding the important matter. A few are of great significance.

In and near army camps

One proposed law would prevent the sale, giving away, or possession of liquor (including beer and ale) in army camps or any other type of military establishment of the country. This law would also prohibit the sale, giving away, or possession of beverage alcohol near to a "military camp, station, fort, post yard, air base landing field cantonment, training, or mobilization place." The Secretary of War would determine the distance from a camp within which liquor may not be sold.

Prisoners Relief

Another bill would grant $1,000,000 to the Prisoners Relief Society, through the Federal Security Administrator, for the treatment and rehabilitation of persons suffering from chronic alcoholism. A system of farms would be established for this treatment of drunkards.

Advertising of liquor

The most important bill would prohibit advertising of liquor across state lines. No mailings, magazines, newspaper, newsreels radio stations or similar means would be lawful for this interstate advertising. Likewise, interstate solicitation of liquor sales by these methods would not be lawful.

Moral Temperance, Character, Education

The Cole bill, H.R. 1707, would establish a Federal Board for Character Education. This Board would administer a program of teaching "subjects related to character training, including moral standards, ethics, temperance, and good citizenship." States would be helped financially to pay teachers in these subjects. Likewise money would be appropriated to help teachers in these subjects.

Can action be secured?

If enough citizens ask legislators for action on these bills, the congressional committees to which they are committed will schedule hearings and report the bills to Congress. AT PRESENT FEW CITIZENS ARE ASKING FOR ACTION ON THESE BILLS.

MENNONITE MEN FOR CHRIST

The Laymen's meeting of the Middle District Conference will be held Friday night, April 22, at the Grace Church in Pandora. The special speaker will be Dr. D. H. Gilliatt, professor of Practical Theology, Bonebrake Theological Seminary, Dayton, Ohio. Other features of the men's program are music by the Bluffton College Male Quartet and by the Swiss Men's Chorus.

Tool Program Temporarily Closed

AKRON PENNSYLVANIA. Current information from the various MCC warehouses indicate that the appeal for tools for the Mennonite refugee settlers in Paraguay and Uruguay has brought a heavier response than had been anticipated. This hearty response by the North American brotherhood is deeply appreciated, and the Mennonite settlers in South America will be able to utilize all of this equipment to good advantage.

In view of the additional cash and facility needs implied in the processing and shipping of this large amount of equipment, it is felt that local collection efforts should now be temporarily concluded.

A considerable amount of this equipment has already been packed and shipments are being made such as can be paid by funds allocated for this purpose, and which can be handled efficiently to the point of distribution. Shipment of the remainder will be made as facilities permit and as soon as additional necessary funds are available. Suitable storage is being provided temporarily as needed to keep this material in the excellent condition in which it was contributed.

Relief Shipments

During the month of March the following relief shipments, with total evaluation of $47,483,68 left port: to British Zone Germany, 3 tons food and clothing, 9 tons dried milk, and 10 tons baby food; to American Zone Germany, 8 tons food and clothing; to India, 1 ton clothing; to Austria, 28 tons mixed foods.

Migrant Camp Work

A unique setting for Voluntary Service is that in Florida where two MCC volunteers are serving in two migrant camps with populations of 600 and 1,000 respectively. These people move from place to place as they follow the harvest of garden vegetables. Childern of these families are idle while the adults work. The service of the unit consists of teaching and supervising activities of children, assisting in a day nursery, operating a home cannery for the benefit of the migrants, directing various leisure time activities, and conducting Sunday morning and evening worship services. The workers located here for the first part of their year of Voluntary Service, have been greatly challenged by the vision of this need which is about them.

Suggests Visits to Service Units

"I had no idea you were doing such a good work here. I think more people from the home churches ought to visit the unit and see what is going on." This was the expression of one visitor who came to observe the work done by the workers at Skillman State Village for Epileptics, Skillman, New Jersey. From time to time references are made to locations of various MCC service units. Local people are urged to visit these units, to become better acquainted with the work done and the total concept of Voluntary Service. The unit at Skillman, as well as certain other units, are open during the entire year.

WHAT PERCENTAGE?

By Charles A. Wells

General Omar Bradley commented recently on the folks who talk loud about being 100 per cent Americans, —when, in their responsibility to the community and state in spiritual and moral matters, they are really only 10 per cent Americans! We hear much today about armed power to keep America strong, when at best the Army and Navy can only be a very thin shell around what we really are as a people. All the armed power on earth cannot preserve a nation if it has grown selfish, irresponsible and neglectful within. Even science and education do not help to preserve the inner strength of a people unless a great spiritual core is there,—after all, the German Nazis led the world in many scientific developments when the war began. Even democracy is not enough. When World War II began, France had as great a love for democracy as ever; but self-seeking irresponsibility and spiritual disintegration had weakened the soul of France. Are you a 100 per cent American—or just a 10 per cent American?

Canadian College Adopts 100% Plan Again

One of the student projects of the Canadian Mennonite Bible College which has again been successfully carried out is the adoption of the 100 per cent subscription plan for our Conference periodicals. The students have accepted this plan for the second year. The Canadian Conference has encouraged this project by paying for a part of the subscription costs.

Rev. Andrew Shelly of Kitchener, Ontario, and Rev. Arnold Funk of Hillsboro, Kansas, were recent speakers in our chapel services and other student meetings. A meeting of the Conference Unity Committee with the Manitoba ministers brought them into our midst.

The Service Committee of the College was responsible for a Sunday evening program at the Bethel Mission church on April 3. A Lenten meditation was presented centering around the theme, "Gethsemane." April 15 the College choir will render the passion oratorio, "Das Suehnopfer" under the direction of Mr. John Conrad.

Freeman on Easter Tour

The YMCA and YWCA organizations have decided to have the joint project of raising money for the support of a Negro student for the coming year. It is hoped some other organization or church group will undertake to support another Negro student. The MCC is furthering such projects in Mennonite schools.

Margarete Schnebele of Germany attended the foreign-student meeting at Bluffton, Ohio, as the Freeman Junior College representative.

The new cabinet of the Student Association is now in operation. At the last meeting the cabinet agreed on the selection of a pressure pump, water cooler, and fountain for school use.

The College Student Christian Association elected Leona Schultz as the new president.

A home concert was presented by the College A Capella choir Sunday, April 10, in the College auditorium. On April 15, the choir left on a ten-day Easter tour to Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Canada.

Bethel Choir in Oklahoma Tour

The Bethel College A Cappella choir presented five concerts on a tour to Oklahoma during the Easter holidays. Programs were given in Meno, Geary, Corn, Cordell, and Deer Creek. Prof. Walter H. Hohmann, director, and Mrs. Anna Baumgartner, secretary of the Alumni Association, accompanied the group.

Two speech classes, under the direction of Prof. Wm. T. Wilkoff, traveled to Wichita on Friday, April 8 to visit the Institute of Logopedics. This institute is one of the centers of speech correction in Kansas. Mrs. D. M. Todd, Lawrence, a trained specialist in this field, addressed the Bethel College chapel on Thursday, April 7.

James W. Bixel presented students of his class in Harmony at the Friday music chapel. Teatske van der Zypp and Virginia Schroeder played their own piano compositions. A string quartet played Harold Moyer's work. Anne Dyck sang her vocal solo and a mixed quartet sang hymns composed by Randy Hohmann and Marvin Wasser.

Teatske van der Zypp, senior student from Holland, was presented in a music recital on Tuesday, April 19. Previously she studied three years in an Amsterdam conservatory of music. Miss van der Zypp's recital was composed almost entirely of Bach numbers.

Gertrude Hohmann, daughter of Prof. and Mrs. Walter H. Hohmann, was married to Marvin Dyck of Whitewater, Kansas, on Saturday, April 9, in the Bethel College chapel. Mrs. Dyck is instructor of voice at Bethel and Mr. Dyck is doing graduate work at the University of Kansas at Lawrence.

President Ramseyer Elected to Offfice

President Ramseyer was elected vice-president of the Ohio Association of Presidents and Deans at their meeting in conjunction with sessions of the Ohio College Association in Columbus April 8.

A number of faculty members attended the meeting of the Ohio College Association in Columbus April 8 and 9. President Ramseyer appeared on the program to give the report of the Teaching Aids Committee, of which he is chairman.

The Goshen College A Cappella chorus gave a concert in the First Mennonite Church, April 9 under the joint auspices of the college and the church.

The College Relief Committee, composed of students and faculty members, sponsored a soap drive during the week of April 4-9. Fat was donated by people of the community and the students made 445 pounds of soap. The committee also sold 600 large cakes of Ivory and Swan soap to students and members of the staff who in turn donated it for relief purposes.

Thursday, April 7, was "clean up day" on the Bluffton campus. This is an annual event participated in by faculty and students. A special project this year was moving trees out of the aboretum to make room for the new Auditorum-Physical Education building which is to be started in June.

The Vesper Choir sang Dubois' "The Seven Last Words of Christ at a vesper service Sunday afternoon, April 10. Soloist were Onnolee McClintock, Mary Lou Rich, Joanne Vercler, and Walter Treadway. The next Vesper service will be May 1 with Dr. J. A. Huffman as the speaker.

Seminary Staff and Students in Easter Services

The pre-Easter recess started Friday noon, April 8, and continued until April 19.

Missionary Orlando Waltner presented some very remarkable examples of answered prayer during a recent mid-week meeting, showing the wonderful pilgrimage of faith by which the missionaries carry on their program in difficult places. Don. E. Smucker had the pre-Easter services from April 10 through Easter Sunday at the First Mennonite Church of Berne, Indiana. Ronald von Riesen had the services at the Hoffnungsau Church near Inman, Kansas, of which Albert Gaeddert is the pastor. Erwin Goering did special work in the church at Meadows, Illinois. Missionary Harold Ratzlaff conducted a week's meetings at the First Mennonite Church of Nappanee, Indiana.

Among our recent visitors was Ray Pannabecker, brother of President S. F. Pannabecker, who is editor of The Gospel Banner, the official organ of the United Missionary Church and also business manager of Bethel College, Mishawaka, Indiana. It is interesting to note that the latter institution, organized just a few years ago, bears the same name as the well-known Mennonite institution at North Newton, Kansas. Elma Esau, Whitewater, Kansas, was in our fellowship recently while attending a three day meeting of church and government agencies dealing with displaced persons.

Bluffton Host to Foreign Students

BLUFFTON, OHIO. Forty-five foreign students attended the Foreign-Student Conference held on the Bluffton College campus April 1-3. They discussed problems which they encountered in adjusting to the economic, social, educational, and religious life as they found it on our college campuses. They also discussed the benefits which they felt that they had received from their year in America. There was evident a deep sense of appreciation for the opportunity which had been given them by this year of study.

President Miller of Goshen College gave the closing address of the conference, a forceful presentation of the values which he felt had been achieved by the student exchange program. Eight Mennonite and affiliated schools were represented in this conference. Presidents of five of these institutions attended the business meeting of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges held in conjunction with this conference.

The following countries were represented, the number from each country being given: Germany 16, Holland 10, France 2, Italy 4, India 1, Mexico 1, Switzerland 2, Brazil 2, Paraguay 5, and China 2, making a total of 45 foreign students.

Schools represented were Bluffton with 5, Bethel 10, Freeman 1, Eastern Mennonite 1, Goshen 12, Tabor 10, Mennonite Biblical Seminary 1, Messiah Bible College 4, Western Reserve 1 (this person formerly attended a Mennonite school)

Jottings

—First Church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: Rev. A. E. Kreider was the guest speaker during Holy Week services. The choir presented the cantata, "Penitence, Pardon, and Peace" by J. H. Maunder on Palm Sunday. A fellowship hour was held after the service.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: With the playing of Malotte's "Lord's Prayer" for the prelude by our organist, Mrs. S. C. Sprunger, our congregation was thrilled to hear for the first time the organ just recently installed by the Schantz Organ Factory of Orrville, Ohio, on the morning of April 3. Dedication services will be planned later. In keeping with Arbor Day, the Junior Christian Endeavor had a special speaker to talk about trees. He then handed out a bag containing three walnut seeds and one chestnut for each child to take home and plant. Thirty-two Endeavorers were present for this event on April 3. —Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

—St. John Church, Pandora, Ohio: A three weeks evangelistic campaign was held in the tri-county area during January. The first half was held in this church, and the latter half in Bluffton. Rev. Earl Jensen was the speaker and Jack Rollings the song leader. Much interest was shown, many souls were saved, and others were drawn closer to Him. The Lord is blessing the four-class system which was recently organized for our mid-week prayer and Bible study hour. This enables the entire family to attend these services. The project of excavating, cementing, and finishing the remaining portion of the church basement is nearing completion. Much of the labor was furnished by the Men's Brotherhood.

—Bethel Church, Waka, Texas: The Mennonite Brethren Male Chorus from Hooker, Oklahoma, presented a program here on the afternoon of March 20. A group from here attended the Church Workers Conference at Kismet, Kansas, on March 30. They returned with new zeal and determination to put some of the plans presented there into practice. April 3 our church was in charge of the program at the monthly meeting of Community Christian Fellowship at the Waka Brethren Church.—Mrs. Herman Wiebe, Corr.

—Eden Church, Moundridge, Kansas: March 15 a program was held at the church honoring Rev. C. J. Goering on his 80th birthday. The Choral Society has been rehearsing for weeks in preparation for the annual rendition of Handel's "Messiah" on Easter Sunday evening. Parts of the "Messiah" were sung over station KSAL during the regular Sunday morning broadcasts.

—Alexanderwohl Church, Goessel, Kansas: The Men's Octet from Bethel College gave a program of music here on March 13. Two young brethren, Milton Reimer and Rudolf A. Klassen, were ordained as deacons on March 20. The topic of Rev. P. A. Wedel's sermon was "Kept by the Power of God," from I Peter 1:5. Following this a communion service was held. —Katie Wedel, Corr.

—Calvary, Church Barlow, Oregon: The Sunday School classes among the young people have sent forty-two pairs of new shoes and twenty-five pairs of hose and stockings to Akron, Pennsylvania. March 27, pastor Solomon Mouttet of the Go Ye Mission, Choteau, Oklahoma, showed colored pictures and gave a message on the work being done there. Pastor Andrew Shelly, Kitchener, Ontario, Canada, spoke in behalf of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, Illinois, on March 29.—Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr.

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Oregon: The Women's Missionary Society presented a program in the church Sunday evening, April 3. Speakers were Mrs. Grace Burch, Mrs. John Berkey, Mrs. Herb Reginebeck, and Mrs. Ivan Learfield. They told of the work being done at home, in the community, at mission stations, and in the overseas relief program. Music was furnished by Mrs. George Fast on the vibra harp, a trio, and a ladies double quartet.—Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr.

—Belleview Church, Columbus, Kansas: The program given by the Men's Octet from Bethel College was enjoyed by an appreciative congregation. A basket dinner was served after the meeting. The women's Bible class held their monthly meeting in Columbus with Miss Anna Van Cura as hostess and Mrs. Louise Jennings as leader. Mrs. Henry Thiessen is receiving medical treatment in Kansas City.—Marie Heinrichsmeier, Corr.

—Bethesda Church, Marion, South Dakota: Dedication services for shoes was held March 27 when the Sunday school children brought eighty-eight pairs of shoes with more than that amount of stockings to the front. Twelve pairs were bought from the money collected. Nine mending kits and eight shoe repair kits were prepared by individuals and a Sunday school class. Passion Week services were conducted by Rev. Albert Ewert, Rev. J. J. Regier, Rev. Hugo Mierau, and Dr. Harold H. Gross.—Amelia Becker, Corr.

—Zoar Church Goltry, Oklahoma: An Easter cantata and testimonies were given by the Oklahoma Bible Academy here April 6. A quartet accompanied by Dr. and Mrs. Suckau from Grace Bible Institute were with us on April 12. Six persons were taken into the church on Easter Sunday.—Corr.

—First Church, McPherson, Kansas: Officers of the Christian Endeavor recently distributed thirty dollar-bills among the members of the church. These persons are to put the dollars to work in projects of their choosing, and raise as much money as possible until this fall when the money will be collected. Such interesting projects as baking, sewing, and raising chickens have been started. Rev. Ross Wood of the McPherson Baptist Church conducted the morning worship service in our church on March 13, while Rev. Roland Goering served in the Bethany church near Kingman, Kansas. The work on the church building is progressing nicely. Rev. Elbert Koontz of the Hebron church near Buhler exchanged pulpits with our pastor February 20.—Marie Stucky, Corr.

—Salem Church, Freeman, South Dakota: The Salem Home for the Aged in Freeman was dedicated March 27. March 20 Missionary Albert Jantzen spoke on the work of the General Conference, emphasizing the needs of the mission fields. The Christian Youth Volunteers of Freeman Junior College presented a program on March 6.—Alice Kaufman, Corr.

—First Church, Halstead, Kansas: Members of the Walton Mennonite Christian Endeavor were the guests of the Christian Endeavor meeting on March 13. The film, "Queen Esther, was shown after which a social hour was held. The choirs of the Mennonite, Methodist, and Presbyterian Churches have combined a union choir which will present an Easter cantata on Easter Sunday evening. Men of the congregation spent a day at Newton dissembling horse-drawn implements to be sent to South America. —Betty Jean Franz, Corr.

—Emmaus Church, Whitewater, Kansas: The Western District Young People's Rally was held in our church March 20. The retreat committee was in charge of both the afternoon and evening programs. A lunch was served in the church basement.—Marie E. Fast, Corr.

So You Are Planning a Vacation?

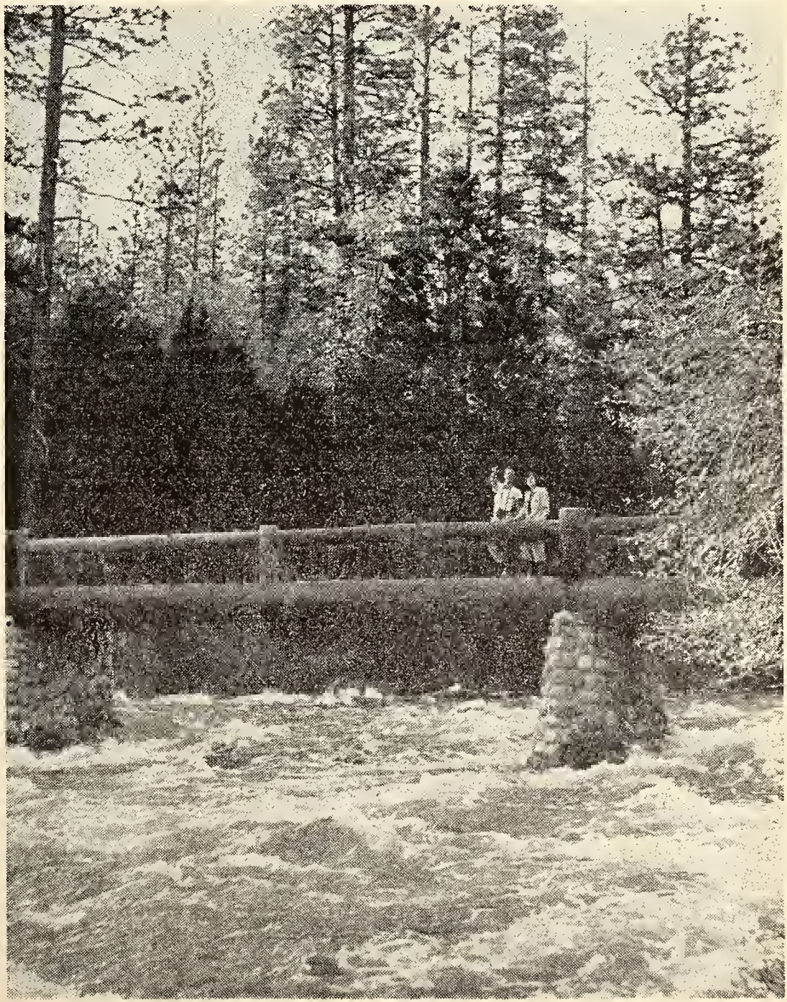
So you are poring over travel folders and road maps trying to decide how to spend those precious two weeks vacation? You are saving pennies laying them back for the long-looked-forward-to respite from the daily grind. You are one with thousands of others who have the wanderlust. The American highway, house trailer, car, and cabin camp all are silent evidence that thousands like you feel the beck and call of the open road.

Not only that, there have been wanderers on the highways as far back as memory can carry. Those medieval folk, of course, didn't have just two weeks to spend. But, they did have the same urge to make a pilgrimage. But, to them a pilgrimage was a trip to a religious shrine—Canterbury, Notre Dame, St. Peter's at Rome, and countless other shrines or cathedrals where one could worship. Jerusalem and Bethlehem have been and still are a great attraction for a pilgrimage.

And, when we see Joseph and Mary in Bethlehem and Jerusalem, they were there on a religious pilgrimage, not solely because of Roman decree. Festive Jerusalem on a Passover day was filled with pilgrims taking their annual vacation from woodworking, farming, or dealing in pearls.

They went on pilgrimages in those days. Today we take a vacation. They sought spiritual renewal in those days through worship, prayer, and sacrifice. We seek renewal today through release from common drudgery, the work of each day, the facing of responsibility.

In this issue, there is suggestive program material for an evening's youth meeting. It could be spent on "Ways of Spending a Vacation" with the objective in mind of bringing out creative, stimulating new experiences that are possible for a vacation. There would doubtless be many ideas that could be shared.



The vacation of today can be made a rich, spiritually renewing experience as well as a respite from daily duty. Church youth, full of energy, always ready for something new would like nothing better than a trip. They would love to gather needed money, get an ancient jalopy and motor off to far and interesting places. Such experiences are never-to-be-forgotten. Years later, tales will be told about the trip a bunch of youth took together.

American Youth Hostels — A Call to Outdoor Life

HOSTELERS trekking the last mile of the Horseshoe Trail in Pennsylvania. In the distance it connects with the Appalachian Trail.

Hosteling, once a magic word limited to fortunate foreign wanderers, has become an American institution. Thousands of American Youth Hostelers now leave home and make leisurely progress by foot or cycle through miles of picturesque country.

For the most part, American Hostels are farms where the friendly farm folk, or "houseparents," have set aside part of their house or a farm building for the use of traveling youth. Separate sleeping quarters for boys and girls, and common cooking and recreation rooms are made available.

The houseparents supply blankets, beds, and cooking facilities, but the hosteler brings his own sheet, sleeping sack, plate, knife, fork, spoon, and cup. Meals he usually cooks for himself, joining with other young people in the hostel. Light equipment is carried in a knapsack on his back or his bicycle.

With a budget of from $1.50 to $1.75 a day the hosteler can manage very well, for vegetables and fruit are not expensive in rural areas. Overnight fees in the hostels are only 40 cents for youths and 50 cents for adults.

Two dollars for a youth-pass and three dollars for an adult-pass (if 21 or over) will open the way for the hosteler to visit any or all of the 200 hostels in the United States. An additional 50 cents will buy a foreign travel sticker, his "ticket" to the thousands of hostels now open in 19 nations.

The U. S. hostels are located from ten to forty miles apart and usually are in chains, loops, or networks so that the hosteler can pedal his way to a new hostel each day. Although most hostelers plan their own itineraries and start out on their own or with a few friends, some 2,000 young folks are expected to join the AYH sponsored trips this summer. Of this number about 500 will hostel in Europe, another 500 will take international trips on this continent—to Mexico, Canada, Alaska, and 1,000 more will take shorter trips under the auspices of local AYH offices throughout the United States.

One of the most popular of the international sponsored trips is the Rolling Youth Hostel—a railroad car equipped as a hostel takes the travelers across Canada and back through the United States. On this trip 9,000 miles are covered by train and another thousand by bicycle, for each hosteler takes his bike along and hauls it out for side trips to interesting spots along the way.

The average hosteler is of high school or college age, and he agrees with the educators who say that hosteling is a good method of learning outside the classroom. It brings young people of different backgrounds together under wholesome conditions, and helps them all to learn more about their own states, their country, and about other nations too.

It was in 1933 that Isabel and Monroe Smith, former teachers, made a study of Youth Hosteling in Europe. In 1934 they founded the first hostel at Northfield, Massachusetts, now the National Headquarters. Known to thousands of hostelers as "Isabel and Monroe," the founders have for 15 years been enthusiastic promoters of hosteling throughout the United States and the world. They have succeeded in enlisting the support of nationally known educators and civic leaders and both are optimistic about the future of AYH. Mr. John D. Rockefeller the Third is president of the organization and during the past year Dr. Ben W. Miller, former executive secretary of the American Association for Health, Physical Education and Recreation, became executive director.

The purpose of American Youth Hostels is "To help build a more peaceful world through the wide and happy comradeship of youth by providing youth hostels in America, sponsoring youth hostel trips here and abroad, and making the educational benefits of travel youth's common heritage."

Youth groups everywhere are invited to participate in the hosteling program—on either an individual or a group basis. Passes may be obtained from local AYH councils or from national headquarters. A Youth Organization Pass, which admits eight young people and two adults or nine young people and one adult leader, costs only $5.00.

Hosteling is for those who want a really different kind of vacation—one that costs less and is worth more.

To get information about hosteling, write American Youth Hostels, Inc., Northfield, Massachusetts.

The Appalachian Trail—A 2050 Mile Foot Path

The Appalachian Trail is a continous, marked path—for travel on foot—extending through the mountain wilderness of the Eastern Atlantic States. It is, in its ideal, a skyline route along the crest of the ranges generally referred to as Appalachian—hence the name of this Trail. It extends from Katahdin, a massive granite monolith in the central Maine wilderness, some 2,050 miles south to Mt. Oglethorpe in northern Georgia. At the present time this master Trail has been initially opened throughout its length, marked and measured. The last part of the Trail to be completed was two miles on Mt. Sugarloaf in western Maine; these were completed in August, 1937. The Trail traverses fourteen states. Its greatest elevation is 6,641 feet at Clingmans Dome in the Great Smokies. The Trail is only slightly above sea level where it crosses the Hudson River at Bear Mountain.

A project of real magnitude, The Appalachian Trail might seem to have been the result of many suggestions. It can, however, be traced directly to one man—Benton MacKaye, of Shirley Center, Massachusetts, Forester, philosopher, and dreamer, Mr. MacKaye conceived the plan of a trail which, for all practical purposes, should be endless. To MacKaye's mind this trail should be the backbone of a primeval environment, a sort of retreat or refuge from a civilization which was becoming too mechanized. MacKaye first presented his plan through an article, "The Appalachian Trail—An Experiment in Regional Planning," in the October, 1921, issue of the Journal of American Institute of Architects. Others had previously advanced suggestions of extensive trails in the New England States but the conception of this super-trail was solely MacKaye's. His proposal aroused interest among leaders of the outdoor clubs in the northeast. Clubs in New York City were the first to undertake actual work on this new Trail. Under the leadership of the late Raymond H. Torrey, the first section of the Trail was opened and marked during 1922 in the Palisades Interstate Park. For it, Major William A. Welch, then General Manager of the Park, designed the distinctive Appalachian Trail marker and monogram. The New York-New Jersey Trail Conference was organized and the Trail carried west towards the Delaware River. Pennsylvania was also a seat of early activity.

To get information about the Trail, write The Appalachian Trail Conference, Inc., 1916 Sunderland Place, N.W., Washington 6, D.C.

To gauge better the extent of this undertaking, it is of interest to turn back twenty years to survey the then existing trail systems which could be incorporated into The Appalachian Trail and the organized groups which could be enlisted to further the project. First, and most striking, is the fact that all outdoor organizations in the East were confined to New England and New York. The Hudson River was then the frontier to the south or west.

The existing trail systems, which could be incorporated into this super-trail, numbered four. First, there were the splendidly maintained Appalachian Mountain Club trails in New Hampshire. However, until the completion of the Appalachian-Mountain-Club chain of huts in the White Mountains, the east and west axis of this system did not develop; previously it had been a series of north and south trails. In Vermont the lower 100 miles of the rapidly developing "Long Trail," begun in 1910, could be utilized. Between the White and Green Mountains was the Dartmouth College Outing Club trail system. In New York there were the comparatively narrow Bear Mountain and Harriman sections of the Palisades Interstate Park. This was all—perhaps 350 miles out of a necessary 2,050. Originally, however, the Trail was estimated to be only 1,200 miles in length; its actual development has demonstrated the distance to be almost twice as long. In addition to these four sections—in the South were the National Forests, where connected skyline trails were subsequently developed to a degree unanticipated by those who early formulated The Appalachian Trail route.

In addition to the development of an actual trail, The Appalachian Trail Conference has issued very extensive literature on trail technique and attendant phases of trail construction. These are listed under various topics in the section, "List of Publications." For a person who has had no prior experience in travel along The Appalachian Trail or on other trails, the Conference particularly commends its Publication No. 15, Suggestions for Appalachian Trail Users. This publication has been prepared to answer many types of inquiry addressed to the Conference. The subjects covered in this publication are indicated supra. A perusal of the booklet will be of value even to the experienced trail traveler.

Never to be forgotten experiences take place around camp fires. Church youth, following the open trail together, can acheive new heights of fellowship and worship there.

Of primary importance is the issuing of guidebooks to the Trail. The measuring of the Trail and the obtaining of trail data have kept progress with the actual construction of the Trail. A great number of local guides have crystalized into a series of five guidebooks for the entire Appalachian Trail. The appropriate volume for each state is indicated on the reverse side. The Conference has also issued a comprehensive pamphlet, detailing the history, route, guidebook data and literature on the Trail project.

The guidebooks for The Appalachian Trail furnish necessary information preliminary to the trip. Accommodations are specifically set forth. The accommodations along the Trail route are of two types; public, such as farmhouses, inns or camps on or adjacent to the Trail; the second class is the shelter of the open type, known as a "lean-to."

Shelters, closed and open, are absolutely essential to a finished through Trail. The ideal is a continuous chain of such structures at intervals of a moderate day's journey, say ten miles. Since 1937 the plan of providing a continuous chain of open shelters along The Appalachian Trail has been vigorously pressed by the Conference. Each year, in the January issue of Appalachian Trailway News, there appears a list of the lean-tos along the route. As of 1942, there were in all some 150 of these open lean-to structures along the Trail, representing an increase of 103 since 1937. In three sections there are long continuous units. In Maine, from the Kennebec River through the White Mountains, there is an unbroken chain of 27 structures. In the Central Appalachians in Southern Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Northern Virginia, there has been developed a continuous chain of very high order of construction of some thirty-five lean-tos, extending over an area of 256 miles. In the far Southern Appalachians, in the contiguous Pisgah National Forest and Great Smoky Mountains National Park, there is a chain of sixteen structures, extending over a distance of 137 miles. Further additions are being made to the continuous chain in the Nantahala and Chattahoochee National Forests, where there are now (1942) gaps between existing structures. The Trail through the publicly-owned lands will soon be "complete," as far as this chain of lean-tos is concerned.

And now a brief word as to the route or geography of the Trail. From Katahdin in Maine, the Trail leads for 266 miles through an utter wilderness, past lake and stream over a disconnected series of peaks. It meets its first pronounced mountain group in the White Mountains of central New Hampshire, which it crosses from east to west. Near Rutland, Vermont, the trail turns south for 100 miles through the Green Mountains. In western Massachusetts and northwest Connecticut, the route leads along the Berkshire and Taconic groups, the worn-down remnant of a once much loftier range. The Hudson River is crossed at Bear Mountain Bridge. Then the Trail leads close to the New York-New Jersey line, over a seemingly endless series of ridges on its course to the Kittatinny Mountains at High Point Park. Here, for the first time, a narrow ridge crest indicates the route. Beyond the Delaware River, this front range of the Alleghenies becomes the Blue Mountain; when the Susquehanna River is crossed, the same range has assumed the name of North Mountain. After seven miles along North Mountain occurs the first major change of route; the Alleghenies are left and the Trail crosses the Cumberland Valley, by secondary roads, to the northern base of the Blue Ridge. Here commences the range which is followed to the southern terminus of the Trail. Through southern Pennsylvania and Maryland, where it bears the name of South Mountain, the Blue Ridge continues as a narrow crest line where Trail location offers few problems. Three hundred miles south in Virginia, where the Roanoke River breaks through the range, the Blue Ridge forks. These forks, sometimes 100 miles apart, form an immense oval, coming together again at Springer Mountain in northern Georgia, twenty miles from the southern terminus of the Trail. Lofty transverse ranges, enclosing beautiful elevated valleys, connect the two forks. The effect is a massive ladder. The eastern rim or fork preserves the name Blue Ridge; the western rim is divided into segments by the rivers which cross it. The major route problems of the Trail came here—which fork to use and how much of each fork? There was one fixed point—the Trail must pass through the Great Smokies, the master chain of the Southern Appalachian Mountains, located midway along the western rim. The ultimate route utilizes the eastern rim as far as New River in southern Virginia, then crosses the plateau between the rims to the western fork at the Iron Mountain and continues south. At the southern end of the Great Smokies, a cross-range, the Nantahala Mountains, leads back to the eastern rim or Blue Ridge, which is followed uninterruptedly to Mt. Oglethorpe, the southern terminus of the Trail, where the Appalachian Mountains end abruptly. Beyond is the costal plain.

This brief resume merely serves to indicate the character of the Appalachian Trail. Its successive changing zones of bird, animal and plant life fascinate the traveler. It is indeed a guide to the study of nature. Of it has been written by one who served it well during an all too short life: "Remote for detachment, narrow for chosen company, winding for leisure, lonely for contemplation, the Trail leads not merely north and south but upward to the body, mind and soul of man."

Beyond Our Own

NEW YORK.—"Most mothers accept the old fatalistic attitude that every so often men and women must bleed and burn and die in another war," says Victoria Booth Demarest, granddaughter of the founders of the Salvation Army, and popular evangelist and founder of a new organization for peace. Mrs. Demarest who herself lost a son in the war, is convinced that mothers, through their children, have great influence on the thinking and actions of a race and that millions fail to use it rightly. The new organization called "The World Association of Mothers for Peace" has 1,200 members from all over the world with a wide program of reading books on world affairs and character training, building a world-wide prayer union for peace, corresponding with mothers of other countries, and holding meetings to discuss how they may work for the cause of peace.

LATIN AMERICA.—One hundred delegates of Latin American Protestant churches will hold an Evangelical Conference in Buenos Aires, July 18 to 30, for the first time in twenty years. The meeting will be sponsored by eight Latin American Evangelical Councils, and the Committee on Cooperation in Latin America, a division of the United States Foreign Missions Conference. The delegates will consider the place of Protestantism in a heavily Catholic region, and will hearten Protestant missionary strategy and priorities.

NEW YORK CITY. — Preliminary plans to hold a Home Missions Congress in Columbus, Ohio, January 24-27, are being made by the Home Missions Council of North America. The event will be the first of its kind in twenty years. Its purpose is to develop a sound strategy of home missions for the next decade and to launch a forward movement for the fuller Christianization of America.

MANY YOUNG PEOPLE WANT HONESTLY to face the question of whether they are wanted by God in a church vocation, in what we have popularly called "full-time Christian service." Often, however, by the time they come face to face with this challenge they have already had considerable experience in work leading up to some other vocation. Their actual experience in Christian work may be much more limited. This tends to make young people have a sense of inferiority regarding this unknown field; this makes the individual hesitant to consider Christian service. Perhaps this is the reason why in a certain church which is probably typical there were no people going into a church vocation for a period of thirty years. Voluntary Service gives young people a real opportunity for experience that will help them make an intelligent decision at this point. They may have this experience early enough to be able to make an intelligent decision.—JJE

"ACCENT ON ACTION" is the title of a booklet that lists the various opportunities in General Conference Voluntary Service. Undoubtedly many young people of the churches are making or have made decisions about Voluntary Service. This is not only a decision on the part of young people. It is also a decision for parents. Will they be willing to encourage their children to accept these opportunities at the cost of their own plans for the summer or even the long-range future? Will they succumb to the temptation of saying that they will leave it up to the children while proceeding to point out advantages of staying at home without positive encouragement to go? There was a member of a sect that does not believe in secondary education who made the statement to one who was carrying out an educational survey in a rural area that the decision to send his children to school would be the decision whether he would have another farm or not. There is absolutely no way of justifying our tendency to "accent the material" before our young people at a time when the world is falling apart due to the lack of the "accent on the spiritual."—JJE

IT IS NOT CONVINCING ENOUGH in our time for a person to affirm simply that he is a Christian. We have adjectives and we ask whether a given person is a "Bible-believing Christian," or a "socially-minded Christian," or a "born-again Christian," etc. Such a situation is indicative of a diseased condition in the Church of Christ. It means that the whole Gospel has not been preached. It means that a vital aspect of the message of the Gospel has been left out leaving an opportunity for some group to emphasize the neglected point. In their zeal to emphasize the neglected point they often forget about the rest and commit the same sin as the group they are trying to correct. There is need for a re-assertion of the full Gospel of the Living Christ as revealed in the Scriptures. That is the intense need of a divided world—ONE GOSPEL.—JJE

It's an old argument whether the Christian flag or the American flag should be on its own right in church.

Authorities on one side argue that the Christian flag should take precedence and cite the fact that the chaplain's flag on shipboard flies above Old Glory during divine services. Others quote the National Flag code to the contrary, point out that the "Christian flag" is not universally recognized and there is no authority for its proper display. Fact is, Europeans wonder at our use of a national emblem without the sanctuary of an international faith; overseas, flags are not allowed in church, and they got in here only with World War I's upsurge of patriotic fervor.

Now Rev. William E. Hill Jr., of West End Presbyterian church, Hopewell, Virginia, has been in hot water with patriotic organizations because he sees eye to eye with the Europeans, went as far as to remove a flag from a casket before it entered the church. They charge him with "insulting the flag," while he denies any such intent and declares the church is for allegience "to God alone."—The Christian Advocate

INVENTORY OF CONTRIBUTIONS DURING FIRST QUARTER OF 1949

The March 1 issue of the MENNONITE gave a summary of the budgets proposed by each of the boards and committees of the General Conference. The total of those budgets is $752,760.00; the total receipts for the first three months of this year is $127,298.70. One-fourth (25%) of the year has passed, but only about 17% of our total budget has been met.

Only two of the boards with lesser budget needs have met their quota in this period, while those boards needing large amounts are far short of meeting their needs. The expenses of the various boards, such as payment of salaries of missionaries and workers on the field and their operating expenses, must be paid regularly throughout the year, so we must ask that our constituency give regularly throughout the year. No large reserve of funds was carried over from the past year by any one of the boards. We ought to raise the contributions during this current quarter above the giving of the past quarter so that the boards will be able to meet all their obligations.

Respectfully submitted,
A. Theodore Mueller, Office Manager

These Necessary Steps

by Joanna S. Andres

It is one thing to have at hand a completely outlined course for the school session as we step before a group of children intrusted to us and quite another thing to be prepared to use the course efficiently. To use efficiently the summer Bible school material will still exact from the teacher the procedure of a thorough preparation.

Heart Preparation

Dependence—No materials, however good, can ever take the place of the teacher's inner preparation. She must still determine to receive her basic preparation on her knees before Him Who by His grace giveth to all that ask, wisdom and understanding. Without the assurance of the presence of Him of Whom it is said, "He that is perfect in knowledge is with thee," she dare not go forth to her task.

THE KEY TO EFFICIENT TEACHING IS TO REMEMBER TO DRINK DEEPLY FROM THE FOUNTAIN OF THE WATER OF LIFE WHICH IS ABLE AND ENPOWERED TO SPRING UP UNTO ETERNAL LIFE!

Commitment—No materials, however good, will give the teacher that humility of heart and consecration to her task that shall allow her to do every phase of her teaching program for no other reason except as unto Him in obedience to His command "Feed my lambs"! Such a humble commitment with the prayer for the cleansing of heart, of self willing and seeking, she must attain on her knees before the One Who searches the heart and Who within Himself holds that commanding, demanding authority to exact our all for Him and none for self.

Nurture—No materials, however good, will give the teacher that fulness of heart which she can alone attain in the quiet hour of prayer and the reading of the Word. When the cup of the heart overflows with the richness and the fulness of spiritual nurture, the teacher is ready to take in her hand the well prepared course which she has been asked to use in the nurture of the children committed to her care.

Love—No materials, however good, will give the teacher the necessary teacher-pupil relationship of love one toward another which opens the door to the child's heart. Consciously, wholeheartedly, she must submit herself to be a vessel of Divine love—a vessel of the Spirit that shall make her beloved to the child and the child to her.

General Preparation

The teacher must familiarlize herself with the entire course. Such a familiarity need not mean the reading of the entire course series, but only the studying of the objectives and content pages of the individual courses. Doing this, she will find herself and her part within the plan of the whole. She will glean a clearer vision of the scope and the limitation of her appointed part.

The teacher must familiarize herself more extensively with the courses which have preceded in the teaching program of the child committed to her. It is needful to teach on foundations already laid that the "building" can go forth in solid form and order.

The teacher must familiarize herself with the specific course she has been asked to teach It is insufficient and entirely inadequate to tackle each lesson unit as the days of the school term run their course. The teacher must be familiar with all of the teacher's manual and all of the pupil's workbook before teaching the individual lesson units.

The teacher must familiarize herself with the needs of her children, the equipment of the school, the length of the school term, the opportunities for music, for recess, and for carrying out suggested projects. What good is a course well mastered if it does not meet the needs of those for whose sake it was mastered? The teacher must know as far as possible by fact accumulation, by vigilant observance, the needs of her children: How far are they in spiritual growth? What is their peculiar need? Are there problems of a special nature in the home that call for special teaching, special understanding? It is necessary also to know the facilities the school offers in regard to equipment and the opportunity to acquire additional needful equipment. Of special importance it is to determine the sufficiency of materials for the time term of school. Should the school convene less than ten days, what materials can be left out without hindering the working out of the objectives? Should the school term be scheduled for more than ten days, what should be the additional material inserted in order that they will strengthen the purposed objectives sought? Or, does the specific course offer sufficient materials for the extended school term?

Specific Preparation

Knowing the course and the needs, the limitations and the possibilities, the teacher is now ready to draw her master-plan. She is now ready to make the over-all plan for the day of school and the minute plan for each day's teaching. She will apportion her time, her materials; she will choose her songs, her projects. She will even have outlined some emergency procedures as materials for the fast-working child, materials or activity for the rainy recess, for the rainy pre-school periods. She will have determined the place and effectiveness of recognition seals or small honor awards.

Having drawn the master-plan, the teacher is ready for the daily class preparation. It is not enough

Biography of a Missionary Parsonage

by Mrs. Alfred Habegger

Since the Busby parsonage was built in 1904, forty-five years ago, only two families have occupied it. These are the Rev. G. A. Linscheid family who built it and lived in it for fifteen years, and the Rev. Alfred Habegger family who have occupied it for thirty years. This year a change is to be made and the Rev. Malcolm Wenger family will be the new residents.

Thirty years of "a heap o' living" in a house cause one to leave it with mingled feelings. It would be nice to live on indefinitely in a home where all ones memories of the past linger, but since this is not possible, we go on to new fields of labor.

'Versatile' Rooms

At times this house of six rooms seemed too small, especially when the six children were all at home. Now it seems big and empty since the children have all left us and we have been alone for seven years. While they were all at home, every available space had to be used—even the upstairs which is only an attic and not finished nor heated. If the children did not stir in the morning I feared they might have perished by freezing. The enclosed sunporch had to meet the emergencies of being a play room, a dining room, a laundry, and even a mortuary, according to circumstances. The big living room, aside from its real and intended use, saw many weddings, an operation, a birth, and a death.

In the big kitchen and dining room combined, many happy meals were served to the children and to many distinguished guests. Among the latter were: Rev. J. W. Kliewer, Rev. C. E. Krehbiel, Rev. P. J. Wiens, Rev. H. J. Brown, Rev. W. C. Voth, Rev. Howard Nyce, Rev. Alfred Waltner, Rev. and Mrs. D. J. Unruh, Rev. and Mrs. A. E. Kreider, Dr. and Mrs. S. K. Mosiman, Rev. and Mrs. S. T. Moyer, Mrs. R. A. Goerz, Sister Frieda, Mrs. Frieda Regier Entz, and Dr. and Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz.

In the study, which is also an office, first aid was administered, letters written for Indians, telephone calls made, weddings performed, and pastoral duties of personal work, confessions and prayers.

Aside from the work connected with the Mission were the more ordinary events of our family life. When we came we had a son, Marden, sixteen months old. Six other children, Jeanne, Helen, Esther, David, Lois, and Bernard followed within twelve years. David was the only one born at the parsonage, he decided to be born at Busby, without a doctor rather than in a hospital at Forsyth, eighty-five miles distant. Bernard stayed with us only eight weeks when he was taken from us by pneumonia.

It was our aim to make the home as beautiful and comfortable as possible under the circumstances. There were many special-occasion turkey dinners from flocks the children raised. There were many sad partings when the children left home for school, with days when no one could sing or smile. After one such occasion I said, "Why do we feel like this about it; we would have reason to be sad if you couldn't go to school to prepare for service." This leaving for school was especially distressing with the thought that they couldn't come home for vacations, due to distance.

The children were a real part of the missionary force as they performed duties that were in their power. They shared the duties in the home, and took over all the responsibilities when we were out in the field. On the table I found a note when I returned home from the camp, "We oneto show our love." They had done the cleaning and dusting, left this note, then went out to play. None were old enough to spell correctly, and wrote 'oneto' for 'want to.' When I was in the hospital for two months ninety miles distant, they took care of the home, furnace, and held the meetings in the church, when their father had to be with me.

The walls that have given us protection in the severe climate, the home that has given comfort and a haven, seemed like it really belonged to us. When we depart from it we leave a part of our hearts in it. May the new occupants also make it their own, and experience as much happiness as we have with none of the sorrows. (Secretary's Note: The Habeggers will be moving to Lame Deer to take charge of the mission work. Howard G. Nyce.)

Common Faults in Public Prayers

by L. R. Amstutz

At some time all have had the opportunity to pray in public. Still others have been called upon to pray in public. How shall we pray in public? A fear of these common faults is the cause for many not praying in public. The purpose of this article is not to add to those fears but rather to be helpful and instructive in the matter of public prayer. Since the pastor engages in much public prayer, this subject has a special application to him.

"No Christian Stands over his Brethren"

Basic to this dicussion is our view as to just what position the one who engages in public prayer occupies. Is the one who leads in prayer in an intermediate relationship between God and those who hear? Here our basic Mennonite principle of the priesthood of every believer answers the question. "Every Christian is a priest in the same sense . . . . no Christian stands over his brethren as a dispenser of God's grace or as a 'priest' with God."[1]

> The poverty of our prayer vocabulary is perhaps one of the greatest defects of public praying. The first source of enriching our prayer vocabulary is the Bible . . . hymns . . . written prayers . . . A far greater effort should be made by all of us to acquire a larger prayer vocabulary.

Leading and Following in Prayer

Thus the one who engages in public prayer leads in prayer and it is certain there can be no leading unless there is following. Public prayer is not praying for the rest of the people but to-gether with the brethren assembled as unto the Lord. Only as each individual follows and enters into the prayer uttered does public prayer have value for the individual. This is what is meant by "following in prayer."

On the basis of this principle, then, we may consider those things which hinder our praying together unto the Lord.

Pronouns in the Plural

Prayers which are strictly personal violate public prayer. When the leader of public prayer acknowledges personal guilt in what sense may the rest follow? Such a prayer which begins with, "I ask thee Lord to forgive me . . ." illustrates the point. In this respect silent prayer may be and should be used. Public prayers of confession should be corporate or united in form. We note in the prayer which Jesus taught His disciples, and which is a form of public prayer, the use of plural pronouns such as "Our Father" and "forgive us."

No Preaching in our Praying!

Preaching in our praying violates the above-mentioned principle. This has been called "preaching a sermon over God's shoulder to the people." A certain branch of a denomination protests against the use of public prayer by other denominations insisting that it is teaching. While not justifying this position it is nevertheless true that prayer may become the means of teaching doctrine. A knowledge of correct doctrine is essential if we are to approach God as He is "in truth." However, a repetition of doctrine is not prayer but teaching or preaching. Such teaching is obviously directed toward the people while true prayer must be directed toward God. Of course, the needs and situation of the people form a vital part of public prayer but that vital part is jointly and collectively held up before God.

Speak Forth Clearly

Furthermore, feebleness of voice prevents following in public prayer. Here the cause is not always mere physical inability but timidity which is fearful of speaking forth boldly. Here a conscious effort must be made to speak audibly with the realization that not to do so violates the very principle of public prayer. Such a person must become accustomed to hearing himself speak in public. To assume a standing position while the rest remain seated will help the voice to carry.

Poverty of Prayer Vocabulary

The above mentioned faults prevent following in public prayer. There are other faults which make following difficult. Repetition of certain 'pet' phrases peculiar to the individual may become obstructions to the spirit of true prayer. To begin our prayers and to end our prayers with the use of certain set phrases shows a lack of prayer vocabulary. The poverty of our prayer vocabulary is perhaps one of the greatest defects of public praying. The first source of enriching our prayer vocabulary is the Bible. There are hymns and written prayers which are useful. A far greater effort should be made by all of us to acquire a larger prayer vocabulary.

Avoid Familiarity and Professionalism

In the general attitude of prayer, two extremes need to be avoided. That of being too familiar in our approach to God and the special peril of the pastor, that of becoming too professional. The very attitude of prayer as seen in our bodily position makes our approach to God different. Kneeling, bowing, or standing represents an approach which is different from our approach to our fellow men. On the other hand, to acquire a "professional tone" in our praying is to put "distance" between the one who leads and the one who follows. There needs to be a reverent but

Conference Boards in Action

NON-CONFERENCE SCHOOLS STUDENT SURVEY IN NON-CONFERENCE SCHOOL

In a recent survey, conducted by the Board of Education in cooperation with the Young People's Union to find out where young people and adults of the General Conference of Mennonites receive their higher education, it was discovered that there are approximately 700 students enrolled in 215 educational institutions other than those affiliated with the General Conference. This list included colleges, universities, technical schools, Bible schools, schools for the training of nurses, and others.

Of the total number of students reported, 390 are attending 152 colleges, universities, and seminaries; 174 are attending non-General Conference Bible schools; 152 are attending eight different Mennonite colleges other than General Conference schools; and 78 are enrolled in nurses training. These figures, however, are based on a 63 per cent response and do not include all General Conference students within the United States and Canada.

The purpose of the survey was fourfold: (1) to proivde an up-to-date mailing list of all students above secondary education, (2) to discover where General Conference young people and adults were receiving their higher education and to be aware of any trends in concentration of students, (3) as a result of this survey, to carry out periodic contacts with students so that they might be aware of the activities of the Mennonites and (4) that our educational institutions and other interested organizations might be aware of interests of students.

A pamphlet, The Master Calleth For Thee, prepared by the Board of Education through its Curriculum Committee to help clarify such things as a call to Christian service, the challenge to full-time work in the church, and also to give a perspective of the various opportunities for such service in the General Conference, has been sent to above mentioned students in connection with the initial contact with them.

MUTUAL AID BOARD: THE FARM OPPORTUNITIES

Near the Springfield Mennonite Church at Pleasant Valley, Pennsylvania, are quite a few farms owned by men from Philadelphia, New York, and other nearby cities. From time to time these owners look for farmers who, with their families, can move on the farms and take charge of the work. Any interested Mennonites who would like to know more about these opportunities should get in touch with Rev. Ward W. Shelly at Coopersburg, Pennsylvania.—J. Winfield Fretz, Executive Secretary.

MENNONITE MEN FOR CHRIST

Amid the turmoil and strife of this day, when we hear so much of differences among the denominations, it was soul-stirring to a layman to have the privilege of attending the recent meeting (see "The Crusades of the Printed Page" by John E. Fretz, THE MENNONITE, January 18, 1948, for a detailed report) of the Advisory Council of the American Bible Society and for two days the harmony which existed among the representatives of over forty-five denominational groups and various races from twenty states discuss ways and means to advance the work of preparing and distributing the Scriptures to all parts of the world. To me this was another evidence of the power of the Scriptures. — by Walter H. Temple who, with John E. Fretz represented the General Conference Layman's Organization at the last meeting of the Advisory Council of the American Bible Society. Both men appear on the accompanying photograph along with the representatives of other denominations. Mr. Temple is standing behind the man in the uniform seated. Dr. S. C. Yoder representing the (Old) Mennonites is seated in the center.

The Seminary -- After Four Years

by S. F. Pannabecker

The past four years have seen the work of the Seminary grow steadfastly. Step by step students were gathered, faculty enlarged, property purchased, the library established, and every facility developed. We are far from having attained what a seminary should be, but we do have the beginnings and this year finds adequate room, an earnest body of thirty students, a staff of six, and a home for Mennonite students in other schools in the city. Nine men are to graduate this spring with the B. D. degree and all are planning on entering some phase of church work. Five are already in the pastorate.

Religious Life

The religious life of the Seminary has also shown marks of growth. With the increase in the number of children, a Sunday School was organized during the summer. This was continued and enlarged in the fall and now is a thriving part of the life of the institution. The mid-week prayer meeting at 9:00 p.m. Wednesday evening, is also well attended and another center of interest. Practical work for all students, church visitation, occasional retreats, and the Vesper services round out the fellowship in worship and Christian service.

One question which was raised, and will be considered more as time goes on, is the possibilty of organizing a church centering about the Seminary. There are almost a hundred people to draw from in our Mennonite community here, plus some scattered through the city who would be interested if it should be possible. Yet there are problems of housing, pastoral care, and support that need careful thought.

Housing

Housing facilities are in great contrast to the situation reported one year ago. Then we were cramped for space with none of the apartments which we had purchased available. Now, beside the three residences, we have possession of eight of the twelve apartments in the two big buildings. Ninety-three members of our Mennonite community find quarters here, with room for occasional guests.

Finances

During the past year progress has been made in paying for buildings—$14,000 was raised for this purpose and an equal amount for remodeling and necessary improvements. This was in addition to the expenses of operation. Finances of the Seminary during the past few years have been particularly difficult because the needs for building purchases were super-imposed upon operating expenses. This will continue for another year.

Operating expenses amount to about $35,000 per year. The Seminary Board approved the policy of working toward having this amount covered by regular contributions from the churches. The Seminary administration was instructed to urge churches to consider budgeted or planned contributions for the Seminary.

Let us thank God for the progress of the last few years and seek for His plan in the developing of this institution.

Budget

The estimated needs for the year 1949 may be divided into two parts, viz., (1) the Running Budget, and (2) Capital Payments, with items as follows:

The Running Budget

Operating expenses for 1949	$32,000
Outstanding bills from 1948	3,600
Support of two foreign students	1,500
		$37,100

Capital Payments

Balance due on Apartment Bldg. (4606 Woodlawn)	$12,400
Loan repayments due in 1949	5,750
Library books and office equipment	1,650
		$19,800
Total Estimated Needs		$56,900

not unnatural approach to our God. We need to ". . . . come boldly unto the throne of grace . . . ." (Heb. 4:16).

The Note of Optimism

There must be a note of optimism in all of our praying. No one has a greater reason to be optimistic than the child of God. This note of optimism will lift and inspire those who hear. A doleful tone of voice will depress rather than uplift. A period of silence before the pastoral prayer may be of great value. The minister must be an artist in the use of silence. When the priests of old went into the Holy Place, the multitude kept silence before the Lord. A quiet prayer will quiet the distressed and perplexed soul. A prayer of confidence and optimism will inspire confidence in others.

All of us have some defects in our public praying. These defects in us call for sympathetic understanding and toleration. As the members of the congregation pray together with their pastor they also are taught how to pray since the pastor becomes a pattern and example. All of us should make a more conscious effort to correct our common faults. The Lord is worthy of the best of which we are capable. "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people" (Psa. 116:12-14).

"These are They"

P. J. Boehr

Herewith is the picture of the first baptismal class at our Paochi station. In a sense we might entitle it "These Are They" that came out of great tribulation; however, these people were at the time not right in the troubled area. Most of them, however, come from such areas, and have experienced great dangers because of the political situation.

We trust this picture with nine precious souls, baptized on Christmas Day, 1948, by pastor Li Kwang Ming, will encourage friends of missions to pray more. We marvel at the Grace of God, and that even now hearts turn to Christ in China, when such a step might mean trial and possible persecution because of the upheaval in this country. Pray for these.

Trading Corporation for Paraguay

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA. In a meeting on March 25 and 26 at Asuncion, Paraguay, the leaders of the five Mennonite colonies helped to lay plans for a Mennonite Trading and Services Corporation to serve these colonies. In the past it has been necessary for each colony to make its own contacts for the transaction of business, and often commercial firms have been used to secure services which one colony alone may not be able to provide for itself. It is felt that through a central trading arrangement, a greater efficiency and economy can be realized for all of the colonies.

It is planned that the MCC assume about half of the shares of this trading corporation, with the colonies themselves holding the remaining shares. In addition to the service which will be realized through this arrangement, the organized cooperation will doubtless promote helpful relationships among the colonies.

Specific Needs Continue in Austria

Although conditions in general have improved very much in Austria, there still are real opportunities for service to certain catagories of individuals. It is necessary to be more careful as time goes on, in selecting the persons who seem to deserve and need relief. As in many other places, the spiritual needs are often more pronounced and prevalent than mere food or clothing deficiency. Efforts are thus made to promote relief activities in which personal contact can be made and Christian testimony given. Among those served are tubercular patients, needy students, widows, disabled war victims, children in orphanages, and refugees. Considerable amounts of food, as well as one of the workers in the Austrian unit, have been made available by the Mennonites of Holland.

Reedley Center Closes for Summer

The MCC Relief Center in Reedley, California, is to be closed for the summer months, since practically all of the relief clothing activity of that area occurs during the winter months. In this way it is possible to eliminate the expense of operating the center when contributions are limited in quantity.

The closing of this center is not an indication that there is no longer a need; the need for clothing will continue for some time. It is requested that all contributions of this spring be sent to the center by June 1 so that the final packing can be completed by June 15. Relief materials accumulating during the summer should be held until the opening of the center in the fall.

European Tour-and-Service Program Again Planned

Menno Travel Service is making travel plans for the educational tour by the group of students and non-students who will go to Europe this summer under the sponsorship of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges. Guy F. Hershberger, who will be in Europe this summer in connection with MCC Peace Section work, has been engaged to assist in the leadership of this group. The group will leave the United States on June 14, and on August 24 will again leave Europe to return. Each person in the group provides for his expenses on the tour.

In addition to the educational tour through England, Holland, Beligum, France, Germany, Switzerland, and Italy, there will also be a period of actual reconstruction work in Germany.

BISHOP ADDRESS BLUFFTON

Dr. Francis J. McConnell, well known retired bishop of the Methodist Church, was a chapel speaker April 13. He was holding pre-Easter services in Lima during that week.

Prof. Otto Holtkamp and Prof. Russel Lantz served as judges at the Hancock County music contest. Prof. Lantz also judged at school music contests at Ada, Lafayette, and Shawnee and at Ohio District contests at Baldwin Wallace College, Kent State University, and at Springfield, Ohio.

New officers elected for the Student Christian Association for next year are Dale Dickey, Sidney, Ohio, president; Alice Ruth Pannabecker, Chicago, vice-president; Deanna Yoder, Topeka, Indiana, secretary; and Stanley Bohn, Pandora, Ohio, treasurer. The Student Christian Association was formed this year to supplant the YMCA and YWCA organizations on the campus.

Francis S. Moore, organist, presented the last concert on the Bluffton College Concert series Tuesday, April 19.

Rev. Harry Yoder had charge of the communion service at the Allentown, Pennsylvania, Mennonite Church on Easter Sunday.

WADSWORTH COACH TO BETHEL

J. Millard Fretz, athletic coach of the Wadsworth, Ohio, High School, has been appointed athletic coach and assistant instructor of physical education at Bethel College. He is a deacon of the First Mennonite Church at Wadsworth.

A graduate of Bluffton College, Mr. Fretz did post-graduate work in coaching and physical education at Bowling Green and Ohio State universities, and has been teaching at Wadsworth since 1945. Robert W. Tully will remain director of physical education and recreation, and with the two men in the department, Bethel will offer a major in physical education.

Mr. Fretz is an all-round athlete and has won high school and college letters in baseball, basketball, football, and track. He has coached football, basketball, and track, winning a number of games, including some championships.

Teatske van der Zijpp, a Mennonite minister's daughter from Rotterdam, Holland, presented a Bach concert in Bethel College chapel April 19. She is a foreign-exchange student and is majoring in Bible with a minor in music. She is a graduate of the Mennonite Seminary at Amsterdam and is preparing for the ministry.

The majority of the students and several faculty and staff members left the campus for the Easter vacation, April 13-18. The last half of the spring quarter began April 18. There are only six weeks of school left until commencement.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

A very profound message on "The Devotional Life of the Protestant Churches," was delivered recently at prayer meeting by Marvin Halverson who grew up in the Norwegian Lutheran Church and is now a Congregational minister. He said that Protestants do not need to depend on Roman Catholic devotional literature, but have a deep devotional treasure of their own. The Protestant devotional emphasis has two characteristics. First, the discipline for the devotional life comes in living the Christian life itself, rather than from a priest or a church superior. Second, forgiveness comes first in the Protestant conception of the devotional life rather than last as in the Roman Catholic viewpoint, and thus our joy, praise, petition come from the sins which have been forgiven. He concluded by citing devotional books which we can read along with our Bible reading, including writings by John Bunyan, Isaac Watts, Matthew Henry, John Wesley, John Woolman, George Fox, Soren Kirkegaard, and others.

'Comic' Note

One expert's opinion: "Nor is there any basis in fact for the current news headlines which blame comics for children's delinquent acts."

Press dispatch: "Today Patricia is dead, her body dragged from the Milwaukee River where Babich confessed he dropped it, wired to a concrete block —a method he read about in a comic book."—C. S. Monitor.

to have studied and re-studied the entire course as outlined the teacher must still do her daily thorough preparation of heart and materials. She must again study her lesson plan for the day. She must evaluate her methods of presentation of truth, her objective for the day, and steps leading to its attainment. She must carefully and thoroughly master her story materials in the Bible Lesson and Mission Period. She must have "walked before" her pupils and have prepared her own workbook so that the work the child must do in the workbook is fully clear to her.

Having prepared her lesson for the day, the teacher comes to school ready to give herself to the child. Having the confidence of a right standing before God, of having "done what she could" in the procedure of preparation, with her room ready for the class period, she is relaxed, confident of Divine help and grace and guidance for the task—she is ready to meet the child and his need. She will be in her place early enough to greet the first arrival—she will be waiting for him and he will know that he is wanted. This already opens the door of the child's heart, for to be waited for, to be wanted, is to feel the warmth of love!

One Long Trail

by Bennie Bargen

April 20, 1949, will mark the end of one long trail of service to his people for Rev. J. M. Suderman, long connected with the work of our Conference Publications. That day he turns the key to the front door of the Mennonite Book Store at Newton for the last time, and gives it to A. F. Tieszen, his successor in the management of that store.

He will likely do it with mixed feelings. He has been so long in Conference service—preacher, teacher, businessman. Since the early days of youth on the Kansas (Lehigh) prairies, he has known the Mennonite Church mind as intimately as one can in the various positions he has held. Prepared academically at Berkeley, California, and Rochester, New York, he served our people as pastor at the West Zion (Moundridge) Church and the Buhler Mennonite Church. As teacher he served on the staff in the Bible Department at Bethel College; students there in the years 1921 to 1924 will remember him well.

During the difficult economic period 1926-on he served Bethel College and the Bethel Deaconess Hospital and Home for the Aged as business manager. Records of Conference affairs, too, during these years often bear the stamp of his thinking and activity. He was member of the Mennonite Colonization Board, which was instrumental in opening up the Mexico settlement there; to say nothing of the many, many years that he served as secretary of the General Conference Board of Publication.

The Minutes of the Board of Publication indicate that during his term of service some of the most noteworthy advances in Conference Publications were initiated. Full-time editorship of THE MENNONITE took place during those years; the publication of the MENNONITE HYMNARY certainly was a highspot. The so-called HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN of church-club subscriptions was born during those years. The Board of Publication, with its ramified records and mailings, was a "natural" starter for cooperating in a centralized headquarters office.

Since 1946 Reverend Suderman has been manager of the book store at 710 Main, Newton, Kansas, serving the local constituency personally and the wider constituency by mail. Rev. A. F. Tieszen, well-known in our Conference circles also, takes over the work. To both of these men go our good wishes: To Reverend Suderman, with gratitude for his fine services—"Well, done, good and faithful servant!" and to Reverend Tieszen, our confident good will—"As thy days, so shall thy strength be!"

—Ebenezer Church, Gotebo, Oklahoma: Rev. Curt Boese, pastor of the Carnegie, Oklahoma Church, will conduct revival meetings in the church April 24-May 1. Communion services will be held here May 1. The Bethel College A Cappella choir presented a concert in Cordell April 17, many from here attended. Good Friday was observed with services in the morning conducted by our pastor, Rev. Gerhard Peters. In the afternoon Dr. and Mrs. Suckau and Good News Quartet of Grace Bible Institute brought the message.—Mrs. Oscar Schmidt, Corr.

Jottings

—Bergthal Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas: March 13 Rev. B. H. Janzen gave us the morning message and in the evening showed slides of the Mennonite colonies in Old Mexico. Rev. Henry Poettcher, a student minister at Bethel College, comes each Sunday to teach catechism class during the Sunday school period and also brings the morning message. March 25 Rev. Waldo E. Harder, music director, Mr. John Ewert, and the Berean Octet brought us a message in word and song. The Bethel Peace group conducted three programs on peace in our church on March 27. The Ladies Mission Society held a special collection which amounted to $60.05 for seeds for Mennonites in Paraguay.—Mrs. John K. Friesen, Corr.

—West Swamp Church, Quakertown, Pennsylvania: Different ministers of the Eastern District Conference participated in our pre-Easter services. Palm Sunday twenty-two new members were received into the church. The Young Women's Missionary Society reviewed the book "Out of Sight, Out of Mind." Rev. Willard K. Claassen will be the speaker at the Eastern District Conference to be held here April 28-May 1.—Corr.

—Newport Church, Newport, Washington: Two recent speakers in our church were Rev. A. R. Shelley, Kitchener, Ontario, in the interest of the Biblical Seminary, and Solomon Mouttet of Oklahoma, representing the work of the Go Ye Mission. During the week of April 24, Rev. Dan Toeves of Lynden, Washington, will hold evangelistic meetings here.—Mrs. Schmidt, Corr.

—Bethany Church, Quakertown, Pennsylvania: Beginning April 3 Rev. Jacob H. Janzen, Waterloo, Ontario, began a series of meetings in the church. The Saturday evening meeting was a Mennonite Youth Rally with five churches participating. Sunday evening, April 10 was the climax with the sermon based on "The Celestial City". Following this Rev. Janzen left for home after a month of meetings in different churches.—Mrs. Ed. K. Stoneback, Corr.

—Menno Church, Lind, Washington: Plans for the construction of a new church are underway. The ground has been staked and the drilling of a well is in process. Our young people sponsored a Peace Rally April 2-3, inviting the young people of Washington and Idaho. Representatives from Colfax, Monroe, and Newport were present. Guest speaker was Rev. Andrew Shelly, Kitchener, Ontario. Three meetings were held with a fellowship luncheon on Saturday evening, pre-Easter meetings followed. Reverend Shelly was the speaker and also visited in the homes of the community during the week. A daughter, Ruth Ann, was born to Rev. and Mrs. W. Wiebe April 1. —Mrs. C. C. Claassen, Corr.

Into the Beyond

ELMER F. BONTRAGER, Washington, Iowa, a member of the Eicher Emmanuel Mennonite Church, was born May 5, 1882, and died April 5, 1949.

MRS. LAURA KREHBIEL, Donnellson, Iowa, a member of the Zion Mennonite Church, was born July 7, 1875, and died April 13, 1949.

HENRY G. PENNER, JR., Beatrice, Nebraska, member of the First Mennonite Church, was to have graduated from Medical College in May, was born August 4, 1924, died April 12, 1949, of cancer.

CORRECTION: MRS. J. P. LOWENBERG, a member of the Zion Mennonite Church in Donnellson, Iowa, passed away March 6, 1949. This name was listed as Shroeder in the April 6 issue of THE MENNONITE.

Jottings

—Eden Church, Moundridge, Kansas: A number of our members attended the Bethel College Fellowship meeting on March 7. Reports were given of the progress of the home visits inaugurated this spring. The plan of having the congregations meet in small family groups to discuss the work of our school was tried out in several churches before this meeting at Bethel and the response was that the group felt that it was worth while for all the churches to adopt the plan. Occassionally the members of the Catechism class are asked to write some of their views during the class sessions. A few weeks ago they were asked their answer to the following two questions: How would you go about trying to help a friend of yours who is seriously concerned about his salvation and comes to you for help? If someone asked you how you knew you were a Christian, how would you answer?

—First Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Rev. J. J. Esau held pre-Easter services in our church March 27 to April 1. Rev. Amstutz teaches an adult Bible class every Wednesday evening. "The Doctrine of Man," is the present topic of discussion. Mrs. Amstutz teaches a children's class simultaneously.—Esther Wall, Corr.

—Friedensfeld Church. Turpin, Oklahoma: April 3 the choir of the Men's Bible Academy rendered an Easter cantata. Mr. E. W. Zeimerman from the Northern Bible Society presented the work of the Society and gave a message on "A Challenge on Christian Living." April 7 the Women's Missionary Society met all day in the church tieing comforters and doing relief sewing while the men did repair work, including piping of water into the church.—Mrs. J. G. Unruh, Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminister, Pennsylvania: Our pastor and Rev. J. J. Plenert, Lansdale, Pennsylvania, exchanged pulpits Sunday morning, March 20. Willard and Esther Atkinson, Perkasie; Charles and Regina Detweiler, Blooming Glen; and Walter and Helen Swartz, Plumsteadville, Pennsylvania, were recently received as members of the church. Special offerings were taken for the Seminary and CPS rehabilitation. Excavation of the basement for the much needed addition to our church building has been completed. The second week in May we will celebrate the 100th anniversary of our church. The Historical Committee has planned three evenings of devotional messages by the Rev. Russell Mast and Rev. Howard Landes, a community night, a historical night, and three meetings on Sunday. Climaxing the occasion will be the rendition of the oratorio, "The Holy City," presented by a chorus on Sunday evening.—Corr.

—First Church, Burns, Kansas: The Bethel College A Cappella choir presented a program in the high school auditorium on April 3. Dr. and Mrs. Herbert R. Schmidt showed pictures and told about their trip to the Mennonite colonies in South America on March 20. The men of the church spent April 5 and 6 setting out 150 evergreen trees as a windbreak for the church yard.—Mrs. Carson Crawford, Corr.

—Hoffnungsau Church, Inman, Kansas: With a new pair of stockings in each pair of shoes for relief, 120 pair were collected by the Sunday school. Of these 75 per cent were new and 104 pairs were for children. Two truckloads of farm equipment have been collected for South America by the Men's Chorus. March 20 Miss Helga Kemnitzer, a German student attending Bethel College, was our morning guest speaker. A series of evening meetings are being held during Passion Week with Rev. Ronald von Riesen of the Chicago Seminary as the speaker. —Mrs. Albert Ediger, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: Men of the church took apart, packed, and loaded a truckload of used horse drawn machinery which was taken to headquarters in Newton, Kansas, by J. J. Pankratz on April 4. The Oklahoma Bible Academy Mixed Chorus cancelled a concert here recently because of road conditions.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—First Church, Madrid, Nebraska: During our annual business meeting on February 25, Rev. J. P. Glanzer's term of one-year was extended to three years of service. February 13 communion services were held for twenty-nine persons. Weather conditions have been very bad and several morning and evening services have had to be cancelled. Mr. and Mrs. Norman Kroeker, members of the church, are parents of twin babies, Donald Rey and Doris Rae. —Corr.

—Hereford Church, Bally, Pennsylvania: Rev. Wilmer S. Shelly accompanied by several members of the church spent a Sunday afternoon calling on sick and shut-in persons in our community. Four persons were visited, three of which were blind. Singing, Scripture reading, and prayer was held for them. Everybody's Birthday Luncheon, sponsored by the Ladies Aid Society, was held Sunday, April 3. Rev. and Mrs. A. J. Neuenschwander presented a picture of our General Conference Home Missions Projects. Rev. Wesley Ewert, Rev. John J. Plenert, and Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander spoke at Lenten services here. George Simmons and Shirley Britton were married Saturday morning, April 9.

—Bethany Church, Freeman, South Dakota: Various ministers of the community spoke to us during the Lenten services. April 13 Rev. Edmund Miller brought the message when joint communion services were held with the college. Dr. Harold Gross was the speaker for the Easter Sunrise services. Walter Brunn spoke of his recent trip to Denmark recently. Slides of the General Conference Mission work in Columbia, South America, were shown in the church. Work has again been resumed on the new church building.—Corr.

—Salem Church, Munich, North Dakota: Rev. D. E. Matthews was the speaker at the Bethany Bible School commencement exercises, April 1. His topic was "The Three Essentials to Eternal Success," based on Luke 9:62. The main points were steadfastness, separation, and surrender. Graduates were Muriel Unger, Dulcie Dick, Orlando Janzen, Herbert Hoffman, and Arlo Hoffman.—Corr.

—First Church, Summerfield, Illinois: Mr. Henry Grimm, a second year student of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago, has accepted the call to serve as pastor of our church. He will begin his pastorate on May 1. He and Mrs. Grimm will occupy the parsonage soon after the close of the seminary year. He is a graduate of Bluffton College. Our Girl's Chorus sang the Easter Cantata, "Eternal Life," by Fred B. Holton, on Easter Sunday night. Mrs. Orville Baer directed and Mrs. Donald Baer was pianist. Rev. A. S. Bechtel served as delegate to the annual Middle District Conference session. We observed Holy Communion on Easter Sunday morning, with Rev. Bechtel and Mr. Oswald, our student supply from the Eden Seminary in Webster Groves, Missouri, in charge.

—Bethel Church, Inman, Kansas: Our mixed choir presented the Easter cantata, "The Nazarene," by John S. Witty on April 17. March 31 twenty-one members worked at the relief center in Newton. The ladies patched and packed clothes at the center while the men worked with the implements in town. The Burrton Mennonite Church C. E. gave a program in exchange for a program by the men's chorus.—Mrs. Elmer Neufeld, Corr.

New Voluntary Service Opportunities

East Harlem Parish, New York City

About the Parish — The East Harlem Protestant Parish is sponsored by the Mission Board of four denominations—Presbyterian Methodist, Congregationalist, and Baptist. The Parish bounds are normally between 96-104 Streets and Park Ave. and the River. The people that live in this parish are made up of about 40 per cent Puerto Rican, 40 per cent Negroes, 10 per cent Italians, and another 10 per cent of various nationalities. These people are generally exploited economically, and the established churches of this area have up until now not met the spiritual needs of these people satisfactorily. The result of this is that the people in this area are calloused, if not hostile, to the church as they know it.

The Parish is in charge of one full-time minister and eight part-time workers who are charged with the responsibility of making the church and the Gospel meaningful to these people. They also arrange for love feasts in which the various members of one apartment building are invited to take part. Here the elements of worship, planning a program of activity of the week, and fellowship over a simple meal are combined to create new bonds between and among those taking part. Two store-front churches have been opened where people may come during the week to bring their problems to the minister. Here the young people meet for recreation, singing, and also Sunday School. Here the Sunday morning worship services is conducted. For further information, read Hugh Hostetler's article in THE MENNONITE of February 8, 1949.

Voluntary Service Unit — The Home Mission Board of the General Conference is sponsoring the setting up of a summer voluntary service unit in connection with this project. The unit members will assist in Bible School teaching, recreation, crafts, music; and in general assist the staff members in a whole range of possible acts from canvassing an apartment building to attending a labor union meeting in the interest of the parishioners. It will operate for nine weeks beginning June 17. The size of the unit will be about six.

Qualifications — A desire to learn of living conditions in the slums; knack for leadership either in recreation, crafts, music, or Bible School teaching; desire to bring the message of the Christian Gospel in a direct and effective manner whenever the opportunity presents itself.

Store-Front Church in East Harlem

Cost — Housing will be provided for the unit. The unit will have a co-operative kitchen, the expenses of which will be split three ways; one-third to be borne by the Home Mission Board, one-third by the East Harlem Parish, and one-third by the partisipants of the unit. Total cost for participant would be approximately $30. Transportation to New York would be at participant's expense.

How to Apply — Send application form to Erna Friesen, Mennonite Biblical Seminary, 4614 S. Woodlawn, Chicago 15, Illinois. If you do not have an application form, write a letter to the above giving pertinent information and references.

Crippled Children's Camp, Los Angeles

Location — near Crestline, California, and Lake Arrow, overlooking the Mojave Desert. The camp is located in the mountains in this area northeast of Los Angeles. The camp site is very beautifully situated and still under construction, although there are adequate facilities for the operation of the camp program. The physical facilities consist of a large central building which houses service and central facilities, and several cottage dormitories which, with supplementary tents, house the children.

Date — June 15 to September 1. All volunteers should begin on June 15 in order to take advantage of the three-day orientation period which will begin on June 15. Although it is desirable for campers to serve the entire period if possible, they should serve at least a major portion.

Volunteers Wanted — At least six men and women. Some should be men. There is a possibility of additional volunteers, particularly for the construction work.

Costs — Some remuneration will be given to all the volunteers. Those serving in regular staff positions will receive regular wages. Since others will be supplementary workers, they will not receive regular wages. It is suggested that all of the earnings be pooled and divided equally, unless some wish to serve on a volunteer basis.

On the Project — The Crippled Children's Society is a fully organized group with a well-planned program. The camp will be under the general direction of Miss Lucia Laufeld, the principal of a noted crippled children's public school. The recreational program will be under the general direction of Jack Lear. Staff counsellors will be under the supervision of a social service worker. The children who are enrolled come for a period of two weeks. They are paralytic, amputees, cerebral palsy victims, and congenital deformed, in addition to others. The plan is to use one leader for six children. Church services are conducted in the camp. Children are encouraged to attend local churches near the camp site.

Miscellaneous Information — It would be desirable if some of the volunteers had cars for the purpose of aiding in evacuation in case of forest fire and for general unit purposes. There will be a three-day breathing spell" somewhere during the middle of the summer.

How to Apply — Send your application to the MCC Voluntary Service Office, Akron, Pennsylvania. Selections will be made after April 15. Indications are that here is a group of young people who need our Christian concern, help, and love. We have found the director of the Crippled Children's Society of Los Angeles very cooperative, and we feel that this should be an excellent beginning for a West Coast Voluntary Service project.

'Home Missions' May Help Mental Patients

Here is one result that voluntary service can be pointed to as having done its share in bringing about. The editorial in the Ft. Wayne News Sentinel, March 26, 1949, tells of a plan to improve existing conditions in Indiana mental hospitals.

Once the human approach prevails in dealing with Indiana's mental institutions, progress in their improvement can be counted on.

Since her investigation of conditions in Richmond State and other hospitals, Sen. Dorothy Gardner has decided that the problem is one of human equations. The people who back her one-woman crusade to give the mental patient a break don't talk about statistics, money, or budget allowances. They talk about people, unfortunate people they know, members of their own family. Sometimes they are former patients.

When Senator Gardner appealed to a group of Fort Wayne clergymen for their help in the enlistment of high type persons as institutional attendants, she could draw on the stories of heartbreak, anger, and frustration conveyed in letters from all over the state.

They have encouraged her to press on with her plan of encouraging men and women of patience and self control to become attendants. The clergy here, we understand, responded to her request and may relay that appeal from their pulpits.

Typical of the letters to Senator Gardner is that of an Indianapolis lady who regards the enlistment of "Christian men and women as volunteer attendants in mental hospitals as important as foreign-missionary work."

A former Elwood patient tells of seeing inmates beaten, their heads shaken against brick walls and their naked back subjected to ice packs. The mother of a son who died in hospital believes the patient "was manhandled."

"Why can't the churches in this state unite to get a change of conditions?" writes a patient. Why, indeed?

"You are right," writes a Muncie relative of a patient. 'The plight of mental hospitals in paramount. . . . The victims cannot appear to plead their needs . . . We ask in humility and prayer that the state will go beyond cold budgetry statistics . . . ."

Startling things narrated. From a Rushville citizen: "A patient died in 1940 . . . beaten severely over the head with a broom . . . . knocked down . . . next morning reported dead." From an Angola man: "I would like to tell you about the death of my wife . . . . what happened was very strange . . . ." From Richmond: " . . . two women were locked in a small room . . . . partly darkened, no heat, with little clothing . . . ." A Greensburg father: "Our daughter was shamefully mistreated."

Obviously a higher type of attendant is not the sole need of the institutions but it seems the obvious first step. In the years ahead we can expect funds with which to provide adequate psychiatric personnel, better food and proper physical equipment no faster than legislators can be educated to the need.

The death of a Richmond Hospital patient due to beating by an attendant and numerous instances of mistreatment which are not even denied, point to the urgency of providing better attendants for institutions that will accept them.

Senator Gardner, in co-operation with several ministers and other groups here, hopes to interest at least ten persons from the Fort Wayne area to take the short training course and to accept institutional jobs.

Last summer's experience of Mennonite volunteer attendants in the Richmond Hospital has bolstered faith in the plan to recruit regular attendants from the ranks of church members. The hospital head told reporters the morale of patients picked up amazingly with the considerate treatment they received from the volunteers.

The enlistment plan projected by Senator Gardner does not involve unpaid workers. Still less than we pay prison guards, the pay will range fro $90 to $160 a month with board and room; but those accepted must agree to a short lecture training course as preparation.

Our Government has fallen down in its guardianship of these unfortunate but blameless people. The confession speaks for itself . . . when a member of the Legislature must appeal directly to Hoosiers for a helping hand. If our churches are looking for a home mission project, their search is over.

Raise Funds for Camp Site

Middle and Central Districts Plan to Obtain Their Own Camp

For a number of years young people of the Central and Middle District Conferences have gathered at Camp Mack each summer for a week's retreat. Those who have been at Camp Mack know the inspiration that such a week has brought. New visions of God and the meaning of Christ in one's life have come from such retreats. New friends, new visions of service, and a new enthusiasm for the church have all be realized at Camp Mack.

For several years an effort has been made to obtain a camp owned by these two Conferences. If such a camp could be obtained, a widely varied camp program could be provided the churches far beyond the single week which is all that is possible at present. Such a camp would provide opportunities for the regular young people's retreat, and in addition a separate week for intermediates, a young adult camp, a place for Sunday-school conferences to be held; conferences committees could use the site, and special family weeks, mission studies, leadership institutes could also make use of such a camp.

For over a year, a Camp Site Committee has been at work seeking to locate and purchase such a site. They desire a site of great natural beauty beside a lake. It should be centrally located so that it may be an inspiration and center of church life for years to come. It should be usable for youth and adults alike.

To purchase such a camp when the desirable site is found will cost money. An excellent project for church youth groups would be to raise funds for our own camp. As spring comes, youth groups in each church may wish to undertake such a project. Here is a list of suggestive projects. All of these have been used by youth groups for the raising of funds.

Projects for youth groups to raise funds:

1. Collect paper
2. A scrap iron drive
3. Paint mailboxes
4. "White elephant" auctions
5. Bake sales
6. Sell cookbooks
7. A potato crop
8. A corn crop
9. A soybean crop
10. Sell subscriptions to Mennonite Life and other magazines
11. Personal giving (10c a week by ten people totals $52.00 a year)
12. Baby sitting

Camp Scene in Indiana

13. Tithing (give one tenth of your income)
14. Ice-cream socials

The Camp Site Committee consists of the following Central Conference representatives: Mr. O. J. Sommer, Pekin, Illinois; Rev. Robert Hartzler, 605 S. Seventh, Goshen, Indiana; Rev. Esko Loewen, Topeka, Indiana. For further information contact them.

As a challenge, it may be good to suggest that the goal of an average of $100 per church be raised in this coming year. That is approximately 75c per church member. By this each church can figure out its own goal.

Youth Project at Bethany Church,

by Ruth Wickersham, Quakertown, Penna.

As their project for this past year the True Blue Class, Bethany Mennonite Church, Quakertown, Pennsylvania, collected old newspapers and magazines. The class had about seven boys and two girls that could help.

One of our church members had an old milk delivery truck which was kindly loaned to us. Some of the class members used their own cars for paper collections.

We selected one night a month to do this job, the minister announcing the date during the previous Sunday morning worship service. All members were encouraged to have their papers tied up and ready and to enlist the aid of neighbors to boost the paper collection.

Starting from a central point, the main group started out in the milk truck, and smaller groups went in their cars. After the first load, one or two of the boys would tie up the paper in convenient bundles. Thus we put system into our project. Another member of the church gave us the use of his barn to store the collections until we had enough to sell. The evening's efforts would be followed by a weiner roast and refreshments at one of the homes.

Five month's collection brought in $35.00. Some money was given to the Bethany Building Fund and the rest was invested in new window shades for our church.

"In the Direction of Dreams" a Book on Voluntary Service

by Elmer Ediger, Akron, Penna.

This book by Violet Wood published by Friendship Press, is the first to be completely devoted to the Voluntary Service program, particularly summer service. It is sponsored by the interdenominational missionary education movement which each year chooses some main theme and provides the materials so that local groups can study this emphasis. This year they have chosen to give emphasis to voluntary service, a rapidly growing movement. The book is available from Missionary Education Movement, 5th Ave., New York 10, N. Y., for $1.00 (paper cover) and $1.50 (cloth cover). Every church and school library should have a copy.

The book deals with ten representative types of summer serivce—migrant work, work camps in the Ozarks, students in industry, week-end work camps, community recreational work, caravans, Puerto Rican rural mission, Mexico summer service, and the European work camp. These cover not only representative types of service, but also representative organizations in the field.

To me the script is particularly good in that it uses actual words and reports of the young people who have been in these projects. This eliminates some of the glamorizing that adults might do. The living material is certainly effective in presenting a new concept of "good times" for Christian young people. It is thoroughly clear that Christian young people can have adventure in service. As one reads the pages one is well aware of many "interneship" values that can come out of such service to the individual. Above all, it is a fearless direct entry by the church into some areas of need which have been neglected in the past, it utilizes the potenial of youth in the total words of the church.

The one serious omission recognized by the editors as the material was ready for publication is that of institutional service, such as mental hospitals. Certainly here is a large area in which Mennonite young people particularly feel that summer workers are justified. They deserve a parallel place with these services mentioned. There is perhaps a little tendency to give the "success" stories of voluntary service, although as one thoroughly analyses the material given one sees such as might be labeled failures by others but from a Christian point of view are not. As a whole, the booklet is an excellent contribution for this new movement.

M.C.C. Work in Migrant Camps in Florida

A unique setting for Voluntary Service is that in Florida where two MCC volunteers are serving in two migrant camps with populations of 600 and 1,000 respectively. These people move from place to place as they follow the harvest of garden vegetables. Children of these families are idle while the adults work. The service of the unit consists of teaching and supervising activities of children, assisting in a day nursery, operating a home cannery for the benefit of the migrants, directing various leisure time activities, and conducting Sunday morning and evening worship services. The workers located here have been greatly challenged by the vision of this need which is about them.

The Value of Visiting a Service Unit

"I had no idea you were doing such a good work here. I think more people from the home churches ought to visit the unit and see what is going on." This was the expression of one visitor who came to observe the work done by the workers at Skillman State Village for Epileptics, Skillman, New Jersey. From time to time references are made to locations of various MCC service units. Local people are urged to visit these units, to become better acquainted with the work done and the total concept of Voluntary Service. The unit at Skillman, as well as certain other units, are open during the entire year.

"God setteth the solitary in families" Psalms 68:6

The Christian home is the smallest unit of co-operative endeavor in which Christ is to reign. In fact, the home is the smallest unit of national and world life; as the Psalmist said, "God has set the solitary in families." The home is the world in miniature. If the home is a place where Christ, love, peace, and unity reign, that family is making a distinct contribution to a peaceable and united world. If the home is torn by discord, strife, and bickering, it is making that kind of contribution to national and world life.—D. Shelby Corlett, in Herald of Holiness.

ANNOUNCEMENT

At the last meeting of the Headquarter's Consultative Committee the decision was made that after June 1, 1949, the General Conference Headquarters Office will close every Saturday at 12:00 noon.

A. Theodore Mueller, Office Manager

Of Your Pen Acquaintances

ARTHUR KEISER, Medellin, Colombia, with Mrs. Keiser are in language school preparing for missionary work in Colombia. Rev. Keiser is a native of Quakertown, Pennsylvania.

P. K. REGIER, Reedley, California, is a member of the Placement Committee, serves on the Education Committee of the Pacific District besides serving the First Church of Reedley.

OZZIE GOERING, Moundridge, Kansas, has recently completed his work at Bethel College and is now helping on the staff in connection with the athletic activities.

Beyond Our Own

CHICAGO.—A Catholic D. P. from Europe has three times as good a chance of resettlement in the United States as those of a Protestant, it was revealed at a national conference on the resettlement program held here recently. Of the approximately 13,000 D.P.'s who reached this country by March 1, only 1,105 were Protestants. One reason for this may be that overseas, only four per cent of the assurance now being processed are Church World Service assurances, while thirty-three per cent are Catholic. A Jewish D. P. has even better chances of resettlement than the Catholic D.P.

WARSAW, POLAND.—In a small shop in the heart of Warsaw over 130,000 Bibles have been sold in ten months by the British and Foreign Bible Society. Of these ninety-nine per cent of the Bibles sold were in Polish and the rest in English.

ASPEN, COLORADO.—Dr. Albert Schweitzer, versatile theologian, surgeon, organist, and author, will make the 7000 mile trip from French Equatorial Africa for the first time, to participate in the International Goethe Convocation in Aspen, Colorado, June 27 to July 17. Dr. Schweitzer will limit his stay in this country to the time required for his participation at the Goethe convocation.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—Five of Portland's downtown "First" churches, (Christian, Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian, and Unitarian), have announced a cooperative project of placing five student D. P.'s from Germany in five Oregon colleges.

PUERTO RICO.—The first Conference of the Mennonite churches in Puerto Rico was held March 18-20 with the following men among the speakers: Justus Holsinger, Paul Lauver, Lester T. Hershey, and Alberto Espada Matta. Officers elected for next year's conference were Paul Lauver, president; Lester T. Hershey, vice president; Ismael Gonzalez, secretary; and Alfredo Bonilla, treasurer.

LAKE SUCCESS, NEW YORK. — Plans for constructing a room for meditation and prayer are being made by architects for the new Manhattan headquarters of the United Nations. These plans are the result of the feeling that greater reliance should be placed upon divine guidance in UN affairs and the receipt of hundreds of letters weekly asking that UN meetings be opened with prayers or some gesture of recognition of a Supreme Being.

Of Things to Come

(Announcements for this calendar must reach the editorial office at least three weeks in advance of the date mentioned.)

THE ARRIVAL OF THE FIRST group of families of displaced persons in the United States is a very practical illustration of what ought to be going on repeatedly in coming months if we are sincere about our conviction that the family has the key to the world situation. This will be the real test for America and much more for our Mennonite Churches. We have consistently been in the forefront when help consisted in giving material aid at long range through our representatives. Now we have the opportunity of giving direct personal help in our own communities. Will we remain in the forefront?—JJE

PROTESTANTS IN EUROPE are remarking, "It's tough to be a Protestant." Jewish displaced persons have sufficient assurance that they can plan to be resettled by the end of the year. That is considerably better than Catholics who nevertheless have a ten-to-one edge on Protestants. Why? Because the Jews and Catholics in the various countries offering resettlement are more quick to give the assurances required by law to permit Europeans to emigrate.—JJE

WAS SUNDAY AFTER EASTER "low" Sunday in your services? Most churches make Easter the climax of the planning of the total church year. Do we mean by that that a tapering off is in order after Easter? Some disillusioned person once said that on Easter the churches celebrate Christ's leaving the tomb by entering the tomb. On the contrary, Easter as the time of renewed decision to follow Jesus Christ, ought to be the prelude to an extensive effort on the part of the churches to seek and win the lost to the risen Saviour. Witnessing during Holy Week should spill over into all the year even as the flood of grace manifest at Calvary spilled over into all history. It may be pointed out that in the post-Easter season there are two events in particular that may be used by the church to stress the claims of Christ. One is Christian Family Week observed from May 8-15. The other is Pentecost on June 5. The stress during Chritian Family week may well be upon winning people by families in the homes. Is your congregation making plans to observe these great seasons of the church in a way that will bring people to Christ and into His Church?—JJE

HE WHO IS A SUCCESS in every venture of life is a total failure if he fails in the home; he who is a failure in every other venture of life is a total success if he succeeds in the home.

My Lord, I do not ask to stand
As king or prince of high degree
I only pray that hand in hand
A child and I may come to Thee.

—The Gospel Messenger

AN URGENT CALL has gone out (see page 14) for young people to give some time this summer to the service of Christ. The quotas are incomplete for the projects of General Conference service units. Here is the real test of our sincerity of conviction. Do we believe in Christ also in peace time?

THE UNITY OF BELIEVERS is not a matter of choice. It is a basic doctrine of the Christian faith. Jesus taught it, and He felt so deeply about it that He prayed fervently for it. This is an instance where Jesus specifically prayed for what He taught.

In the light of this, must we not say that it is a sin for believers to be disunited? Admitting this that we are still confronted with a problem that baffles us. We are willing and desirous to recognize other believers as Christians, and yet, we cannot see how we can consistently consider ourselves united with them when they interpret the sacred Scriptures in ways that seem unreal and untrue to us. Under such conditions shall we draw back and say that we cannot fellowship together? Or is there another alternative? Surely we should not forget that unity of the Spirit among believers is the prayer of Jesus and a prerequisite for an effective witness to the world which the church has been commissioned to make.

Is it not true that when people accept Christ as their Lord and Saviour, when their lives give evidence that they love and trust Him, and when they are committed to their best understanding of the will of Christ, that they are united at the center? Is such a life not of the Holy Spirit? Is that not the unity of the Spirit which we are admonished to keep?

Then it becomes the duty and obligation of every believer to share with fellow-believers his best understanding of the will of Christ, and basing his convictions on the Scriptures to leave it with the Holy Spirit to convince them of the truth. If other believers do not share fully our understanding of the Holy Scriptures, we should not hastily refuse to fellowship with them. When the Christians met at the Jerusalem conference they differed very widely on some fundamental issues. It was after Peter, Barnabas, and Paul had shared with the conference what they had seen God do among the Gentiles and how that harmonized with what the Holy Scriptures say, that they came to agree to the point that they could write a resolution embodying these words, "For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us. . . "

The Apostles insist, however, in their epistles that believers must take a definite stand against anti-Christian teachings. Examples of this are found in II John 9:11 and Romans 16:17-18. The Church is called the pillar of truth. It must teach the truth and witness to it. This is best accomplished by simply teaching what the Bible says and leaving it to the Holy Spirit to convince people of the truth. Martin Luther said, "Scripture without any comment is the sun whence all teachers receive their light."—WFU

The Family Worships Together

by Louise Parks Winfield

Assuming that pastors care about the families and families appreciate the church, what can be done to make the church service a good service for families? The most important thing is that children should feel included, that they should know that they as well as their parents are going to church to worship God. The parents could help by explaining the purposes and procedures of the church to children before they go to church. During the service one of the parents could quietly guide the youngest children in an understanding of what is being done and how people do it.

"The organist is playing while the people come in and we all sit quietly and listen."

"We stand up and sing now."

"The minister is going to read to us out of the Bible."

"The ushers are passing the plate for us to put our offering on it."

"We bow our heads for prayer."

Little children love to conform!

We so appreciated the church where the pastor had a children's story each Sunday—a short, short story from the Scriptures or from life, but long enough to remind the youngsters that their minister had them in mind as he prepared the service. Some congregations have a children's hymn. This does not mean that the adults indulgently join in singing a nursery jingle. It means that at least one hymn is especially chosen with the vocal range and thought concepts of the younger children particularly in mind. Invariably these hymns for children are adult favorites as well. The adults have a special treat when some singing six-year-old looks up and smiles a toothless smile of pleasure that the grown-ups are joining in her favorite hymn.

In a middle-sized Midwestern community there is a church pew the fifth row from the front on the right-hand side. Every Sunday the Macks sit there. Fred sits on one end with his arm around fifteen-year-old Frances. Lois, his wife, further down the seat smiles across at Fred as she settles between eight-year-old Claude and six-year-old Jane. The two youngest go through a certain amount of wiggling while they get themselves and their coats adjusted to the seat and grin or wave at their friends in the congregation. When the first note of the processional hymn is sounded they come to attention. Fred and Frances share a hymnal. Claude sings out of his own. Lois leans down to Jane's level (as she used to lean down to Fran and Claude) to help a young reader follow the lines of the hymn. When the congregation stands, all the Macks stand. When the minister asks the people to bow in silent prayer, the Macks share the silence. When a Psalm is read responsively, the Macks join in the response. When the sermon comes, Fran listens intently and sometimes cannot resist a quick-whispered comment about it to her father. Claude listens most of the time because the minister speaks a language he likes. Jane listens part of the time and draws part of the time.

The Macks are not queer people. They wear no sad faces and harbor no deep-seated inhibitions. Everyone who knows them thinks of them as a "grand family." They are a family full of fun and friendliness and also full of good hardheaded common sense. Religion for the Macks is neither a perfunctory sort of ritual nor a magical kind of superstition. Religion for them is a dynamic faith in a God of love at the heart of the universe—a profound respect for Jesus the Christ, who can save human beings to a working relationship with an infinite God and to a creative relationship with all men.

Sometimes I get awfully discouraged with the magnitude and complexity of the snarled-up skein of human affairs. I wonder if in all the world there are people with enough care-how and courage really to make some headway in untangling the mess. Then I remember a church pew five rows from the front on the right-hand side; and I take heart.

Religion for the Macks is a day-by-day way of assuming responsibility for the burdens of people everywhere. The Macks individually and collectively think more than the average family thinks about the needs of the world and what can be done about them. The Macks do more than the average family does to help raise the level of human existence. The Macks have more than average faith in people and in God.

Sometimes I get awfully discouraged with the magnitude and complexity of the snarled-up skein of human affairs. I wonder if in all the world there are people with enough care-how and courage really to make some headway at untangling the mess. Then I remember a church pew five rows from the front on the right-hand side; and I take heart.—From Gospel Messenger

If Christ Be Not Risen

by P. K. Regier

"If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished . . . But now Christ is risen from the dead." I Cor. 15:17,18,20.

In this Eastertide let us think for a moment of the words that come from the lips of a hard, cold-blooded, cynical Roman. When Jesus had died and was laid into his tomb the enemies of Jesus were not at ease. Prompted by fearful apprehensions they asked Pilate to make sure the grave of Jesus. Then came the pathetic words of Pilate, "Ye have a watch, go your way, make the the dead." I Cor. 15:17,18,20.

Barricading God's Tomb . . .

If at dawn you saw a man running toward the east, shouting to the sun, "Stop! You shall not climb the heavens today!"; or if you saw him when the tide had ebbed, standing on the shore, drawing a line in the sand, and then crying to the waves, "Halt! You shall not pass that line!"—what would you say of him? You would say the man was mad. What, then, will you say of a man who thought he could barricade the tomb of God?

> . . . . if Christ is risen . . . then faith in God is crowned, justified, vindicated! Then in the blackest of your days, your life is safe, knowing that a God who did that will assuredly see you through.

It is Eastertide again. But is this thing true? Did it really happen? "Oh, stop!" someone says. Don't raise such a dismal doubt. It makes us shudder. Don't even mention such a gloomy thought that the message of Easter might not be true. But listen! The very Apostle of Jesus raises the question, "If Christ be not risen," and thus he forces the thought upon us. He wants us to face the facts. "If Christ be not risen"—What then? Three things.

If Not . . .

First, "If Christ be not risen, your faith is vain." All the trust you have ever put in God—one great mistake! Your trust, your belief in God is finished.

Second, "If Christ be not risen, ye are yet in your sins." All the talk about forgiveness—pure delusion. All the noble words about God putting sins away, or drowning them in the depths of the sea, or making the crimson page white as snow again—all mere mockery. Ye are yet in your sins, gripped, prisoned, slaves for life!

Third, "If Christ be not risen, then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Those whom we are accustomed to call "the blessed departed"—obliterated, annihilated. Blown out of existence, as you would blow a candle out, or cast as rubbish to the void, never to be met again. Perished! Surely, that is a threefold gloomy picture in the assumption of the Apostle Paul. But dismal as is this outlook, based on assumption, so cheerful is the other, based on actual fact.

But If . . .

But if Christ is risen from the dead—ah, then faith in God is crowned, justified, vindicated! Then, in the blackest of your days, your life is safe, knowing that a God who did that will assuredly see you through. Then too, if Christ be risen from the dead—then sin is defeated! It has met its match. It is broken, blotted out, and you are free! You are like Christian, when the great burden he had carried on his back to the cross fell off there, and rolled and tumbled down the hill until it disappeared into the empty tomb of Christ and was never seen again. And the man stood there, stretching out his arms for the first time in his life in conscious and exultant freedom. All that if Christ be raised.

"Yes," cried Francis Thompson, "God's mercy, I do think it well, is flashed back from the brazen gates of Hell." Yes, Christ was raised up for our justification.

Above All . . .

But above all, if Christ be risen from the dead—then they that have fallen asleep in Christ are alive, are ours, are here! "Is there no one," said Cromwell, as he lay dying and looked around on the faces of his weeping friends, "is there no one here who will praise the Lord?" That is a new note. In the face of death to praise the Lord, and we can fling out the challenge, "Grim, solemn Death, you thought you would rob me, did you? You were wrong. O thou soul of my soul! I shall clasp thee again, and with God be the rest!"

This is the joyful message of Easter. It is the risen Christ who enables us to say, "It is not I who live, but Christ who lives in me, and I have actually felt His presence and His power." That is why Savonarola could say in the hour of his martyrdom, "They may kill me if they please but they will never, never, never, tear the living Christ from my heart!"—Reprinted from the Workers Exchange, Pacific District Conference

In Colombia

Fanatical Resistance To The Gospel

by Arthur Keiser

Embigado is a small city of about 30,000 inhabitants located about six miles from Medellin where we are attending language school. In many ways it is an average city with a very large, beautiful church by the plaza in the center of town. The town is not totally Catholic, but there is a strong element of fanatical Catholicism.

The Evangelical minister who is located there has felt that things are dead and that there is not enough response to the Gospel. So, upon hearing of the tract distribution that the students of the language school are carrying on, he asked us to come and help him distribute Gospels of Luke which are used very much here to bring the Word to the people.

By Chartered Cambion and Jeep

On Saturday morning, April 2, at 7:30 a.m. about fifteen language students and fifteen Colombian students from the local seminary met at the language school for a half hour of prayer. At 8 a.m. we started out with over 5,000 Gospels of Luke. We went by a chartered cambion, which is like a bus in the states, but with open sides and seats running acoss the width of the bus and no center aisle.

Upon reaching Embigado it was decided that the cambion would circle the city, leaving us off two by two as we came to the streets running into the center of town. Then the cambion would wait for us at the end of town where we entered. The missionary would circulate through the city in his jeep to keep us supplied with Gospels.

Two by Two

Our method was to slide the Gospels under the doors at the houses, or to give them to the people in the houses. In this way the Gospels would reach the larger part of the people and not be torn up immediately as might be the case if they were handed out in the streets. One of the native Colombians from the seminary went with each of us from the language school because of our lack of knowledge of the language. However, we were not to take time to talk to the people . . . just to give them the Word of God.

". . . No Wonder . . ."

My Colombian partner and I covered a section on the outskirts of the city where our 170 Gospels were all well received. In some of the stores and saloons where I went, men were gathered and gambling around tables piled full of money. (It is no wonder that this is true, however, as the Catholic church itself sponsors a gambling bazaar on special Sundays with all the gambling wheels and cards that are found in a fair in the States. It also raises much of its money by selling lottery tickets.)

All went well until we got to the edge of town where the cambion was waiting for us. There we noticed that a mob had gathered menacingly. One by one, as the groups came back, they told of how the people had thrown stones at them. Finally it seemed best to leave with the cambion even though all were not back yet; the jeep would remain to bring them when they arrived.

Waving Sticks and Fists

We on the cambion went about two miles out of town and then pulled over to the side of the road to wait for the others. Shortly afterwards the jeep pulled up in back of us with two of the students. They had been forced to leave when the mob started to throw stones at them even though two more were still in town somewhere. One of the Colombian seminary students went back into town on another cambion to see if he could help them. Just then a cambion approached from the rear, loaded full of people waving sticks and fists and shouting at the top of their voices. It swerved around our cambion and parked crosswise right in front of us. Immediately they all jumped out and began to pick up arms-full of rocks, cursing and threatening to throw them at us. It was a very ticklish situation to be in, and exciting to say the least, because the driver of our cambion, being a Catholic himself, and probably very frightened, refused to move.

A Ticklish Situation

Finally, however, after talking with the people, they dropped some of their rocks and permitted the driver to pass. We came on into Medellin and gathered at the school for a prayer meeting for those in the jeep and in town who were still in danger.

The Lord heard our prayers and fulfilled His promise in II Chronicles 16:9, "For the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him." At noon we received word that everyone was safe, although some were badly bruised.

Was it worth the trouble of distributing the Gospels only to see many of them torn up? Around one statute of Mary, the ground was as white with the torn pages as if it had snowed. We realized that many more would be gathered up and burned by the priest according to the usual procedure. The Lord has said, however, that His word would not return unto Him void. The very same day it was found that people were offering to pay a dollar for a copy of the Gospel, and others were going to the missionary's home asking for more.

Priest Leads Children Against Protestants

I received the story directly from the missionary who was left in town with the seminary student, and I feel that he has cause to say that he knows somewhat of how Christ must have felt when the crowds cried against him. Most of the streets ran directly into the center of town, but there were a few cross streets to which these two were assigned. Thus it was that by the time they approached the center of town the people were becoming angry because the Gospels were handed out. Three men came running after them with Gospels which they tore up and threw into their faces. Just then a priest came around the corner and he really started things going. He went into a school close by and got the children all to come out, leading them along with the rest of the mob against the two. He called them Protestant dogs and threatened to kill them like dogs; the crowd took up the challenge shouting, "Long live Mary!" One man hit the missionary in the face with his fist.

The Colombian student who was with him said to the priest that they had their rights, and on seeing two police a block away, they went over to them. The policemen said that the best thing they could do would be to get out of town, and, of course, they agreed; but none of the cambions or taxis would take them because the mob threatened to boycott their lines if they did.

Police and Priest

Finally, they marched out of town with the protection of seven policemen, but were followed by the priest leading the angry mob. At the edge of town where the cambion had been parked they found that the other Colombian who had come back into town was being beaten by the other mob. The policemen rescued him and then some of them held the mob back while the others continued with the three on the road to Medellin. After walking a long way out of town, the police stopped a dump truck which then took them into Medellin.

In the meantime the jeep was charged by two more cambions full of the maddened mob that had broken through the police lines. One pulled up in front and the other in back and the people cut all the tires so that the missionaries had to flee for refuge into a near-by country club. From there they were able to get back safely to Medellin with police protection.

Was it Worth the Trouble?

Was it worth the trouble of distributing the Gospels only to see many of them torn up? Around one statue of Mary, the ground was as white with the torn pages as if it had snowed. We realized that many more would be gathered up and burned by the priest according to the usual procedure. The Lord has said, however, that His word would not return unto Him void. The very same day it was found that people were offering to pay a dollar for a copy of the Gospel, and others were going to the missionary's home asking for more. One man offered his building to be used for Evangelical services which before had been held in the missionary's home. Later the mayor called the missionary, expressed his interest, and asked him to speak to a meeting of the town council and to explain to them what it was all about.

This is typical of the reception the Roman Catholic Church gives to the Gospel in Colombia. There are many other examples of the persecution of the Evangelicals here. Pray with us that this land might experience a revival and that men might come to know Christ in all His fullness and glory.

THIS IS MY MISSION FIELD

By Marie A. Yoder

To plow a furrow straight and clean today;
To watch my step, for little feet will come this way;
To love my wife, my neighbor, but alway
My Saviour best of all—
This is my mission field!

To shine my cups; my humble morsel share;
To teach dear baby lips the truth of prayer;
To trust in God; some crushing burden bear
With those whose faith is small—
This is my mission field!

To do an honest work wherever I am found;
Amid the whir of wheel or factory sound;
To praise or pray, when curses may abound
From those in Satan's thrall—
This is my mission field!

To lose my life for others, for His sake,
In foreign land; a crown of stars to make
Of souls of men; to die unknown, to wake
With Christ my all in all—
This is my mission field!

ENNS' SERVICE IN CONGO RECOGNIZED

Inman — Mr. and Mrs. Frank I. Enns have received special awards from the Prince Regent of Belgium for meritorious service in the Belgian Congo.

Enns has been awarded the gold medal of the Royal Order of the Lion while Mrs. Enns received the gold medal of the Order of Leopold II.

They have been missionaries since 1926. Their work has been mostly in the field of education while serving under the Congo Inland mission.

Enns returned to Africa last September after a year of furlough.

Mrs. Enns at present is living in Inman, making a home for the children. She hopes to rejoin her husband in Africa next year.—Hutchinson, Kansas News-Herald, April 18.

NEWS FLASH FROM INDIA

JAMES KENNETH is the name that has been given to the nine-pound, newly-born son of the Lubin Jantzens, missionaries at Jagdeeshpur, C.P., India.

Rev. John Thiessen and family have arrived from India on the Queen Elizabeth, on Pier No. 90, New York, Monday, April 11th. They plan to stay in Middlebury, Indiana, and Chicago, Illinois, until the latter part of May and then they will go to Kansas.

The Family Worships At Home

Suggestions for Family Worship

Strive to make it a real worship experience for all, including the children. It is possible to have the appearances of an altar in the home and still not engage in meaningful worship. An altar is the place where God and His people meet. Parents are challenged to lead their children into a consciousness of God's presence. The main thing in family worship is to worship. That is more than just "saying" prayers.

Avoid being monotonous and dry.

One may get into the habit of always using the same expressions in prayer and of making the same requests. Prayers should not be mumbld or muttered in a way that it is not possible to follow. There should be animation and real spirit in our praying with the family. Moreover, the order of the worship ought to be varied from time to time. Our task as parents is to make family worship interesting to the children as well as profitable. It must be so in order to be a blessing to them.

Make adaptations to the family group

It cannot be family worship unless it is adapted to children also. Where there are children it will require thoughtful effort on the part of parents to get down to their level. Be careful to provide something they can understand and enjoy. Stories read, or preferably told, have a great appeal to children. Continuous reading of heavy passages may destroy their interest. The time and place of meeting for family worship should also be determined in the light of the family situation and need.

Be informal

This is not to be at the expense of order and quietness. There must be warmth, liberty, and freedom of expression rather than coldness and formality, which tend to kill the spirit of worship. There might well be a discussion of some spiritual truth which has been read from the Bible, perhaps an application of it to any family needs. Questions from children should be seized upon as golden opportunities for planting truth, and should be answered patiently even if it does change the course of the worship as planned.

Encourage Participation

If one member of the family always does the reading and the praying there is little else left for the others to do but listen. Children and young people usually are glad to take part when invited to do so. They will appreciate this family experience if they also may read and pray or tell a story, or lead a favorite hymn. Children may even be asked to plan the worship exercise.

Be Brief and Interesting

This must be watched particularly if children are small. They are incapable of long periods of sustained interest. They should not be wearied with long, difficult doctrinal passages and prayers which belong in the secret closet. Better be brief and interesting than tedious and dry.—Gospel Herald

PULLING IT APART

By Charles A. Wells

These are uncertain stormy days and if ever growing America needed a warm, stable, firm home life, it is now. But unfortunately a great proportion of our homes are being torn apart, leaving throngs of children exposed to the storms of life before they are able to make their own choices and face the emotional impact of the ruthless struggle to survive. Right at the time they need the tenderness of a mother with the strength and understanding of a father, they are experiencing the ripping apart of those things upon which their sense of security is based. Any examination of these tragedies reveals that in the vast majority of the cases the failure is spiritual, an utter lack of religious principles, unrestrained selfishness that inevitably leads to neurotic extremes; these are the forces working through this tragedy. The home is no stronger than its spirtual foundations.

Refugee Families Arrive

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA.—A significant development in the Mennonite refugee migration program is the fact that six families arrived in Boston on April 24. These are the first Mennonite refugee families from Europe who have come to the United States under the U.S. Displaced Persons Act. The sponsors of these people are located in states as far apart as Maryland and California. By April 27 these families reached the places where they now take up their abode. A seventh family is expected to arrive in the United States on April 26.

For over six months the refugee migration staff has been working on the U.S. immigration, and time after time difficulties have been encountered. It is hoped that these first families may be followed by others likewise. The processing of Mennonite families for migration continues in Germany. At present there are 21 families who have their U.S. visas, but their departure is temporarily delayed for technical reasons. The sponsors of these families have been notified that they can expect the coming of the refugees soon.

During the past few years there has been much interest among the American Mennonites in assisting the refugee brethren in their migration to a new homeland. Thus far it has been possible to help them only by contributions of materials and money, and by spiritual ministry among them. Now the opportunity to bring them into our homes, churches and communities is becoming a reality. To help them feel at home and become established is our responsibility and privilege.

Special Need for Leather

Leather is urgently needed for shoe repair work in Germany. The MCC Community Centers have found opportunity for a much appreciated service in providing shoe repair facilities which, it is hoped, may continue as long as shoes are a critical item. Special cash contributions may be designated for leather purchases.

More Service Workers Take Training

A third group of Voluntary Service workers is enrolled in an orientation course extending from April 15 to May 15. Those participating are: Willard Albrecht, Middlebury, Indiana; Mr. and Mrs. Claude Beachy, Grantsville, Maryland; Emma Bergen, Aberdeen, Saskatchewan; Carl Derksen, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Erna Derksen, Abbotsford, B. C.; Gerald Hershberger, Walnut Creek, Ohio; Willard Hooge, Windom, Minnesota; Allen Dale Kaufman, Galva, Kansas; Kenneth Miller, Shipshewana, Indiana; Edward Stutzman, Berlin, Ohio; Robert Swartz, Spring City, Pennsylvania; Harvey Wall, Hillsboro, Kansas. Service assignments will be made near the end of the training course.

What Mutual Aid Can Mean to the Church

This is only one of the questions discussed in the booklet Christian Mutual Aid, by J. Winfield Fretz, The viewpoint in this handbook of brotherhood economics is in harmony with the scriptural teaching and also gives recognition to the experience of the church in the past. The book represents a "conscious effort to challenge the secular trend of the times which threatens to denature the Christian community and make its members increasingly dependent upon the state and the commercial world with consequent transfer of loyalty from the church to other agencies." The wide study of this booklet throughout the church is strongly encouraged. Order copies at 25c each or $2.50 per dozen from MCC, Akron, Pennsylvania.

GOLD DISTINCTION SEALS, AVAILABLE AT CONFERENCE BOOK STORES

In several courses of the new Summer Bible School Series there is a suggestion for granting gold seals with ribbon attachments to children completing the memorization of all songs in the music section of the course studied.

Our Conference book stores now own a device by which they can prepare such seals for sale at 1½ cents each.

This seal is a two inch gold disc with the cross as its center. Over it is the pledge of love: "We love Him because He first loved us." Under the cross are the words, "Summer Bible School."

Though these seals are suggested for use with the sections, they can serve also as distinction awards for workbooks completed and well done.

We suggest that each school supply the ribbon for use with the seal. Ribbons could vary in color with each course completed.

Please send orders for seals early to any of the following bookstores: Mennonite Book Store, 710 Main, Newton, Kansas; Mennonite Book Concern, Berne, Indiana; Mennonite Book Store, Rosthern, Saskatchewan, Canada.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Messengers Of Peace

Members of the Bluffton College Peace Action Club have been active during the past months in giving programs in Middle District Conference churches in promotion of the peace principle. Five teams are organized, each with their own topic under discussion, and made available and are still available to churches for Sunday services or week-end seminars.

"Dynamics of Non-Resistance" is the general subject of the first team. The topics "The Path to Peace," "The Greatest Thing in the World," and "Leading Through Love," are discussed. Speakers were Robert Amstutz, a senior from Bluffton, president of the Middle District Young People's Union, class president, and formerly in CPS; Myrtle Wasser, a senior from Bedminster, Pennsylvania, secretary of the YPU, a member of the summer service unit at Norristown, and a Christian youth leader; Merrill Bogg of Lima, Ohio, formerly in the Brethren CPS, a Methodist minister, president of the Allen County Peace Association.

The second team with the subject "Conscription" uses the sub-topics of "Freedom in God's Image," "Caesar or God," and "Pattern for Death" with the following speakers: James Harnish, a senior from Bluffton, formerly in CPS, and former president of the Peace Club; Charles Richert, a senior from Bluffton, president of the YMCA, and Presbyterian pre-ministerial student prior to his prison sentence for non-registration; Herman Neff, Munich, Germany, who spent five years in the German military machine and one year in American captivity.

"Minorities" is the theme of the third group with speakers on "The Leaven of Society," "The Third Dimension," and "The Scapegoat of History." Leaders here are Helen Klassen, a senior from Bluffton, pre-nursing student, women's Gospel Team president, and in summer service at Cleveland, Ohio, 1946; Jean Wismer, junior from Hilltown, Pennsylvania, secretary of the Peace Club, member of the summer service unit at Gulfport, Mississippi, in 1948 and Skillman, New Jersey, in 1947; Robert Ramseyer, a junior from Bluffton, president of College Church, in summer service at Pueblo, Colorado, 1947 and 1948.

Under the heading of "Institutions" the fourth group gives talks on "The Crime of Punishment," "Out of Sight, Out of Mind," and "Sight Restored." Speakers are Otto Klassen, a senior from Bluffton, Peace Club president, a pre-medical student, in summer service at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1947, 1948; Martha Lee Yoder, a senior from Topeka, Indiana, in summer service at Norristown, Pennsylvania, in 1946 and Richmond, Indiana, in 1948; John Stutzman, a junior from Carlock, Illinois, a pre-medical student, and in summer service at Pueblo in 1947 and Washington, D. C. in 1948.

The last group under the theme "Towards One World" gives their ideas on "The Eastern Empire," "Puerto Rico," "DP'S", and "Crossing National Boundaries." Speakers here are Robert Pannabecker, a senior from Chicago, Illinois, formerly in CPS, lived most of his life in China, and returned from a Brethren Tractor Unit in the fall of 1947; Angel Luis Gutierrez, a native of Puerto Rico, a junior and a Baptist pre-ministerial student; Jake Friesen, a native of Russia, an early migrant to Paraguay, studying medicine in the United States to be better able to serve his people; and Dennis Epp, a junior from Mountain Lake, Minnesota, a member of the student European Voluntary Service group the summer of 1948.

The purpose of all of these teams is to derive mutual benefits, promote further spiritual growth, and to find a creative answer to conflict.

Price Isn't Everything

Our Mennonites, with a flair for economy for everything that they do (and publish) will be interested in one angle concerning the new Summer Bible School materials.

Many different publishing houses put out material for the summer Bible school, and price was certainly one of the elements to be considered when the venture was first launched. The question always is: "How much will the people be willing to pay for a summer Bible school workbook?"

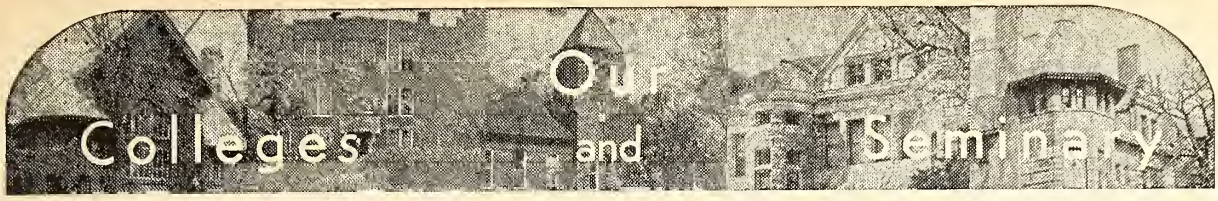
It was clear that the summer Bible school materials as planned would naturally cost more than many other materials available on the market. However, the quality of the materials, the scope, the manner of presentation, and the total thinking underlying the series was such that the publishers felt sure that our people would be willing to pay a little bit more for the additional quality. Experience has amply justified this conclusion. Sales in Mennonite circles have been extremely steady, and even non-Mennonite communities and churches have become enthusiastic about the Mennonite Bible School materials and have used it in their union schools.

At Aberdeen, Idaho, for example, where the churches put on a community school, the ministers of the various churches were unanimous in their enthusiastic endorsement of these materials and are planning to use them again this year. The same is being repeated over and over again.

Have you made your selection for your local Bible school for the summer of 1949? The materials have been available for shipment from our Conference book stores at Newton, Berne, and Rosthern, April 1, and all our Sunday schools and churches are urged to get their plans and their orders ready for prompt shipment so that you will have your materials in ample time.

POSTER CARAVAN NEWS

Twenty-two posters have already come in for the India Jubilee Poster Caravan being sponsored by the Western District sub-committee of the General Conference India Jubilee Committee. They represent two groups of poster, one from the church at Fredonia and another from the Oklahoma Bible Academy.



Our Colleges and Seminary

NATIVE INDIAN SPEAKER AT BLUFFTON

Mrs. Zarina Kukda, a native of India, was on the campus April 19 and 20 under the auspices of the Student Volunteers. She spoke at two regular chapel services, met with smaller student groups, and was available for personal conferences with students. Mrs. Kukda received her M.A. degree from Michigan State College. Her father was a Methodist minister. The Student Volunteers have borrowed her services this year from the Methodist Women's Missionary group.

Dr. J. A. Huffman was the vesper speaker May 1. Dr. Huffman formerly taught at Bluffton College, from where he went to Marion College and then to Taylor University. He is now located at Winona Lake, Indiana. His subject was "What it Means to be a Christian."

Two deputation groups from the Girls' Gospel Team gave programs in the four Central District Conference churches of northern Indiana April 24.

Pres. Ramseyer attended a meeting of alumni and former students in Bloomington, Illinois, April 23. He and Rev. Harry Yoder attended the Eastern District Conference the last of April.

Rev. J. N. Smucker was elected to a six year term as a trustee of the college at the Middle District Conference April 22. He had served one year in this capacity, filling out the unexpired term of Rev. A. S. Rosenberger when the latter left the Middle District Conference a year ago.

CONFERENCE AT SEMINARY

Five people from the Seminary took part in the Mennonite Central Committee Summer Service Leaders' Conference held here April 22-24. Our participants included Erna Friesen, Henderson, Nebraska, who directed the General Conference Voluntary Service last year; Melvin and Frances Funk, veterans of the M.C.C. projects in Gulfport, Mississippi, and in Mexico; Jacob D. Goering, who had a number of years service in the C.P.S. program; and Don E. Smucker, who is serving on the committee arranging the Student Industrial Project in Chicago. Two units will be living at the Seminary this summer—the Student Industrial Project of the Mennonite Central Committee, and the City Mission Team of the General Conference.

A number from here attended the Middle District Conference at the Grace Church at Pandora, Ohio. Included were President and Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker; Rev. John T. Neufeld; Orlin Frey of Noble, Iowa; Irvin Richert, Los Angeles, California; Ronald von Riesen, Newton, Kansas; Missionary Harold Ratzlaff, Jagdeeshpur, India; Esko Loewen, Topeka, Indiana; and Rollin Moser, Nappanee, Indiana.

Melvin Gingerich of Goshen, Indiana, director of the Mennonite Research Foundation, addressed the Seminary Wednesday night on the subject "Mennonites and Race Relations." This is part of a series which has been brought about because of the immediate developments of the racial problem in this neighborhood.

Plans are proceeding for our final spiritual retreat of the year to be held at Camp Mack, Milford, Indiana, May 7 and 8.

BETHEL ANNOUNCES APPOINTMENTS

Pres. Ed. G. Kaufman of Bethel College announces the appointment of Prof. D. C. Wedel now attending Iliff School of Theology, Denver, Colorado, as administrative assistant to the president. This is a new position created by the Board of Directors. President Kaufman some years ago had requested that such an officer be appointed as soon as a suitable person could be secured. Professor Wedel was acting dean of the college here last year during Dean P. S. Goertz's relief work in Europe, and is now on leave of absence to continue his studies.

Dr. H. A. Fast, who after the sudden death of Dean Goertz shortly before the opening quarter last fall, in the emergency consented to serve as acting dean for one year, will upon his request and due to his many other duties return to full-time teaching in addition to heading the Division of Bible and Christian Education. He will be succeeded as acting dean by Dr. R. C. Kauffman, professor of psychology and chairman of the Division of Social Science.

Other administrative appointments announced at this time are: Eldon Graber, instructor at Bethel since 1945 and now on leave to work toward his Ph.D. degree, as acting registrar of the college. This office has been vacant for several years and the duties have been carried by the dean's office with the assistance of the recorder, Mrs. Elaine Loganbill.

Orlando Wiebe, cost accountant and internal auditor for the United Gypsum Co., Chicago, will assume the duties of comptroller. Harry Martens will remain business manager. Mr. Wiebe graduated from Bethel in 1942 and continued his studies at the Chicago Theological Seminary and the New York Union Theological Seminary.

Erwin Goering will serve as Dean of Men, the position now held by Dr. J. Winfield Fretz. Mr. Goering was executive secretary of the alumni association and assistant in public relations until last fall when he enrolled in the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, for graduate work.

Two new divisional chairmen have been appointed from members of the instructional staff. Dr. Fretz is succeeding Dr. R. C. Kauffman as chairman of the Division of Social Studies. M. S. Harder, associate professor of education, will become head of the Division of Applied Arts and Sciences.

"The Servant in the House" by Charles Rann Kennedy is being presented by the senior class on Friday and Saturday, May 6 and 7, Memorial Hall.

Jottings

—First Church, Colfax, Washington: April 10 Rev. Andrew Shelley spoke on behalf of the Peace Rally. He also gave a program at Pullman before the Collegiate Fellowship Body. Following a potluck dinner at the church a concert by the Multnomah School of the Bible in Portland was presented, with testimonies added. Rev. Solomon Mouttet of the Go Ye Mission showed pictures of the work and need there. The Missionary Society sent 128 pounds of new and used clothing and $60 to Akron, Pennsylvania, for the stocking drive.—Mrs. Horace D. Rogers, Corr.

—Arlington Church, Arlington, Kansas: A community Easter program was held on Good Friday evening with members of all four local churches participating. Members of our church took part in both the chorus and in the play entitled, "If I Be Lifted Up." Easter Sunday the Intermediate Sunday school class was host to the entire church for a picnic dinner at the home of Lois Kopper. Guests from Newton and Oklahoma were present.—Mrs. Lester Ewy, Corr.

—Hebron Church, Buhler, Kansas: Miss Helga Kemnitzer spoke to us March 27. The Buhler High school choir presented a sacred program of music in the Buhler High school auditorium, sponsored by the young people of the Hoffnungsau, Buhler, and Hebron churches. Refreshments were served after the program.

—Gospel Church, Mt. Lake, Minnesota: A series of evangelistic meetings were conducted by Rev. Albert Ewert, Bridgewater, South Dakota, recently. He emphasized the preparation to meet our God. The pastor gave a series of pre-Easter messages. Communion services were observed on Good Friday morning and vesper services with special organ music by the pastor in the afternoon. In spite of the cold weather on Easter morning, the church was filled. Miss Kemnitzer related to us the conditions in Germany during the Sunday school hour. The Freeman College choir presented a program in the evening. —E. G., Corr.

—First Church, Nappanee, Indiana: "Our Reasonable Service," was the theme chosen by Rev. Harold Ratzlaff for our Holy Week services with messages on worshiping Him in service, faith, learning, consecration, communion, adoration, and answering His call. Mrs. Ratzlaff and daughter joined us over the week-end.

—Zion Church, Elbing, Kansas: Our Sunday school recently contributed twenty-five pairs of shoes to the "Shoes for Relief" project.— Dorothea Dyck, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Mt. Lake, Minnesota: Our congregation was richly blessed by the pre-Easter services led by Rev. J. N. Smucker. Reverend Waltner was in Pandora, Ohio, that same week. On March 27 President Edmund Miller of Freeman Junior College gave the morning message. On Palm Sunday a sacred Easter concert was given in the church by the Mt. Lake High School chorus. Good Friday the Freeman Junior College sang in our church. Miss Helga Kemnitzer, a Bethel College exchange student from Germany, spoke Sunday evening. Our Young People's Fellowship collected 325 pairs of shoes and 280 pairs of stockings for relief recently.—Helen Penner, Corr.

—Schoenwieser Church, Winnipeg, Manitoba: "Das Suehnopfer des Neuen Bundes" by Carl Loewe was presented by our Menno Choir on Good Friday accompanied with an organ and a cello. Over 1000 persons attended this concert. On April 19 the Freeman Junior College choir gave an Easter program at the church. Among the numbers was a talk given by Miss Margarite Schnebele, an exchange student from Germany, who spoke on her first impressions of America.—Justina Hildebrand, Corr.

—Deer Creek Church, Deer Creek, Oklahoma: Holy Communion was observed on Easter Sunday morning with Rev. Richard Ratzlaff in charge. Sunday evening, April 17, the church choir, with Elton Krehbiel directing, presented "The Redemption Song." Monday, April 18, the A Cappella Choir from Bethel College gave a concert in the High school auditorium.

—Apostolic Church, Trenton, Ohio: Hanno Klassen, a student from Germany attending the Biblical Seminary in Chicago, brought the message on Palm Sunday. Six members were received into the church through baptism and two by letter. Good Friday services were held in the evening and were well attended. On Easter Sunday special music was rendered by the choir. A large number participated in the communion service.—Edna M. Kinsinger, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Supplying the morning and evening pulpit on Palm Sunday was Rev. G. T. Soldner from Bluffton, Ohio. Speaker for two evenings of the pre-Easter services was Rev. William Stauffer of Sugar Creek, Ohio. On Good Friday and Easter Sunday, Rev. Irvin Richert was able to be with us. Music for the Easter services was furnished by the ladies chorus, the Clinton Sprunger family, a men's octet, and the girls' chorus. Five-minute talks were included for the Juniors in the pre-Easter services. Church services for April 24 have been dismissed in preference to the conference at Pandora, Ohio, the Wayne County Christian Endeavor convention at Wooster, Ohio, and visitation Sunday for local churches. The Christian Endeavor and Willing Workers Sunday School Class both held socials last week.—Mrs. Ivan L. Badertscher, Corr.

—First Church, Allentown, Pennsylvania: Maynard Shelly, who is graduating from the Mennonite Biblical Seminary this month, has accepted a unanimous call from our congregation to be our pastor. He will begin his ministry here on July 15, 1949. Our attendance in Sunday school on Easter was 156 or 102.6%. The offering to reduce the debt on the parsonage was $602.96. The choir, under the direction of Lewis Rosenberger, planned the Easter evening service. Scripture passages were read by Mr. William Mohr, Jr. deacon.—Mrs. LeRoy Weidner, Corr.

—New Hopedale Church, Meno, Oklahoma: Rev. Harold Burkholder presented a week of evangelistic services here April 3-10. Good Friday, April 15, was observed by a communion service with Rev. H. U. Schmidt in charge. Thursday evening, April 21, the Oklahoma Bible Academy rendered the Easter Cantata, "Our Living Lord." April 11, Rev. and Mrs. Suckau were with a quartet from Grace Bible Institute and rendered a program. The Bethel College A Cappella Choir presented a musical concert here April 14.—Alvin Ratzlaff, Corr.

—First Church, Fredonia, Kansas: Passion Week services were conducted by Rev. Waldo Harder from the Berean Academy, Elbing, Kansas. Theme for the week was "Steps to the Cross." A boy's quartet, also from Berean, rendered special music. April 24 a Student Volunteer group from Bethel College assisted in the morning services with songs and instrumental music.—Mrs. Sam Harms, Corr.

Music in Puerto Rico

by Iris Ruth Melecio, Bluffton College

In the quietness of the Caribbean Sea, between the two Americas, rests the small island known as Puerto Rico. Although the island is within the tropics, its climate is unusually equable, very agreeable and comfortable. The beauty of the Puerto Rican sky, clouds, flowers, and landscape is hard to compare with any other place around the globe.

La Plata Valley, Puerto Rico

The Puerto Rican is much like his brother in the Continental United States. He is a few inches shorter, perhaps, because of his meager diet, a little darker, maybe, but with similar facial characteristics.

The area of the island is thirty-five miles wide and one hundred miles long with a population of 2,000,000, or 570 per square mile. This density of population is a great problem. It brings about the development of slum areas, which help to develop maladjusted individuals, it brings about lack of food, lack of medical care, lack of self respect, and lack of many of the necessities in life.

Although these are problems to be solved and great needs to be met, much has been said about them and many things have been done toward the solving of them. Definite progress has been made. Little by little, the Department of Health assisted by the schools, and by the Civilian Public Service, sponsored by Mennonites and Brethren Churches, has made many gains. These groups of Mennonites and Brethren, a splendid group of young Christians unselfishly at work for this uplifting labor, have put forth a constructive adventure in human relations. If this work that they are doing is not the ideal, I shall be surprised, but I think that it is. It is Christian fellowship at its best.

The Island's Need of Music

Now let us consider one phase in the life of the Puerto Rican people—music.

Music is the great spiritual and material want of human nature. Good music and songs make a deep and lasting impression which cheers and refreshes men's minds. It is estimated that very few of the persons in mental institutions play any musical instrument whatsoever. This would mean that if a person spends his leisure hours doing something useful, there would be less chance of becoming mentally ill.

Up to now, music education in the island has been left entirely in the hands of private institutions and teachers, hence, it has been a privilege of the few. Establishment of three music conservatories by the government, and the appointment of a supervisor of public school music to inaugurate a system of music education for the schools throughout the island, shows a growing awareness of the problem. It will be years before the island can hope to equal the quality or attainments that music education on this continent (U. S.) has reached; nevertheless, an excellent start has been made, and with continued support, both moral and financial, Puerto Rico should look forward to a general musical renaissance.

These conservatories are located in San Juan, Ponce,

Iris Ruth Melecio is one of the students being sponsored by the Young People's Union as she studies in the United States. She is preparing herself to go back to Puerto Rico and serve her people in the field of music.

and Mayaguez, and are designated to provide an opportunity for musical education to talented young Puerto Ricans, regardless of financial status. However, a need does exist for the setting of more definite standards in the way of more exacting qualifications for the professors, more definite entrance requirements for the students, and certain standards of achievement which must be attained and maintained if the schools, as they develop, are to be recognized in the same class with the best conservatories of the United States.

As for music in the public schools, which has been almost non-existent up to now, a beginning was made two years ago with the appointment of Maria Luiza Muñoz, as Supervisor of Public School Music. She holds a Masters Degree in Public School Music from Columbia University, and now her task is a large one, involving the development and supervision of an integrated music system for the whole island. This program, however, is greatly handicapped by lack of sufficient trained teaching personnel and will never reach the development Mrs. Muñoz desires, until Puerto Rican music teachers can be trained.

If we consider Puerto Ricans, they are a music loving people. The majority of them find their greatest joy in their folk music-rosarios, plenas, decimas. The educated Puerto Ricans have cultivated the "danza" until it is practically a national institution and have developed their share of real artists such as Jesus Maria Sanroma, Antonio Paoli, Hilda Andino, and Graciela Rivera. Now with music education given a chance, there should develop a definite musical consciousness throughout the island, resulting in increased numbers of amateur as well as professional musicians, and more qualified Puerto Rican teachers who will give a voice to the Puerto Rico of today.

The Ministry of Church Music

No other art has exercised a greater influence in the human race than music. But yet church music in Puerto Rico has not been able to obtain so powerful a force. It is very inadequate. There is lacking the trained musicians who are willing to give the best of their knowledge, time, and effort, to the music in the church.

I realize that this task is ours, it rests in the hands of the Puerto Ricans preparing in the field of music. Our task is to encourage other young people of the churches to prepare in this field, and through our example and through our paths, guide them to accomplish these things far above our own accomplishments.

This music will help to sweeten the life of the church people, to soften their griefs, and to soothe their sorrows. Our task is to make church music one of the outstanding attractions in every respect, as a golden chain linking the present day Christians with those of the first century. Our task is to help raise the moral standards of the people and communities around the churches.

Of all the arts, music is the most capable of reflecting every shade of religious sentiment, from the deepest longing of the spirit to the most intense joy. Religious music is the expression of the personal emotional reaction in the soul of the individual. Therefore, our task is to bring about Puerto Rican church music to a success and not only church music, but the music in the schools and all through the island. I am sure that with our prayers and efforts, this will be accomplished.

Young People's Activities in 1948 in Beatrice, Nebraska Churches

The Beatrice Fellowship (which includes the young people of both Mennonite churches) chartered a Santa Fe bus to take forty of the young people to attend the Western District Youth Rally at Moundridge, Kansas. This group also sponsors a "Recreation Night" at the local Y.M.C.A. every second Monday of the month during the winter months.

The climax of the year's activities for the Beatrice Fellowship comes the last week in December when it holds an annual banquet. Last year this banquet was given in honor of the parents, with the theme: "Living Under One Roof." The speaker was Mr. Bennie Bargen, North Newton, Kansas.

The Beatrice Fellowship also sponsored an Easter Sunrise Service.

This organization meets the first and third Wednesdays of the month. Average attendance is about thirty-five.

In addition to the regular meetings and programs and activities which are carried on year after year the young people of the First Mennonite Church prepared boxes of fruit for the aged and shut-ins of the community and delivered them the Sunday evening before Thanksgiving Day, giving a short program at each home.

The young ladies of the church meet on the last Monday evening of every month to prepare bandages for use in the Mennonite Hospital. This group is known as the Knitting Sewing Klub.

CALLING YOUTH TO SERVICE

Units to Start Soon

Oklahoma: two girls; four weeks, beginning May 28.

Arizona: five either sex; eight weeks, beginning May 20 for those who are free at that time; college students may come later.

Los Angeles Mennonite Church: two either sex; four weeks, beginning June 12.

Canadian Youth Farm: three either sex; eight weeks, beginning June 20.

Youth Team: one fellow and one girl; six weeks, beginning July 2.

Harlem Project in New York: one fellow and three girls; beginning in the middle of June. Since this project involves $30 cost to the participant (otherwise supported by the Home Mission Board and the Harlem Parish), we would encourage that the church or some young people's organization help with the expenses of transportation especially with this project.

We Need Recreation in the Home and the Church

By Ozzie Goering, Moundridge, Kansas

There is a grave concern in the mind of many of the Mennonite leaders and older people as a whole, as to what is happening to Mennonite youth. We need only to listen to some of our parents talk for a few minutes before someone remarks about the way that young people run around in this day and age and spend only a very few hours at home—eating and sleeping. It is said that if they are not at a basketball game or a football game yelling their heads off, they run to see a movie or, what is dreaded most by many Mennonite parents, they spend their time in the recreation parlor or the pool hall.

Now let us look at some of the recreation possibilities which are around us and are open to our Mennonite youth. We think of sports such as basketball or football games. Then we think of the theaters which are in almost every town and are easily accessible when there is nothing else to do. In every small town there is also the common "pool hall." Now if there does not happen to be a basketball game at the local high school, which there usually is not Sunday nights, and movies are frowned upon and pool halls are forbidden, then what shall the young couple do on a Sunday night date? Even if there is a church service from 7:30 to 8:30 what is to happen from 8:30 until 11:30? That period of time is a very real problem to youth today and it is no wonder that you find parked cars along the road or see them going to movies Sunday night just because there is nothing else to do. Not everyone has the "gift of gab" so that they can talk steadily for a period of three hours with a girl or a boy with whom they have their first date.

It is our belief that the recreation center of everyone's life should still be in the home—the Christian home. Everything possible should be done to make the time spent at home just as pleasant as possible. However, it is our contention that the home has fallen down in this respect, which is clearly shown by the fact that the young people spend their leisure time away from home in search of recreation and amusements. Since the home has fallen down in this respect we would think that the church would double its effort to sponsor a recreational program with enough vitality so that it will interest the young people. However, in looking back it seems that the church has been lacking time to even perform the so-called "spiritual things" and very little has been done in the area of recreation. Consequently our youth has had to go outside the home and the church to find its recreation, which is undesirable. They have been getting all of their recreational leadership from groups which are not interested primarily in the church. Our job is then cut fairly clear, we must get control of the recreational leadership through the home and church.

This throws out a challenge to every family and especially the head of the family. It is his responsibility to make the home a place where the children can and will find great enjoyment. The home has to be a place where children will want to bring their schoolmates and later their dates. A much greater emphasis is going to have to be placed on this than has ever been before. It doesn't take much money to invest in a few simple acceptable games and puzzles such as checkers, chess, marble games, group games, etc. By far the best idea is to have a recreation room in which you can have a large area to play such games as ping pong and shuffleboard. Talk to your children about such a room and you will find that by giving them a few suggestions and a little assistance they can fix up a room so that it is very attractive. Then encourage them to bring their friends and dates over and let them know that there is a place there where they will not be disturbed, a place where they can turn on the radio as loud as they please and talk loudly without being afraid of getting on someone's nerves. Soon you will find that not only the younger folks are taking part in this recreation but that the whole family will go in for the fun.

Our Mennonite church is open for anyone who has any kind of recreational interests and ideas. These people are hard to find at the present time. It seems as though our people have not yet come to the point where they can see that being a recreational leader in the church should carry the same type of a challenge as a Sunday school superintendent, teacher of a Sunday school class, directing or singing in a choir.

There are several basic things which the church should do. First, the church should provide a place for recreational parties. This does not mean that they necessarily need to build a gymnasium, which would be very desirable, but there should be some place where people can meet as a group. This place should then be furnished with supplies and recreational equipment by the young people. The funds needed for this could be raised through some project.

Then, finally, I think the church should find a good young Christian leader with high ideals who has lots of

A New Way to Take a Vacation

I once knew a man who had his own way of taking a vacation. He loved nothing more than to withdraw into the mountains alone. So, to realize this inner yearning, he prepared a back pack on which he could carry full equipment for his needs for a month. With bedding, clothing, food, and cooking equipment, he would start his trek with a 150 pound load on his back.

Prepared for the trip, he would strike out for the High Sierras. When once there, he would withdraw into remote regions, getting completely away from people. His days would then be spent in serene solitude. Perhaps all morning he would sit on the mountain side looking across a valley, watching a bug or observing a bird. The afternoon may be spent going across the valley and there taking in new vistas of God's creation. He would spend a month in his mountain sanctuary in perfect solitude not seeing a human face all the time.

In the hurry and scurry of today's life, some have made the claim that should we be suddenly snatched from our daily round of work and into such solitude, we would go quite mad. Today's mad, rushing world does not know how to be quiet. Today's world does not know the meaning of meditation. Even when the daily routine is broken by a vacation, all too often our vacation is a mad rush to far distant points and the seeing of as many friends as possible before the mad rush back home—exhausted! That is today's idea of a vacation! Unlike a Paul or Jesus, we cannot withdraw from the multitudinous hurry and scurry of life. We cannot bear our own solitude.

If you want to spend your vacation in a way that is different, coming home not only physically but spiritually renewed as well, consider a vacation which is a retreat from life. Consider a vacation like this friend's withdrawal into the High Sierras. There are many ways that it can be done. Hiking or cycling along Youth Hostel trails may be one such a means. Attending retreats especially planned for such experience may be another. The seeking out of out-of-the-way retreats may be a third. Such can be found in resort areas, in the mountains, and in the north woods.

In such a retreat, let the vacation be not only a vacation but a pilgrimage for the renewal of spirit and of body for the tasks ahead.

"There will be a final reckoning in justice, the last word has not been said when the State holds its tribunals and the representatives of the world have pronounced their judgments. There will be another installment."—Robert Ludlow, Catholic Worker, April 19, 1949, Page 7.

ambition to head up the entire program. The first qualification for such a person is the ability to get along with young people and to hold their confidence. There are several books which I would suggest as helps for anyone interested in this type of work. Some of these are Fun Encyclopedia which can be purchased at almost any bookstore. Two other good helps are Handy I and Handy II which can be purchased from the Cooperative Recreative Service, Delaware, Ohio.

Eternal Victory

The Son of God went forth to meet his foe
With neither shield nor sword; but when he cried:
"Father, forgive!" he dealt the conquering blow
Against all power of hate. Love, crucified,
Lives on forever, lifting mercy's wing
To shield a world plunged deep in suffering.

Editorials

NOW IS THE TIME that youth workers, Sunday School teachers, and pastors should be on their toes encouraging young people who are graduating from high school to consider the claim of Christ upon their lives. Decisions are in the process of being made concerning further education and possible vocation choices. Christ is depending on pastors and youth workers to extend for Him the invitation, "Come ye after me and I will make you to become fishers of men." It is true that only Christ's own call will be satisfying, but it should not be forgotten that more often than we may suppose Christ is expecting us as His representatives to extend the invitaion for him. What are you—pastor, youth worker, or parent—doing to keep young people willing to do God's will? How many in your church are now planning for a full-time church vocation?—JJE

MANY CONGREGATIONS are erecting new structures or making substantial additions. If enough congregations do this at the same time, it can be rather disastrous to the work of the Conference, especially if churches in their financial planning forget that the Conference needs continue even while they are building. There will, of course, be the temptation to say that a given church has hardly spent anything for building purposes for awhile so that it can afford to forget Conference causes for the time being. It is refreshing to read of a pastor who insists that with careful and prayerful promotion and planning it is not necessary to reduce giving for missions, relief, education, etc., while money is being raised for extensive building projects. It would surely be an unforgivable tragedy if people die without the knowledge of Christ on our own mission fields or people in Europe hunger and develop diseased bodies while we build fine church edifices. The question is not a matter of cutting down some place else in our church giving; it is rather a matter of cutting down in other areas where we ought to cut down anyway to attain the simple life.—JJE

IN OUR DAY WHEN THE PROMISE OF SECURITY and significant living seems to be at a new low Christians needs to reexamine their basic hope in life. As the turmoil of our day grows there will be numerous opportunities to be swept into the currents of hatred and godlessness of our time if we do not have a sure anchor. Sincere Christians are being led to believe that the very welfare of missions and Christianity are dependent on the successful political and military out-maneuvering of Russia. When this philosophy bears fruit Christians who are supposed to believe in the omnipotence of love will again be ready to bear the sword of hate. Christians need to realize anew the basic lesson of Calvary. To love is the only way to conquer. Jesus loved perfectly, and even though he was murdered He was the Conqueror. Love's conquest is not immediately evident but it is ultimately certain. Such love needs the broad expanse of the whole world of space and the ages of history to vindicate its finality. What folly then—what utter godlessness — when we say we can love only up to a certain point! The most certain evidence that we are saved is that it is impossible for us to hate or hurt anyone. When Christ thus dwells in us, whether we serve Him through living or dying, we are secure in the Eternal.—JJE

AMONG MANY THERE IS A PERSISTANT FEAR of organization and programs. This is understandable in view of the rather obvious temptation to feel that when a program has been carried through God has necessarily been at work. There is the further temptation to substitute participation in a program for meeting other more crying needs. But when we have raised all our objections to organization and programs, we must still say that God expects us to plan and plan carefully. In the ministry of Jesus there is an obvious strategy in His activities. The disciples, for example, are led step by step into deeper truth. On studying the missionary journeys of Paul in the Acts there is obvious planning so that the seeds of the Gospel which had sprung up in various centers that Paul touched could be cultivated. The difference, however, between the plans and strategy of the New Testament and that of our own day is the fact that there was probably much more time spent in prayer so that they could sincerely say, "it seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us." We should be able to say with assurance that God's plans are our plans and our plans are God's. A powerful church must have complete consecration as the atmosphere for all planning.—JJE

"We Can influence more Japanese by opening the doors of Christian churches than by opening bomb-bay doors." These are the words written by one of Doolittle's bombardiers who made the first bombing attack on Japan to a meeting of his buddies assembled at Galveston. Rev. Jacob Deshazer, now a missionary in Japan, was captured in China after that raid, spending thirty-four months in solitary confinement in a Japanese prison. He was given a Bible by a Japanese guard. Now, from Japan, he writes to his buddies, "I read it and the Lord showed me the way to become a Christian. I did not know before. I decided to love my fellow man and to return good for evil. All hatred was taken from me."

A godly life is one that is properly related to God, to men, and to things.—All other living is abnormal.—C. M. Messenger

Hope For The Hopeless

by Edward J. B. Waltner

Jesus' ministry of healing presents an interesting study. It is interesting to note the different attitudes of the many needy and suffering, as they came to the great Physician.

On the part of Jesus, however, there was but one common response; he had nothing but a deep, loving compassion for the physical and mental distress cases which were brought to his attention. In all cases he at once proceeded on the principle that divine power is for human need. Yes, in all cases except the case of the Greek woman who was in great mental anguish because of her daughter's malady.

In the account as recorded in Matthew 15 and Mark 7 we have this unusual procedure of the great Physician. It would be unusual also for a human physician of our day if he hesitated to help at once.

A Faint Gleam of Hope

First, the woman presented her case with, "have mercy . . . . my daughter is grieviously vexed." Jesus ignored her with apparent indifference as "he answered her not a word." It seems that he had already proceeded on his way when the disciples intervened with, "send her away for she crieth after us." This time the disciples and she got an answer—negative one, when the great compassionate One, with whom there is no respect for person, said, "I am not sent but to the house of Israel." The woman knew the truth of this statement, but still implored him, "Lord help me." Again came the answer, "Let the children be fed first,—it is not meet to take the bread and cast it to the dogs," to which the woman replied in submission, but with a faint gleam of hope. "Truth, Lord, but the dogs . . . ."

She did not Lose Hope

Thus, three times her appeal for help was rejected. How these painful yet loving thrusts must have momentarily added to the agony of her soul, but she did not lose her head nor her hope. She refused to believe there was no help until by sheer perseverence she won a glorious victory.

I believe that this miracle as well as the entire ministry of healing by Jesus has a spiritual significance. Those who at one time or other in their life have had a spiritual experience parallel to this woman's mental or faith struggle will partially understand the terrible ordeal she must have gone through in those anxious and desperate minutes. We praise God for the record of her complete victory in this seemingly unequal contest. A devil behind her and after her, and a seemingly uninterested Saviour turning his back on her as it were. Who can survive under such odds? This story certainly teaches Christians the value of persistant perseverence. And why not? We have all to gain and nothing to lose, knowing that we have a Saviour who is able to "save to the uttermost."

He Kept the Faith

In a shipwreck at sea, the lifeboats were manned and the passengers taken aboard. When all boats were filled to capacity there was yet one man left on the wreck. It was decreed to abandon him to his fate, and the boats rowed out. This man, however, would not accept his fate. He jumped into the water and swam to the nearest receding boat and grasped the rim with his right hand. A burly seaman struck the hand a disabling blow, the man fell back momentarily but soon rallied and once more caught the boat with the other hand. Another blow by the hardened sailor had the same effect, and who would not have now given up, but this man had a will to live and once more he rallied his strength and with superhuman effort neared the boat a third time. By the use of every ounce of strength he could muster, he raised his head and caught the rim of the boat with his teeth, and . . . . . they took him on.

This brief narrative should impress one with the value of hope.

Let him who is battling with fears and doubts remember that one can be down and yet not necessarily out. Saints in all ages have gone through your experience. Think of Christ in the garden and on Golgatha, think of how the patriarch Jacob of old fought his final and decisive battle against his old nature in that memorable night at Peniel. It was so severe that it left him with an unwanted after effect, a handicap, as it were, through life. But what matter, he was victorious; God can often make good use of a human handicap. St. Paul carried a thorn through life which only the grace of God could assuage. It may have been a by-product of the Damascus road event.

Kept in the Lord's Work

Further, we have great men of God living in our day who have drunk from the cup of bitterness and despair, as they testify in their writings. In his book, "My Nervous Breakdown or The Conquest of Fear," the author tells how he was stricken, almost without any warning, in the midst of a successful and promising preaching ministry, and how he went down into "a long night . . . . of eleven years of unbearable mental agony, which at times became as inky blackness, from which there seemed no ray of hope, nor light, nor way of escape." A long struggle, indeed, but he claims to have been almost completely restored and back in the Lord's work.

In "The Christ of The Indian Road" the well known writer and missionary tells how after nine years of service in India he suffered "nervous exhaustion and brain fatigue" and how through a period of several years he experienced his darkest hours of life.

All these mentioned here have been more than conquerors through Him who overcame hell and death, so take courage brother and sister in the Lord, the battering-ram of faith will bring to naught life's insuperable obstacles. In conclusion let me quote a verse from Whittier's "Barclay of Ury."

"Through the dark and stormy night
Faith beholds a feeble light
Up the blackness streaking.

"Knowing God's own time is best
In a patient hope I rest
For the full day breaking."

With MCC Behind The Iron Curtain

Unit Established In Japan

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA. Although the city of Chingkiang has reportedly been taken by the Communist forces, a cablegram states that the two MCC workers located in a feeding station there are safe and carrying on their work. Most of the workers in Shanghai, along with many other Americans in that city, are planning to stay and if the city is taken, to try and work under the new regime. Heretofore it has been the MCC policy to give relief regardless of race, creed, and color. If it becomes impossible to work in China, the work will be brought to a close; however, at present it is hoped that the very much needed work can continue. Various missionaries and personnel of other relief agencies are likewise planning to stay in China to work as long as this is possible.

Workers Arrive in Japan

Word has been received by cablegram that Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Thielman arrived in Japan on April 24. A prefabricated barrack had been sent to Japan some time ago, with the plan that it be available for erection upon arrival of the workers. This will enable economical and suitable housing for the MCC project there. The unit is to be located in the vicinity of Osaka. This will be the first MCC Unit in Japan, although one of the MCC workers, Robert Smith, has been located in Japan for some time working in connection with another Christian relief agency.

Help is Given to Students in Germany

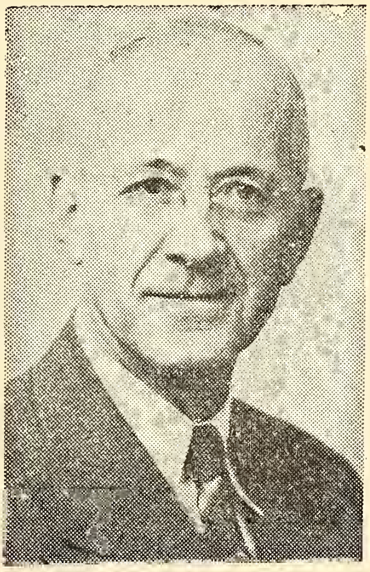
That which is taken for granted by our American students—namely, food, clothing, a place to study, and a place to sleep, has become a terrific problem to the average student in Germany today. To be sure, many American students must of necessity work to pay their way through school, but few if any live under the deplorable conditions of the average student in Germany today. Not only physical factors are their problems, but they are beset by fears, doubts, and discouragements. In spite of all their hardship many are eagerly and earnestly searching for that which is true, that which is eternal. The MCC in its relief and rehabilitation work is giving assistance to these students who are refugees, poor, are returned prisoners, those who are trying to find their way in a world which has crumbled about them. Help given includes gifts of food and clothing, center facilities, and in some cases a short retreat stressing family atmosphere and spiritual fellowship.

Elma Esau Returns to Europe

John Fox of New Holland, Pennsylvania, left on April 19 for France. Donna Yoder of Elkhart, Indiana, sailed for Holland on April 25 for a second term of relief service. Elma Esau of Whitewater, Kansas, formerly a relief worker in Europe and more recently on the MCC Akron staff, left on April 25 for Europe where she will assist in the Mennonite refugee-migration program. Mrs. B. W. Vogt of Corn, Oklahoma, left on April 28 for Uruguay.

Isaac Fredrick returned from Puerto Rico on April 24. Returning on April 26 were Robert and Doris Hamman and Robert Horst, from Europe, and Sarah Hiebert from Paraguay.

Board Secretary To Visit South America



Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander

The Secretary of the Home Mission Board, Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander, is planning to spend three months in South America this summer. He plans to visit all the various Mennonite colonies, so that our mission board may be better able to serve our people. In his absence Rev. J. J. Plenert, 121 Towamencin Ave., Lansdale, Pennsylvania, will serve as Secretary of the Board. All letters should be addressed to him, from May 10 to August 10.

Brother Neuenschwander's plan is as follows: On May 19, 12:45 P.M. he departs from New York. The Brazil Mennonite churches are the first to be visited. Next are the 755 General Conference Mennonites in the two centers in Uruguay. After that, the General Conference Mennonites in Buenos Aires, Argentina, and the Bible school conducted by the Old Mennonites in Bragado, Argentina, will be visited.

The thousands of Mennonites in Paraguay will be visited in July. He also plans to be present at the Ministers' Conference in Karlsruhe, Kolonie Fernheim, Chaco, Paraguay, in July.

Last, but not least, his itinerary will take him to Colombia where the Foreign Mission Board has stations and workers on the field. These and the school shall be visited.

In the name of the Board we commit him and his mission to the intercessory prayers of our people.—J. M. Regier, Chairman of the Board.

God's way of answering His people's prayers is not by removing the pressure, but by increasing their strength to bear it.—C. M. Messenger

Middle District Reviews Program

PANDORA, OHIO. The report of the Executive Committee carrying the following recommendation approved by the conference: "Some have expressed the hope that there might be closer cooperation between the Middle District Conference and the Central District Conference, so we recommend that representatives from our Conference contact the Central Conference and work out a plan for closer cooperation," represented a significant action taken by the sixtieth session of the Middle District Conference.

As the Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio delegates met at the Grace Church in Pandora, Ohio, there was little need to discuss the weather in order to make conversation. This rich progressive farming community has many things in common with all other Mennonite communities from which the delegates and visitors arrived. Yes, the hosts were gracious and hospitable. Was it any wonder? You soon learned that they were a third cousin to your husband's brother-in-law or perhaps an even closer relative once removed. Even the Methodist barber whose four daughters were all married at the Grace Church reports many friends back in your own home town.

Krehbiel Keynotes Conference

The session of the Middle District Conference was off to a good start. Through the inspiration and challenge of the conference sermon, "Speak to the Church That It Go Forward," delivered by the president, Rev. Olin A: Krehbiel, the seriousness of the work ahead was brought into consciousness, and faith was established. "Speak that they go forward—and the children of Israel went into midst of the sea on dry ground." Rev. William B. Weaver, guest speaker from the Central Conference, in his four messages on "The Authority of God's Word," gave stability to the program and to each of the long but expeditious business sessions.

New Officers

Middle District Conference officers elected for the coming year are E. J. Bohn, Grace Church, Pandora, Ohio, President; Irvin Richert, Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio, Vice-President; Carl Lehman, Bluffton, Ohio, Secretary; and N. N. Soldner, Pandora, Ohio, Treasurer.

Bluffton College Reports Progress

Summary of the Bluffton College reports revealed that there are 317 students enrolled, fifty-two per cent of which are Mennonites. The college has had nine consecutive years of operation on a balanced budget. Ground-breaking ceremonies for the new $250,000 physical education building will be held during commencement week activities. Approximately two-thirds of the money for this building has already been received. Two new appointments to the teaching staff for next year are Laurence Burkhalter and Laurel Dirks.

Concern of Peace Committee

The Middle District Peace Committee is charged with the task of assisting the General Conference Peace Committee in raising of its budget, which this year is $35,000. Reports were given on the peace message and how to deal with the forces which constitute a growing menace to those values of civilization which we cherish, on Voluntary Service which began about five years ago and has expanded into a year-round program, and on the major tasks of educating Mennonite youth. The channels suggested for the education process are through preaching, courses of study, literature tables, special speakers and institutes, visual aids, and creative thinking.

Conference Ministers' Retreat

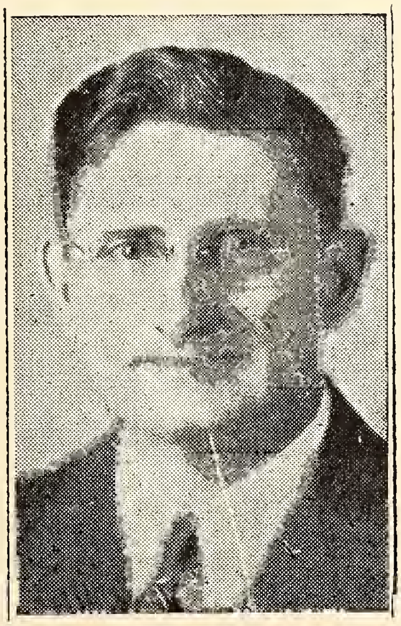
Time For Spiritual Renewal

by J. N. Smucker

The General Conference Ministers' Retreat is scheduled to meet this year, August 11 to 17, at Estes Park, Colorado. It had been postponed last year so as not to conflict with the Mennonite World Conference. Final preparations are being made for a fine gathering and an inspirational fellowship. Vacations should be planned to take advantage of this opportunity of soul developement.

A retreat is a time for meeting fine personalities and leaders. This year our guest leader for the Bible study period and the evening lectures will be Dr. William M. Beahm, Professor of Christian Theology and Missions at Bethany Biblical Seminary (Church of the Brethren). Dr. Beahm has already endeared himself to various Mennonite groups where he has recently appeared. He will be an inspiration and help to all of us, and we expect a real blessing from his ministry among us.

A retreat is a time for withdrawal from the busy routine activities. "Come ye apart and rest awhile", was the admonition of our Lord. We need our occasional change of scene and program in order to best evaluate our regular methods and habits of work.



Dr. William M. Beahm

A retreat is a time of spiritual renewal. We need times of infilling and replenishing. Here is an opportunity to deepen our spiritual lives, refresh our souls, clarify our vision of God's will for us, and gain a new concept of our responsibilities and opportunities.

A retreat is a time for Christian fellowship. In quietness and confidence we find new strength of soul as we fellowship together. We build each other up by sharing our common experiences, problems, and visions. We are drawn into a closer fellowship with God.

A retreat is a time of inspiration. The beauties of nature remind us of the greatness and goodness of God. A fresh presentation of our common tasks inspires us to do better work on our return. We gain new enthusiasms for old tasks.

A retreat is a time for special study and guidance; the sharing of common experiences; the united study of God's Holy Word; the fellowship of hearts in prayer; the waiting upon the Holy Spirit. These experiences can bring us new attitudes of heart.

Much time and effort has gone into the preparation for this retreat and spiritual feast. "Come and Dine."

With this Information PLAN NOW!

Approximate cost for the six-day period! Board, $16.50; room in dormitory, $6.00; registration fee $2.50; making a total of $25.00 per person. Children between the ages of one and six two-thirds off and six to twelve, one-third off. There will be no registration fee charged for those below sixteen years of age. Part-time registrations, $4.50 per day.

Those interested in renting a cabin should make application soon. A few cabins have been reserved and if more are desired, arrangements should be made in the near future. Rates for private cabins will be slightly higher than the above rate of $1.00 per day for room in the dormitory. If anyone is interested, please write Ronald von Riesen, 4614 Woodlawn Avenue, Chicago 15, Illinois.

Further information and publicity will be mailed out soon to all ministers, missionaries, and teachers in the General Conference.

As We See America

Report of Findings Committee of the Foreign Student Conference, Bluffton College, April 1-3

It is rather difficult to give a complete report of all the various opinions expressed during the Foreign Student Conference. Due to differences in background and personality the reactions to our new experiences in America vary considerably. It is our hope that what we here present may be considered a majority report. It represents an effort to summarize the written reports of individual students together with the panel discussion relating to specific values received and the areas of adjustments which present problems to foreign students as they endeavor to adapt themselves to their new environment. Suggestions for facilitating the adjustment of future foreign students were also discussed by the conference and are incorporated in the report. The fact that most of us grew up in our respective countries during and immediately following the war must need to be taken into account in an evaluation of our reactions. The discussion proceeded in line with the following topics:

Out of Want into Plenty

Students coming from various countries notice the high standard of living here. Most of us have lived under difficult circumstances and now have to adjust to the standards in America. This requires an additional amount of money. We feel fortunate that there are many opportunities to earn money in the various jobs which are available. This work experience gives us a new appreciation of the value of the money thus obtained.

It was suggested that the college probably should assist in finding work and in keeping jobs open for those students who arrive after school has started. Those students who do not have money at their disposal immediately might be aided by a loan from the college to cover some small expenses till they can defray them by their own earnings. The financial status of the student should be made clear to him upon arrival to prevent misunderstanding.

An Entirely Different Educational Method

The task of adjusting to an entirely different educational method, which is directed towards a more general education built on a system of assignments and tests given in a foreign language, is rather difficult. However, a Christian atmosphere resulting from a friendly relationship between faculty and students, a sincere concern for the welfare of the individual student is a great help to the foreign student in his adaptation to what would otherwise be a difficult situation. Most students have also appreciated the friendly attitude of the American students. The educational emphasis upon the importance of our Mennonite heritage as it relates to our present day witness in the world has impressed many.

Detailed information to the prospective student in his home country about the specific fields and courses offered and credits given would be of considerable help.

At First, Confused

The informal atmosphere and the genial hospitality in the homes has done much to make the foreign students feel at home, even though the social standards and customs differ. The numerous activities, which seemed at first confusing, are now considered a means of attaining a better understanding of the Americans and more particularly of the Mennonite church, especially since much of the life is based upon group activity. To find one's way through the enthusiasm for sports, organized activities, the complexity of boy-girl relationship, and to find a balance between these extra-curricular activities and study is a difficult task.

A roommate, who has been carefully selected, can be a great help in guiding the student through this maze. A faculty-student meeting in the beginning of the school year will be of help also. The student-deans are in a position to give helpful information. The Mennonite way of life as expressed in nonconformity, with the restrictions which this includes, would be more easily accepted, understood, and appreciated if the student would konw more about the general American way of life, which is in many ways in conflict with the New Testament teaching.

No statement can be made which would be generally accepted due

GREETINGS TO THE YOUNG PEOPLE OF THE MENNONITE AND WALDENSIAN AND REFORMED CHURCHES.

In these days the foreign students at Mennonite and affiliated Colleges are united for a conference at Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio.

As students from Brazil, China, France, Germany, Holland, India, Italy, Paraguay, Spain, and Switzerland we came here together to share our experiences in America.

Although our group consisted of members of different backgrounds, we found that we can have a unity in Christ which helps us to overcome the barriers. We hope that our experience here in a smaller group may be carried out and might lead to a greater fellowship between the young people of our various countries.

That the prayer of our Lord may be fulfilled:

"Holy Father, keep them in thy name which thou hast given me, that they may be one, even as we are one." (John 17:11) to the various church affiliations of the foreign students and the different types of church groups to which they have to adjust. As a whole the adjustment in this area was considered less difficult than in other fields. Sunday schools, revival meetings, prayer meetings are appreciated more properly after the student has learned to understand them through preparation. All students are impressed and influenced by the emphasis on Bible study and the practical application of the Christian faith in every day living, and the great concern which is manifested for the physical, moral, and spiritual welfare of individuals. This concern is also expressed through missions and relief work by the various groups of Mennonites. The basic truth of non-resistance, which has not been emphasized in some of our home churches has been impressed upon us through our experience in Mennonite and affiliated colleges.

More adequate information concerning the policies and disciplines of the particular branch of the church which sponsors the college attended by the student would greatly facilitate the adjustment process.

A Broader View

We learned to live, work, and study with students from different backgrounds and different nationalities, who are yet one with us in Christian fellowship and mutual understanding. We received

Evangelism In The Pacific District

by Wilbert A. Regier

Greetings in the name of the Lord of the harvest. In order that the brethren of the General Conference might be somewhat familiar with some of the efforts that we here on the coast are putting forth in the interest of lost souls, we wish to share with you this brief report.

During our 1948 conference session conducted at Aberdeen, Idaho, the recommendation of the Evangelization Committee was adopted, which, briefly stated, called upon our conference to enter the Foster, Sweet Home, Oregon, area with the purpose of reaching out for the otherwise unreached. This area is approximately twenty-eight miles to the east of Albany, Oregon, and lies at the foot of the beautiful Cascade Mountain range, and our field is just a few blocks to the south of highway (20) which is one of the main routes from points east. The main industry of this area is lumbering—having just recently put into operation one of the largest saw mills in this section of the country. This has led to a large influx of people, and, as is so often the case, the fact of the spiritual has been overlooked, if not deliberately neglected. Thus, with the vote of support the conference gave as a challenge to action, the committe appointed a local committee near the field to undertake the purchasing of property and all the detailed work that goes into an effort of this kind.

The Lord has blessed our efforts. We were able to purchase an acre and a tenth with a small home on it, for $3,000.00. Most of this has been paid. Our prayerful desire is that soon we might be able to begin construction of a small chapel that is badly needed. Our workers, Rev. and Mrs. Alfred Schwartz, formerly of the Country Church of Monroe, Washington, are having services in their home. The attendance has been averaging approximately twenty-two, and our hearts are lifted to Him in deep gratitude that ours should be the privilege of making Christ known where He is not being proclaimed.

We might say further that even though there are a few Mennonite families in this section, it is not the purpose of the conference to establish a General Conference Church there, but rather to make it a mission work—reaching out for those that have not found Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. Thus the work has been called, "The Sweet Home Community Chapel." As a Conference, and especially as workers in this field, we solicit your earnest prayers that the Holy Spirit might go before—touching hearts to the end that they might come to know Him and be delivered from the awful torments that await those that leave this world without being washed in the blood of Jesus Christ.—The Evangelization Committee.

Enthusiastic About Summer Bible School Series

One of the summer Bible schools that used the new summer Bible school materials last summer, even before the General Conference adaptations had been incorporated as they now are in 1949, writes as follows:

". . . . tell you how much I enjoyed the new Bible course, and not only how much I enjoyed it, but also the children.

"We have tried quite a few different Bible courses in our school, but we liked this one the best of them all.

"We have four weeks of school, but we barely got through the books, for there is so much material in them, and even now I know that we didn't go through them as thoroughly as we would have liked to and should have.

"It was a great help to me in teaching that it always gave the 'purpose of each lesson' in the Teacher's Manual . . . The most important thing that I noticed throughout the lessons in each grade was that the purpose of this course was not only to make the children more familiar with the Bible stories, but also to teach them the need of a Personal Saviour, and lead them with God's help to accept the Lord Jesus, and those who had already done so, to bring them in closer touch with Him.

". . . . One day one of the girls in the sixth grade said, 'I enjoy it more working in my workbook than to have you read a story to us.' And we all know how boys and girls enjoy stories.

". . . . Don't worry that the books are only for two weeks, and our schools mostly last for three or four weeks, for there is plenty of material. We didn't even have time to review the way we should have. Of course, it is different where there is a teacher for each grade, but even then there would be plenty of material."

The above is not an isolated case, but it represents the experience, pretty generally, which summer Bible schools have had in connection with the new Bible school series.

If you have not received publicity telling in detail about the new series, be sure to write for your publicity to the Mennonite Publication Office, 722 Main, Newton, Kansas. Plans were made for purchasing suitable retreat grounds for the Middle District and Central District Conferences.

Youth Work

During the young people's meeting Steward Lehman, Berne, Indiana, was elected president of the young people's organization and Orlin Frey, Noble, Iowa, was elected field secretary for a three year term. The budget was drastically cut by the young people for next year since this year's budget was not met.

Women's Work

The Women's Missionary Society was in charge of the last Sunday evening meeting with Rev. and Mrs. Harold Ratzlaff, missionaries from India, as guest speakers. Mrs. Edwin Amstutz, Bluffton, Ohio, was elected president of the Women's Mission Society. Reports from the business meeting showed that the society received over $7,000.00 in contributions during the past year.

The 1950 session of the Middle District Conference will be held in Wadsworth, Ohio, where Rev. Russell Mast is now pastor.

BETHEL "GOOD WILL BUILDERS" MEET

Good Will Builders—Bethel's fellowship for grade school boys and girls, will meet at Memorial Hall for a get-together on Saturday, May 14, at 3 P.M. A program of music by the college orchestra and the Junior Choir of Bethel College Church, readings, and skits will be presented. The group will have refreshments and visit the Kauffman museum and the campus. Each Good Will Builder will have an opportunity to contribute a share of his tithing bank to Bethel College.

Edith Claassen has been elected Danforth Graduate Fellow for 1949-1950 to serve as a religious counselor and leader in some university or college campus in the United States. Miss Claassen will attend a five-week leadership training course at the American Youth Foundation camp at Shelby, Michigan.

Gilbert Goering, junior, will be the Student Council president for the coming year.

The Music Department of Bethel College presented Betty Neufeld, soprano, in a senior graduate recital Monday evening, May 2. Walter Jost was presented in a piano recital on Sunday afternoon, May 8.

Mrs. A. F. Tieszen has been appointed instructor of modern languages at Bethel College for the coming year. Mrs. Tieszen has taught languages at Freeman Junior College and Bluffton College, and has also served as interpreter for the United States government.

Six representatives from Bethel College attended the MCC Voluntary Service meeting in Chicago called for prospective summer service leaders. Hulda Gaede, Orlando Friesen, Ernest Goertzen, Paul Jantzen, Leo Miller, and James Hean made the trip.

During the week of April 25-29 Bethel College Week was conducted in offering a varied program. Chapel programs dealt with purpose and plans of a Christian college. Small fellowship groups of faculty, staff, and students gathered at Faculty homes two evenings to discuss the problems of the Bethel College "family."

SEMINARY HAS DVBS INSTITUTE

Benno Toews, a member of the graduating class, has announced his appointment to the faculty of Mennonite Bible College in Winnipeg, Canada. The son of the well known David Toews, Mr. Toews has had experience in Rosthern Jr. College and Freeman Jr. College and will share a place on the faculty in Winnipeg with Arnold Regier, who is also a graduate of Mennonite Biblical Seminary.

On May 5 and 6 the annual Daily Vacation Bible Institute was held for all Brethren and Mennonite students who will be doing a considerable amount of this important work in the summer. A few weeks ago the Sunday School class was taught by Mary Royer of Goshen College, who has written the Daily Vacation Bible School material of the Mennonite Publishing House.

On Sunday, May 1, Laurence Burkhalter of Northwestern University, presented a violin recital at our regular Vesper Service. Graduating from Northwestern this year, he will join the faculty of Bluffton College in the fall of 1949.

May 5 was annual clean up day at the Seminary, at which time the Seminary yard was given a thorough polishing, pruning, trimming, and cleaning.

Dale Nebel, who spent over three years in China for the Mennonite Central Committee, will be here in the Seminary and the Chicago Mennonite churches May 18-20 to present the story of his experiences.

Delbert Schrag, Walter Juhnke, and Olin Yoder attended the Inter-Seminary Spring Conference at Camp High Ridge, Lakeville, Illinois, the subject of discussion being "The Sermon on the Mount—Guide or Rule?"

President S. F. Pannabecker had a busy week attending the Eastern District Conference at the West Swamp Church near Quakertown, Pennsylvania, preaching at the Eighth Street Mennonite Church of Goshen on Sunday, May 1, and returning on time for the Vesper Service here Sunday afternoon at 4:00 P.M. Recently he has been soliciting funds to meet the eleven thousand dollar obligation due on the property at 4606 Woodlawn. He has solicited in Illinois and Indiana.

BLUFFTON TO GRADUATE FIFTY-TWO

Plans are being completed for the commencement season, May 27-30. Seniors took the written part of their comprehensive examinations during the first week in May. Orals will follow soon. Seniors and sophomores recently took the General Culture Test. The commencement speaker this year will be Dr. Bernard Clausen, pastor of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church in Cleveland. The graduating class will be as large as any yet to graduate from this institution. Fifty-two students expect to complete their work for the degree either by commencement time or by the end of the summer. An additional event in the series of commencement activities will be the breaking of ground for the new auditorium-physical-education building.

Prof. Sidney Hauenstein, for many years a member of the staff of the music department, has been ill for many weeks in the Bluffton hospital. May his many friends remember him in prayer.

The new college catalog will be issued early this month. Those desiring a copy may have one by writing the college office.

Prof. Paul Shelly attended the Eastern District Conference and presented the new Daily Vacation Bible School material, representing the Curriculum Committee of the General Conference.

Jottings

—West Zion Church, Moundridge, Kansas: Gustav Reimer, a student at Bethel College from Danzig, Germany, spoke here recently on "What American Churches Might Learn From the Experiences of the German Churches." He stressed that we should hold on to our heritage or it would be taken from us. We must do something about it. He warned against indifference and compromise under pressure. Our pastor, Rev. W. F. Unruh, spoke on "Evangelism in India" recently.—Esther Schmidt, Corr.

—Immanuel Church, Delft, Minnesota: April 10 the men's choir and a ladies trio went to Sioux Falls, South Dakota, to present a program in the Union Gospel Mission. Good Friday evening the young people of the church presented an Easter pageant entitled "From Darkness to Dawn." Saturday, April 16, this church and the M. B. church sponsored a program by the male chorus together with their director Mr. Berg and Prof. John W. Boehr of Grace Bible Institute, Omaha, Nebraska, in the Carson M.B. Church.—Mrs. Russell Goertzen, Corr.

—Lehigh Church, Lehigh, Kansas: Services were held in our church every evening from Palm Sunday through Good Friday with Rev. Robert Tully bringing the messages. Various churches in the community and a quartet from Bethel College furnished music. Good Friday morning Reverend Lange of the Mennonite Brethren Church in Lehigh preached at a union service of the two churches.—M. E. Goering, Corr.

—First Church, Halstead, Kansas: May 15 at 3 P. M. the Christian Endeavor of this church will sponsor the Bethel College Men's Octet. The Hutchinson Mennonite church choir, guest of the C.E., presented their Easter Cantata, "The Resurrection Story" by Carrie B. Adams, on the evening of April 24. The choir was under the direction of Marie Baergen. Paul Schroeder was installed as deacon on April 24. Mr. and Mrs. Ben Unruh and Mr. and Mrs. Marlow Winsky were recently received as new members of the congregation.—Betty Jean Franz, Corr.

—Bethel Church Perkasie, Pennsylvania: A special meeting with Miss Irene Bishop, who was working under the MCC in Europe, was held here March 29. She showed pictures and spoke on the work done in Germany. The evening's offering of $53 was sent to the MCC. We also had the privilege of having Mrs. Alfred Habbegger at our March missionary meeting.—Mrs. Raymond Detwiller, Corr.

—Grace Church, Pandora, Ohio: The sixtieth session of the Middle District Conference convened here April 21-24. The general theme was "The Authority of God's Word," and the theme song "How Firm a Foundation." Rev. Wm. B. Weaver of the Central Illinois Conference gave the Bible messages. The Young People's Conference was held on Saturday evening under the general topic of "Our Responsibilities." Communion services were observed Sunday morning with the visiting pastors taking active part. A musical program was presented on Sunday afternoon and the Women's Mission Society had charge of the evening program. Rev. and Mrs. Harold Ratzlaff gave the messages. Reverend Thiessen, recently returned from India, also spoke briefly.—Susan Basinger, Corr.

—Meadow Church, Colby, Kansas: Sunday, April 10 Mr. and Mrs. Frank D. Goossen commemorated their 25th wedding anniversary. A short program was given. Good Friday morning six members of the Student Volunteer group from Bethel College brought us a program and in the evening our choir brought their Easter message in song. Easter morning an early morning service was held by our neighboring Sunday schools which several of our members attended. April 24 Rev. Walter H. Regier, accompanied by the church choir, went to Vona, Colorado, to bring their Easter program.—Mrs. Peter J. Franz Corr.

—Grace Church, Enid, Oklahoma: April 10 Dr. and Mrs. Suckau and a men's quartet from Omaha, Nebraska gave a program in our church. Recent improvements of making a new parking lot and graveling the road have been made. Communion services were held Good Friday. The Mennonite Brethren congregation here in town rendered a program March 27, consisting of songs and two or three numbers of special music. April 12 the O.B.A. choir gave an Easter cantata in our church. At twilight Easter Sunday the wedding vows of Vera Jantz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Jantz, and Elmer Nickell, son of Mr. and and Mrs. C. E. Nickel of Corn, were repeated with Rev. Albert Unruh officiating.—Mrs. Kliewer, Corr.

—Topeka Church, Topeka, Indiana: On Palm Sunday morning several young people were received into the church by baptism and by letter of transfer. In the evening an impressive candlelight service of meditation and prayer was held. April 14 a candlelight communion service was held. Good Friday a union Good Friday service was held in the Baptist church. Easter morning the Youth Fellowship of Topeka held a sunrise service followed by a breakfast. The evening's program consisted of music by the children, the junior and senior choir, and students home for vacation. April 24 the girl's gospel team from Bluffton presented the evening program.—Opal King, Corr.

Hereford Church, Bally, Pennsylvania: Our young people participated in a program sponsored at Seaman's Institute, Philadelphia. Miss Shirley Britton and George Simmons were married in a church ceremony. Easter dawn services and a breakfast was observed. Our minister, Rev. Wilmer S. Shelly, spoke to the MCC service unit at the Epileptic Institution at Skillman, New Jersey. Thirty-four of our men and women travelled to the clothing center at Ephrata, put in a few hours of work, had dinner at the MCC headquarters in Akron, and took a tour of the unit set up there. Four young married women united with our church at our spring communion service.—Mae Latshaw, Corr.

—Zion Church, Donnellson, Iowa: The last weekend in March we were privileged to have Dr. and Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker and Rev. Marvin Dirks for our missionary conference. A large crowd was in attendance at the Easter Sunday communion service. Ten babies were brought forward for the infant consecration service and one new member was received by letter. Rev. and Mrs. Basinger attended the Middle District Conference as our chosen delegates.—Corr.

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: The Christian Endeavor sponsored an all-request program given Good Friday night. A special musical program was enjoyed by a full house on Easter Sunday evening. Two numbers were rendered by the men's quartet consisting of Leo Voran, Dodge City; Edwin Krehbiel, Provo, Utah; Fred A. Krehbiel, Pretty Prairie; and Lawrence Kaufman, Pretty Prairie. Our pastor, Reverend Nyce was gone for a week to attend the Congo Inland Mission Board's annual meeting. The Bethel College A Cappella choir will give a program here May 15.—Ralph Krehbiel, Corr.

From The Youth -- For The Youth

Out of the Youth Work of the West Prussian Refugees

by Wolfgang Fieguth, German Student at Bethel College

Since the first years after our flight from Danzig, West Prussia, in January 1945, most of our families have either gathered again, often by miraculous guiding, or know at least where mothers and fathers, sisters and brothers live, are imprisoned, or have died. In those days, when most of our men from seventeen years of age on up had been drafted, the Red Army threatened our home country, West Prussia, where the largest Mennonite settlement of Germany was situated along the Vistula River in the fertile plain at her mouth at Danzig.

Now we have to realize that we left in those days our farms and houses forever. Wealth, security, homes, and churches are lost and the congregations are scattered all over the world. Brilliant ideals have been burned and human convictions have been melted in the ardour of God's judgment.

In all that suffering, we young people have experienced the work of God with us and in these experiences He has become visible and revealed Himself to many of us. In availing ourselves of God's grace and in trying to respond through our actions, we gathered together throughout the strange country to which we had gone in small groups.

The congregations of our South and West German brethren are special centers for our refugees. Hamburg, where the Mennonite church remains among ruined blocks, especially has become a hospitable home for our conferences and meetings.

I would also like to thank you, my American brethren, in the name of us refugees; for you came to help us through the hands of the MCC workers. They have been helpers and guides for Christian work among our young people.

A Young People's Day at Fischerhude

Now I want to tell you something of a day on which we could come together in a larger circle to be, in the loneliness of our refugee life, once again really a Mennonite fellowship.

How did it happen? The first catechism class of the new-found Mennonite refugee congregation in Bremen didn't want to lose their fellowship after the day of baptism. Their plans for a reunion of this group fell on good soil in Fischerhude, near Bremen. In this nice old village among heath and wood, meadows and moor, about twenty young Mennonite refugees had found a new "home." They had been, back in Prussia, members of one young people's group and therefore letters were soon sent to invite the girls and fellows of that former time to a young people's day in Fischerhude.

Who can describe our joy as we saw each other again after those years of great change! Our words have been too weak to thank the Lord for the gift of this day. But the more devout was our prayer for our fellow young people who could not join together with us.

Since the twenty young people at Fischerhude were guests of the community, we outsiders became "guests of guests." During this week-end the first indifference of the natives was removed.

The efforts of the journey in overcrowded trains, from hitch-hiking, or going long ways by foot, made our limbs stiff. We sank very tired into the straw, as the girls and boys slept in sheds. In the morning we were awakened by a cheerful call of the flutes.

For Lonely Wanderers—Refreshment

The first morning hour as we gathered together, Elder Ernst Rehehr told us of the word of God. With the words of the Apostle Paul to the congregation of Jerusalem in Hebrew 11, he spoke to us about "The Faith and Its Strength." He led us along the victory avenue of our great men of faith, which starts with Abel, Noah, and Abraham. With Jesus Christ as its shining center, it is hemmed in by Stephanus and the many martyrs of early Christianity. This avenue is not shattered into the winds as the victory avenue (Siegesalles) in Berlin which was surrounded by the monument of famous generals and leaders of Prussia, but up until today new men of faith step to their side such as the unknown martyrs of our Mennonite brethren from Russia.

He closed with Hebrew 12:1-2, "Therefore, let us also, seeing we are compassed with so great a cloud of witnesses, lay aside every weight, and the sin which does so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith . . ."

After breakfast, which was enriched by the gifts of love from you ,dear American brethren, we sat in a large circle of about eighty in the garden. I then spoke about "The Beginnings and Principles of the Anabaptists." We experienced once more in remembrance the debasement and falsifying of Christ's message by the secular striving for power and the moral decay of the

by Albert C. Landis, Upland, California

This is a question which should be given much thought by all who call themselves Christians. When am I a Christian? Am I a Christian when I have taken a stand for Christ, and when I accept Him as my personal Savior? Yes and no. Yes, as far as I was born into the kingdom of God, and now am a child of God and a babe in Christ. No, because I have not yet been tried and found worthy. A Christian life is something that must be attained, at least to some extent. When I take a stand for God and Christ I have just taken my first step as far as becoming a Christian is concerned. In order to be a Christian, after I have taken my stand, I must prove to the world, to my fellowmen, and to my God, that I have been born again, that I am sincere, and with God's help I am determined to remain faithful. That is a life-time task. I am a Christian only insofar as I am able to live up to the standards Christ has set for his followers.

Now I must turn to Matthew, Chapters 5-6-7, and read the Sermon on the Mount, and see how I measure up to the standards. Having read I must bow my head, and say, "Lord Jesus, I am far from being a Christian according to those standards, and it is only with your help that I can attain my goal." As I am human I know I will make many mistakes. I will fail time and time again, but so did Peter. Peter went out and wept bitterly, and so must I. It is only when I realize I have sinned that Jesus can become my Savior. It was only as the prodigal son saw his condition, and came to himself, that he was able to enjoy the blessing of his Father. I must daily come to God in prayer and ask Him to forgive my mistakes, and short comings which I have committed during the day.

Am I a Christian because I attend church regularly? Not necessarily. I am on the right track. If I continue to go to church with the intention of learning more about God's will for my life and apply that which I have learned to my daily life I am growing in my Christian life. If I go to Church and let my mind wander to things which are not spiritually uplifting, my church going has been for naught, and I have not been benefited in any way.

Am I not a Christian because I do not attend church regularly? Again I must say, "not necessarily." If circumstances arise which make it impossible for me to go to church, I am sure God will excuse me. God does not expect those things of me which I am not able to do. If I stay away from church because I would rather go some place else and have a good time, or if I stay away from church because the preacher did not have a very interesting sermon the last time I was there, I no doubt missed the good sermon last Sunday because I was not there. There is not a sermon preached from which we cannot find something which we can apply to our lives. If I do not go to church because I was out too late the night before, and I'd rather stay in bed, then I am a bed worshipper. Bed worshipping is not a new problem. Many of our people on Sunday mornings prefer their beds to the house of God. Some choose the couch of leisure and a book or a paper rather than the pew. Many choose the bed of apathy and comfort rather than the cross of difficulty and responsibility. Only Jesus can deliver us from bed worship in the command which he says "Rise and walk."

Do I stay away from church for any of the above reasons? Is there such a thing as a poor Christian? Either I am a good Christian or I am no Christian at all. I am either on God's side and enjoy worshipping Him in his Holy Temple, or I am on the side of the world enjoying the things the world has to offer. I cannot serve two masters, either I will hate the one and love the other, or else I will hold to the one and despise the other. I cannot serve God and mammon. We must hear those words of Joshua, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve. As for me I will serve the Lord." Whosoever will may become a disciple of Christ. There is only one requirement—I must leave all and follow Him.

As a Christian it is my duty, or should I say my privilege, to attend church as regularly as possible. As a Christian, it seems to me, the least I can do for Catholic church during the terminating Middle Ages, we understood better the longing of our Mennonite forefathers for a personal relation with God. We also perceived something from their spirit and faith which bore them, even on the way to the stake.

So the figures of their faithful elders, especially Menno Simons, and the life of their congregations was re-awakened in us and we felt that in their heritage, God came to us.

The mild sun of the afternoon found us on the way into the heath. In Gustav E. Reimer's discourse, "What does it mean to be a Mennonite Today," and the following discussion we understood that we didn't inherit these material rights from our forefathers, but they were given to us as obligations as young people to serve Christ more faithfully.

With singing and playing during the afternoon, supper came on very fast. Our evening service was held in a church which the Lutheran congregation had invited us to use. The organ filled the vault of the old church with calling and solemn sounds, turning our thoughts inward. The old familiar songs united us in praise and thanks unto God.

The Lord's word endowed us for the coming everyday life in a strange country with no Mennonite fellowship and the greetings of the hospitable Lutheran church accompanied us on the way home—no, not home, for how can you call a place home in a strange country. Yet we can have a spiritual home and the way to this eternal home was shown to us during this study of the Bible. Out of Revelations 3:8, "Behold, I have set before thee a door opened, which none can shut." John 14:6 reveals "I am the way . . . unto the Father . . ."

In Germany

Blasted Bunkers Background Retreat

by Erna J. Fast

Tall pine trees hiding the blasted bunkers and infamous lethal gas works of a former munitions factory formed the background for the barrack home in which a group of thirty Mennonite young people met for a week-end retreat early this spring. The serene and lofty beauty of these pines against a glorious sunset became even more striking when seen in contrast to the low, empty buildings scattered and hidden among the trees and remaining a mute evidence of the evil activities which a few years ago made this spot a strategic munitions center. Espelkamp has become a well-known term to many—formerly for its munitions and deadly gas works and today for its practical efforts to set up a Christian community or refugees. Evangelisches Hilfswerk has laid plans for far-reaching developments and already a home for old people, for wandering youth, and for German children returned from the terrible conditions of Polish concentration camps have been established. In December a voluntary service camp was set up by the Mennonite Central Committee, and to date fifteen German young people, as well as a few representatives from other European countries, have joined the seven American members of the camp to do their part in the establishment of this model community.

Requested By Students

This week-end retreat, March 18-20, had been arranged in response to an appeal from various Mennonite university students scattered about the British Zone who wished to meet to consider important questions which disturbed them. Most of the visitors were students from either Goettingen or Hamburg Universities and from the professional high schools of Hanover. One young man came from Krefeld. The regular Voluntary Service personnel included refugee youth from South Russia and Prussia, as well as north and south German Mennonites, and one young man from the French Mennonite group. Among the American representatives the Conservative Amish, Old Mennonite, and General Conference were represented. Thus the entire group offered interesting contrasts. Here we were, Mennonite youth meeting to discuss serious issues of our faith on the site of a former German munition factory. There were those who came from sheltered Christian homes and those who had already spent many years living alone and isolated among strange people. There were those who knew war and those who did not. There were those whose Christian faith was secure and serene, and others who were searching with honest intellect and sincere determination. And yet, though there were these contrasts, from the very first evening there was a sense of unity and fellowship which bound the entire group together in a way which was not to be refuted.

ESPELKAMP has become a well-known term to many, formerly for its munitions and deadly gas works and today for its practical efforts to set up a Christian community for refugees. Here we were Mennonite youth meeting to discuss serious issues of our faith on the site of a former German munition's factory.

Young People Lead Meetings

The program for the retreat had been planned and arranged by Gerhard Hildebrandt, a theological student at Goettingen University, and Milton Harder, leader of the Voluntary Service unit at Espelkamp. Most of the discussions and services were led by the young people themselves, with the exception of Sunday afternoon when Mr. Paul Peachey, Voluntary Service Director for Europe, was in charge of the discussion and Erna J. Fast led the final worship service. Three main subjects had been set up for consideration: (literal translation) "THE GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT OF YOUTH INTO THE LIFE OF THE CHURCH," "DOES ECUMENICITY HAVE A MESSAGE FOR US?" and "THE YOUNG CHRISTIAN AND HIS WORLDLY ENVIRONMENT."

The Espelkamp Retreat. Miss Erna Fast is in the group.

Two issues which were found to be of great importance to the group were these: The Organization and Activities of Young People in the American Mennonite Churches, and A Youth's Attitude toward the Bible. All of these were subjects large enough for many days' deliberations. Of course, many issues were not resolved, but the retreat offered these young people an opportunity to express themselves freely and unhindered, to compare ideas with others, to test their own convictions and concerns, and it opened new vistas and opportunities to them. When the time came to part, the sentiment uppermost in everyone's thinking was: this is only the beginning; we must continue and grow together. Invigorating walks among the trees, singing, and free time for individual and small-group conversations were also a very definite and worthwhile part of the program.

A Sense of "Belonging"

When young people have been lonely and isolated for a number of years it is good to become a part of a big family again. For some this was the first time since they had fled from their homes to be with others of like convictions and to catch again the vision of the heritage and blessing of our Christian faith. This offered for them a sense of "belonging" again. For others it meant the crystallization of ideas and proposals for a more united youth program within the German Mennonite Church. The desire for practical suggestions and activities was one of the primary concerns manifested. As one young man expressed it: "The next time we come together we will have direct and sincere Bible study as the basis for our whole retreat. We want to study the Bible; we need to know the Bible!"

The Cross Within a Circle

The symbol for this gathering was the cross within a circle and the words, "Christ is Lord." Before we separated to go our own individual ways we met to consider the import of these words and found that here were questions which each one of us had to answer personally and quietly in the secret of his heart. As we parted the words of the last hymn we sang stayed with us as an echo: Ich weiss an wen ich Glaube

"I know with full assurance in whom I place my trust:
What proves its firm endurance, when this world turns to dust.
I know what bides eternal where all else shakes and falls,
When fraud from foes infernal earth's shrewdest wits enthrals.

I know what never faileth, but evermore endures:
A fort, when hell assaileth, in safety me secures:
The words of Christ my Saviour my refuge are and tower,
They show His grace and favour and shield in danger's hour.

my church is to give it my regular attendance. I would rather be a doorkeeper in my Father's house than to dwell in the tents of the wicked. As Christians we should all put our shoulders to the wheel and do our part. If I am a Christian I cannot expect the other person to do all the work. Working for the Lord brings us joy and happiness which cannot be experienced any other way.

Our task in this world is to carve out in the rock-like society of man the face of Jesus Christ. From time to time we need fresh guidance for this task. For such times God has made provision. The church of Jesus Christ is one place where we can come together for worship and waiting upon God; here we can discover God's will for our lives and see our part in his great task of making the world like His Son, our Savior.

What hurts me about as much as anything I can think of, is to hear someone who professes to be a Christian use the name of our God in vain. It does not seem to me that a Christian could use his kind loving Heavenly Father's name in vain, or can I take it that he is not a Christian? I often wonder.

What a different world this would be if all who profess to be Christians, and have their name on a church roll, would live a real Christian life. Many of the worldly places of amusements would have to close their doors if those who claim to be Christians would not patronize them. Many a person has been barred from the kingdom because of the compromises he is willing to make.

PLEASE mention both OLD and NEW address when WRITING

In the Christian life there are many disappointments and heartaches. Jesus did not promise his followers a life of ease. He said, "Take up thy cross and follow me." Hitherto has the Lord helped me —why should I doubt Him now? Hitherto the light broke after the awful darkness—it will break again. Hitherto the Lord has lifted my sorrow—He is able to do it again. My part is to wait upon Him and to be of good courage. "As thy days so shall thy strength be."

Let's not fool ourselves because the world will know whether we are Christians or not. Jesus said, "Ye are my disciples if ye keep my commandments." My daily life is my true testimony of Christ. So it is of great importance as to how I live whether I am a Christian or not. As Christians, let us purpose in our hearts not to defile ourselves with the things of the world. "The wages of sin is death but the gift of God is eternal life." Jesus said, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

a broader vision of democracy, of relationship between nations, of our own countries, and of ourselves and our responsibilities. We have learned to see the close relation of education and Christian living, which finds its application in the Mennonite way of life.

An Expression of Appreciation

Realizing that through our stay here in Mennonite colleges and communities in America we have received great personal values, we would like to express our deep and sincere appreciation and gratitude to all the colleges, churches, and organizations which made this possible. We feel that we can express this best by taking this heritage to our home countries and sharing it with others and by using our abilities in the service for the Kingdom of our Lord.

MENNONITE MEN FOR CHRIST MEN

The funds contributed in America for use by the American Bible Society and its co-operating members for the distribution of the Scriptures throughout the world last year, did not average one per cent per person. This was a year of great economic prosperity. Does this represent the value we put on the Scripture?

SWITZERLAND.—Haus Bernadotte, honoring the United Nations mediator who was assassinated, has been suggested as the name for the Arab-Jewish war orphans' home in Switzerland which has been proposed by a group of Israeli and Arab leaders. This home would care for twenty orphans, ten Jewish and ten Christian Arabs.

INDIA.—With a population of 400 million people, and an illiteracy of eighty-eight per cent, the government of India is looking today toward its teacher training institutions. It has recently adopted a plan of "Basic education," making free, popular, universal schooling compulsory for every child between the ages of six and fourteen. Only two per cent of the women in India can now read and write.

KETCHIKAN, ALASKA. — The city of Ketchikan in Alaska, with population of about 6,000, spends nearly $5,000,000 a year for liquor and only about $135,000 for the education of its children and youth. Representatives of twenty-three major Protestant denominations with mission work in Alaska were called upon to present a united front against the increased spread of liquor consumption, gambling, and prostitution.

NEW YORK.—The "share-your-faith" program which was inaugurated two years ago by the Seventh-Day Adventist Church, was recently reported on at the denomination's National Council of Youth Leaders. Activities include dropping religious leaflets from airplanes over lonely islands, making bed-to-bed calls in hospitals, promoting Bible study and prayer in homes, holding group neighborhood meetings, conducting large evangelistic gatherings, and working up inspirational radio programs.

Editorials

AT NO TIME has it been so clear that indecision is of the very essence of decision. There is positively no way that one can suddenly make a right decision which corrects the whole past, after a long series of opportunities in which indecision resulted in the refusal of the right. Many young people are thinking about what position they will take in the event of another total war, little realizing that their day to day decisions or indecisions now are in the process of making that decision for them. It will be very difficult to decide against participation in warfare then if there is no concern for total separation from the world now.—JJE

THERE APPEARS TO BE A GROWING uncertainty in Great Britain about the validity of infant baptism according to a recent issue of the Watchman-Examiner, national Baptist weekly. Some Anglican leaders are going so far as to encourage baptism of children at confirmation instead of soon after birth. It is further reported that on the Continent in various places the same question is being hotly discussed. Attention is being called to the statements of some of Europe's leading theologians. Dr. Emil Brunner, prominent theologian of the Reformed Church, a church which has always practiced infant baptism is quoted as saying, "The contemporary practice of infant baptism can hardly be regarded as being anything short of scandalous." Dr. Karl Barth, also of the Reformed Church, has this to say, "Christian baptism is in its essence the mirror of the renewing of the man through his participation in Jesus Christ's death and resurrection in the power of the Holy Spirit, and at the same time the mirror of his subjection to Him, to the Covenant of Grace in Him completed and realized, and to the fellowship of His Church." Are we of the Mennonite branch of the Anabaptist heritage as alert on this question at the present time as we ought to be?—JJE

ONE OF THE INEVITABLE ELEMENTS of a nation right down through the history of the world has been a rural economy in which the family farm is the basic unit; that was as true in the life of Israel as it is in our world today. This makes for a strong nation because there is a real sense of personal and group responsibility built into the very warp and woof of the life of each person. Whenever there is a breaking up of these foundations of society as is taking place today, the superstructure cannot last long.—JJE

PROBABLY MOST MEMBERS of Conference and perhaps even some leaders are not aware of the fact that the Pension and Ministers' Aid Committee is responsible for more than the setting up of a pension plan for ministers. There are a large number of ministers, missionaries, and their wives who because of age will not profit by the newly-planned pension system. It is at this point that the Ministers'-Aid phase of the Committee's work comes to the fore. Like any other board or committee of Conference responsible to administrate our work for us, it is no more than fair that they give all their energies to the care of those concerned without having part of their energies drained off in needless concern about whether money will come in for our own concern—not theirs, except administratively.—JJE

"IT MAKES ONE SHUDDER to think what the outbreak of sudden peace might mean to the American economy." These are the words of David Lawrence, a Washington news correspondent. Does this mean that there are many who would rather have a sound economy and war than peace? Is this possibly a reason why diplomats are still insisting that even though the Berlin Blockade is being lifted the situation with respect to the 'cold war' has not altered? We are surely carrying on a traffic in the souls of men. When dollars are more important than precious souls, then we are ripe for judgment.—JJE

FOR THE NON-CHRISTIAN our whole church program should have but one fundamental aim—to win him to a personal acceptance of Christ as Saviour. He may have a hundred and one other needs of one kind or another some of which the church may be able to minister to; but, if these are not used as channels through which to secure the personal acceptance of Christ, they are not ultimately helpful. No honest person can deny the basic character of the hunger to be right with God; this hunger must be satisfied. For the Christian there is also a basic hunger; that hunger is the desire to share his faith with others—to be a soulwinner. For the Christian, then, the church must have but one basic aim too—that through all the opportunities for service in the church whether missions, relief, education, etc., each individual Christian should have the opportunity of seeing others become Christian because he has permitted himself to be used of Christ. The hunger to be right with God oneself and to help others be right with God too are planted within us by God himself. These alone form an adequate foundation for a vital Christian life and a vital Christian Church.—JJE

CONFERENCE STEWARDSHIP THERMOMETER

We thank all individuals and church groups who have so generously supported the work of our conference. Contributions received to date amount to $163,435.65 toward the budget of $752,760.00. This means that we have, at the end of April, raised nearly 22% of what the various boards and committees of our conference estimate will be needed. We are, however, glad to see that this percentage is slightly higher than it was a month ago.

Our great work is in the fields of missions and relief. The need is still urgent in these two areas.

We covet your fervent and continual prayers as we all work together to spread the Gospel at home and abroad and give relief to the suffering. Also remember in prayer the home work which supports all our efforts in areas of relief and missions.

Respectfully submitted,
A. Theodore Mueller, Office Manager

To Dress and To Keep It

by William H. Stauffer

Man's most precious physical resource is the soil. In the second chapter of Genesis we read, "The Lord God took the man and put him into the garden . . . . to dress it and to keep it." Thus by divine imperative man is a guardian and steward of the holy earth. God placed man in a garden with the instructions to "be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth." Therefore all of us who live on the land and pursue this high calling are daily engaged in the Lord's work.

Men Have Looked at Us

To Mennonites this should be of more than usual significance. For over 400 years we have been predominately dwellers upon the land and tillers of the soil. Through these years our people have gained the reputation of being both excellent farmers and distinctive inhabitants on family-sized farms. Men in high places have looked at us and have remarked again and again that we have what the world needs in good rural living. As a matter of fact, however, these people are pointing more to what we used to have than what is taking place on Mennonite farms today.

Up to a Generation Ago

Up to a generation or two ago Mennonites lived predominately upon the land as a way of life rather than as a way to make a living. Being peculiarly devoted to the first century Christian way of living, a godly, day-by-day life came first. Our forefathers saw that on the farm was the most natural place to rear a Christian family. They became excellent farmers, but more, they became peculiarly signficant family dwellers upon the land as a way of life. The home was the center of their living. Sons and daughters were born and grew into this rich tradition. In a unique father-son and mother-daughter relationship succeeding generations followed in the footsteps of their parents. And so the years have given what others say we have.

The Sad Fact

The sad fact is that actually we don't have today what others seem to see as they read our history. If we once had it we have now largely lost it. Just what is it that we have lost?

Mennonite farmers today are very little different from any other farmers. We today, heirs of most of the Nation's choicest farm land, are farmers, not primarily as a way of life, but rather to make a living. The world has gained a hold upon us such that we are feverishly trying to make money, often at the expense of our children and the fine rich soil which God has given us.

Driving Our Children Away

We are steadily driving our sons and our daughters away from our farms, away from our communities, and into our cities because of our obsession to possess land. What was it that Isaiah said? "Woe unto them that add house to house and land to land, till there be no room . . . " Yet that is what we are doing. Just ask many a Mennonite young couple living in a larger city why they are not in their local community on a farm. The answers are rather pathetic.

What has the Church to say to this? Perhaps too often it has been silenced by those who are guilty. But the Church must speak forth kindly but boldly. It is the duty of the Church to show us anew the unique values of living upon the land as a way of simple Christian living. The Church must proclaim that the earth IS the Lord's and the fullness thereof; and that we who dwell upon it are the guardians and stewards.

A Testimony to the World

We have a glorious heritage. We still have fertile soil. Ours is both an opportunity and a responsibility to be a testimony to the world in the Lord's work as good stewards of the holy earth.

"If ye walk in my statutes and keep my commandments and do them, then I will give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit, and your threshing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing time and ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land in safety. And I will give you peace in the land and ye shall lie down and none shall make you afraid. Lev. 26:36.

Rural Mission the New Way

Rural missions the new way is what evangelism by the "swarming" process was called. Instead of supporting someone whom we have sent to a lonely place to preach and teach the Gospel, the new approach is to send a group of families to a new place to form the nucleus of the new church. A preacher, a teacher, a farmer or two, a carpenter, a storekeeper—people with these skills and professions would be found in the group. After getting started the "colony" should be practically self-supporting.

Colonizing in order to evangelize is captivating the interest of many young people throughout the church. We have "gone West" for cheap land, for adventure, for economic reasons, so why not "go West" for a definite witness purpose? The answer is an obvious "yes." There would be no sounder Christian reason for moving than this.

Others adopting this new method.

Catholics and Seventh-Day Adventists are definitely planting their people into new localities and these are becoming the nuclei of new churches. The system works. Why should it not work? The impact on a new community of a group of young and spiritually earnest families who live as well as preach and who serve as well as teach would certainly be more powerful than a mere proclamation of the Gospel not thus incarnated before their eyes in the form of a group of vitally Christian families.—Courtesy, Gospel Herald

The Man with the Plow

by Murray L. Wagner

Jesus, as well as the prophets, hymn writers and poets of the Old Testament, was at home in the country. He was able to see the significance of abundant harvests and the responsibilities which fell upon the tenant and landlord alike when such bounty came into their hands. He was conscious of the mounting taxes, and the lure of the city for the young people of the sod. His message is as old as the flail and as new as the "combine-header." His love for the people of the land is not missed by today's Bible reader.

Strong Faith in God

The farmer's very existence depends upon his knowledge of the laws of God as they are revealed in the varieties of soils, weather, plant growth, and the ways of animals. The day of rural superstition is rapidly passing away with the increasing of understanding of God's laws. The farmer no longer depends upon the signs of the moon to direct him in planting and in harvesting. His labors are planned on his knowledge of the laws of God which are the laws of Nature.

A Straight Furrow

Jesus declared that if "a man puts his hand to the plow and looks back he is not fit for the Kingdom." This is a hard lesson for the man whose hand never smoothed a rough plow handle. To turn about while plowing is to run the plow out of the ground. One is apt to strike a hidden root or rock if he turns to look back. He must keep his eyes front if he will plow straight.

Every farmer has a great desire—the straight furrow. What man of the soil is there "with soul so dead" who would not blush with pride to have it said of him, "He plows the straightest furrow in this county." The farmer knows that there are only a few rudimentary principles involved in plowing a straight furrow. The first of these is: set up a marker on the far side of the field. The second rule: Keep that marker ever in your eye, turn neither to the right nor to the left, and plow on until you reach the goal. Such a furrow must then be straight.

Following a straight course in all of life is a common-sense practice. Set up your marker on the far end of the field; plow deep and straight; don't turn back until you reach the end of the furrow. That's a good rule for plowing and it is rustic philosophy at its very best. It's the way of noble living.

Every Christian farmer knows that his goal must be the Cross of Christ, and he who would make life the best must keep his eye on it, never wavering and never turning back. When finally he reaches that mark he mav look back across the long unwavering furrow and find satisfaction in the Husbandman's commendation, "Well done!"

Look to the Harvest

Occupied with the present task and its demand for every ounce of his energy and thought it is possible that the harvest may seem at times rather far off, yet the farmer knows that this is the purpose of his plowing; the reward of his labor.

The Lord of the Harvest is also the Lord of the Seedtime. The same One who supplied all that the man with the plow could not supply—the rain, the sunshine, the dew, the seed and the soil—He is at the side of the plowman and their labors are a partnership.

The world's fields of the spirit are awaiting the coming of laborers into the harvest. The plowman has fathered many workers in the field of the Lord: missionaries, ministers, religious leaders and lay leaders. The success of the man with the plow is not to be estimated by his bank account. The product of his furrow will not be measured in bushels and pecks. These do not count in the scales of God. The golden beam is delicately balanced and the scales are just. The sheaves brought in at the harvest will be the telling of our sowing, our cultivating and our harvesting. This is the reckoning of our Lord.

Success comes to him who keeps his hand on the plow, his eye always on the Cross and one foot solidly on the sod while the other moves steadily, firmly onward and forward to the Cross.

When the long day is over and the tired man draws up at sunset, the plow turned over at the end of the furrow, there will be satisfaction in looking back toward the early rising star in the east and beholding the furrow—straight, deep and fresh.

And He shall say, "Well done, good and faithful servant!"—Reprinted from Town and Country Church

Annual Song Festival Attracts Thousands

More than 500 persons, young and old, took part in the Twentieth Annual Song Festival at Bethel College in the afternoon and evening of May 1. Upwards of 3,200 representatives from Nebraska, Oklahoma, and Kansas packed the large Memorial Hall on the campus with hundreds of persons standing at the back of the hall and in entrances, or listening to the program over loudspeakers in other rooms throughout the building.

Fourteen choirs and choruses from Mennonite churches throughout Kansas took part in the festival, consisting of men's choirs, women's choirs, and mixed groups. Some groups consisted of four or five choirs from different churches forming one mass choir. Besides church choirs, there were two young people's groups, a high school a capella choir from the Goessel area, and the Bethel College Church Junior Choir, an inter-racial group.

Mass Chorus Sings

The evening program consisted of songs by a mass chorus including some members from most church choirs represented, and was under the direction of Dr. W. H. Hohmann of Bethel College. Nine choral numbers and selections from the Creation and the Messiah made up the evening program.

Between the afternoon and evening programs a cafeteria lunch was served to 800 persons by the Women's Association of Bethel College. Proceeds from the lunch will be used for the Association's project of a new girls dormitory for Bethel College.

At the business meeting this year's chairman of the Song Festival, Robert Senner, Buhler, Kansas, was re-elected as president for next year.

Planning for

The Children's Own Day

by Leonore Friesen

Children's Day is a special day when the church school alters its regular plan of procedure. The name itself implies that it is preeminently the children's own festival. It is their day, its program, their program, and its flowers, the flowers they bring. Let the children speak that the Church may know her heritage and realize her opportunity. All of the plans should be made with the children in mind. It is their one special day for self expression and here they legitimately have their opportunity.

In schools which provide for a change during the summer months from their regular course of instruction, this may serve somewhat as a commencement. The writer feels, if at all possible, it should serve, rather, as an encouragement to the entire Sunday School to be regular and faithful during the so-called vacation months.

If it is a demonstration hour parents in enlarged measure comprehend what values their children are receiving in the various departments and grades.

The unreached in the community may be invited to visit this "Children's Hour" with the hope that they and their children will enroll in the Sunday School. Most Sunday Schools fail to make the special day all that should be made of it. They fail to take advantage of the opportunities it affords both for the development of the school and reaching the unreached in the community.

Two Types of Services

There are two possible approaches to the Children's Day program. It can be a demonstration program, very much like the closing Vacation Bible School program. The main purpose then is to share (not show off) what they have learned. With this type of Children's Day program it would be well to have projects, work books, and handwork projects on display in the classroom or in the church lobby. The teachers should keep this in mind from January on so that the material will be available when the second Sunday in June makes its appearance. With this kind of program it is impossible to have a united theme tying all departments together since many churches are using graded materials; that is, every department is studying its own unit of materials and not the International Uniform Lessons.

A second type of Children's Day program would be special service for which all of the material has been compiled for that particular program and thus necessitates additional hours of preparation and practice. Many Sunday Schools turn to Christian publishing houses for ready-made programs. These are excellent, highly suggestive, though generally too long, and seldom adapted to the immediate needs in hand. Let us not let our programs lose the individuality of the school which should be stamped upon the programs it gives. A common theme should tie all of the various features of the program together. This is not a problem with our Christmas, Easter, and Thanksgiving services but often the Children's Day service is a hodgepodge of songs, recitations, and dialogues which have no connecting link.

Simplicity Is Essential

Simplicity is an essential. Elaborate services should be taboo. Plan simply and plan well. We should not try to entertain or try to demonstrate the capacity and ability of the Sunday School. We should not try to outdo our own capacities and capabilities.

Maximum of Music

There should be a maximum of music and a minimum of everything else. Most people are not blessed and do not even enjoy the average recitations unless given by their child or their grandchild. True, often a fitting dialogue can be a real climax to the program.

In Line with Basic Aims

No exercises should be held under the auspices of the Sunday school which are not thoroughly in keeping with the objectives and aims of the Sunday School. So often children study about Jesus during the Sunday School hour but when they have an opportunity to share with others the teachers and superintendent are content to let them sing and speak of the flowers and birds with very little recognition given to God the Creator.

These Suggested Aims

It can be an hour of praise unto God for all the beautiful things He has given us. This would be a real worship program. "And a little child shall lead them." It can be a missionary program in which the children are made conscious of the boys and girls everywhere who do not enjoy the privilege of Sunday School and its message of Jesus Christ. It can be a renewed challenge to follow and live for Jesus during vacation months. Often-times the children's part on the program is used as an introduction to a brief message given by an expert children's minister or a missionary.

A picnic lunch may follow the program of the morning. Some churches like to have a missionary rally in the afternoon or some other service which does not deviate from the service of the morning.

"That in all things he might have the preeminence." Col. 1:18

In the Headlines

The recently purchased station wagon designated for the China mission field was dedicated by the congregation of Bethel church in Mt. Lake, Minnesota, April 17 in services on the lawn of the church.

It has finally been deemed possible to send forth this station wagon and it will be taken to the China mission field by Rev. and Mrs. Albert Jantzen.

In China

A Mighty Outpouring

by H. J. Brown

Greetings in Christ! What a wonderful Easter we had! Since early January we had been asked by the director of the M.C.C. Unit here to go to Heng Yang (a five-hour trip by plane), Hunan to the MCC Orphanage for evangelistic services. By prayer we were guided to choose the Easter season. Meanwhile we suggested that catechism classes would be opened and Bible instruction given. The orphanage came into the charge of the MCC a little over a year ago. At that time it was controlled by the Central Government, and was very much neglected. The orphans were half starved.

Everything Voluntary

We went there on the 12th of this month and stayed exactly one week. The orphans now look well fed; but, what is more under Aaron Herr, Glenn Graber, James and Hazel Liu, and Ku T'ung Ch'ing, a revolution has come into the place. There are daily prayer meetings and some weekly Bible classes, everything voluntary. A large number of conversions had already taken place. I spoke twice a day to the whole orphanage including teachers and workers. Maria had three prayer meetings with the teachers and workers.

With Open Hearts

It was wonderful how the power of the Holy Spirit came upon the whole audience. The word was received with open hearts. Brother Ku being in charge of the religious work, was a very busy man. The boys and girls went to him for prayer and confession and for restoration of things taken. He could not even think of going to bed before twelve o'clock at night. One hundred thirty five were definitely saved this way, and others simply turned to the Lord by themselves. I did not press for decisions. God was working in our midst. Praise His holy name! Fifty-nine orphans and one student from the outside were baptized, and also one teacher and three workers. The next day we had communion services and closed with a very lively testimony meeting. Everything seemed so wonderful. Praise the Lord. Halleluiah.—April 25, 1949.

Giving While Living

by H. R. Bauman

In I Corinthians 4:2 we read:—"Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful." The purpose of this writing is not so much to urge the Biblical instructions on stewardship as to bring out the methods of giving. We do know that giving comes natural to a Christian. It is done gladly, cheerfully, systmatically, prayerfully and to the point where at times it may "hurt." Indiscriminate giving too is harmful.

Outright Gifts

There are three common methods of giving: outright gift or donation. A large part of our Christian work is carried on because of such gifts.

Annuity Plan

According to this method gifts are given with the assurance that the recipient will support the donor as long as he lives. This is a good method. An old Christian couple in Champa gave their land to the Leper Home and will be supported as long as they live. The husband died about a year ago. The widow is still living.

The Last Will and Testament Method

Many use this way of leaving their possessions to good causes. Here the intentions are excellent. How surprised some would be if they knew what a small percentage of their bequest actually reaches the purpose intended! May I illustrate? Out of a bequest of over $4,000 for missions, only 9.63% reached the field. 8.29% funeral expenses, 57.34% lien re Social Security, 6.47% attorney fees, 4.44% tombstone, 1.72% each for bank and auctioneer, executor 4.23%, eight minor items 6.16%. Please note! Less than ten per cent reached its intended goal! This again proves that giving while living bears the best fruit. Then too we have the joy of seeing God's work grow during our lifetime. May God give us much joy as we give for His work. With our giving may we always "give ourselves" with the gift!

In Hopiland

The Word Takes Root

by Walter Goossen

May we greet you with the words of the Psalmist as found in Psalms 27:14, "Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say, on the Lord."

What a blessed privilege it is to wait on the Lord for courage and strength as He never fails us. What a joy it is to present Christ to the Hopi Indians as the Sinless One who was willing to pay our debt on the cross through the shedding of His precious blood and that He ever liveth to make intercession for us.

We have been encouraging the Hopi's to memorize Scripture but to our surprise found out that they have no Bibles in their homes. So we took a few of our old ones and gave them to the women in one of the sewing classes, those who received them were very happy but the eyes of those who didn't get one were filled with tears. One of these women, Judith, who received a Bible came to church Sunday carrying her Bible proudly and following the Scripture lesson as given. A few days latter she died suddenly and was carried to her resting place. Our prayer is that she may have found the Lord before she went to meet Him.

A few Bibles have been sent in and those who receive them are very happy that people love them enough to give them Bibles. May His Word not return unto Him void and may those who give the Bibles be richly rewarded.

On Sundays we have three services, one on Monday evening, sewing class each Wednesday afternoon, and also mid-week services.

The sewing classes have met several times for cutting the uncut quilt patches that have been sent in. They said they realize now the sacrifice the women make when they send in ready cut blocks. Some have finished two quilt tops already and will have the third one finished by the time we stop for the summer months.

May we all unite in prayer that Christ might have the preeminence in this great work here among the Hopi people. Services were not too well attended today as they were having some of their religious ceremonies. Oh, that we as Christians would stand as firm on the conviction of our faith in Christ as the Indians stand for their religion, so more work could be accomplished for His honor and glory.

We need your prayers for strength, spiritually and physically, and also for wisdom and guidance from the Holy Spirit that others might see the "Beauty of Jesus in us."

Mission Briefs

Rev. and Mrs. H. J. Brown returned from China on the "President Wilson" arriving at San Francisco on Saturday, May 14.

Here we are again in the land of our birth. The great S.S. Queen Elizabeth landed us in New York on April 11. On April 13 we came to our children and grandchildren here in Middlebury and have been here ever since. Most of this time we have been down with the "flu," hence have not enjoyed America to the full yet. But spring has come, and America is beautiful. During the summer months the family will be in Chicago, though from May 30 to June 15 we hope to be in Kansas.

Our Materials Used

In Community SBS School Too!

by H. N. Harder

The question is being asked in some communities by church leaders how the new Summer Bible School material will be received where several different denominations are uniting to conduct summer Bible school in their community. I should like to tell you how this new material was used in the Aberdeen, Idaho, community in 1948.

For a number of years three churches (Methodist, Presbyterian, and Mennonite) conducted a joint summer Bible school. Early in spring representatives of these co-operating churches meet to make plans to conduct such a school. At this time a superintendent and principal are selected, the material and teachers are also decided upon. Last spring I presented the Scottdale materials to the group. Upon examining it with the representatives, it was decided to try this material in 1948. At the end of the term the superintendent and teachers recommended to the Summer Bible School committee that this material be used in the future.

The question may be asked by some: does this material emphasize denominationalism to such an extent that it is offensive to the other cooperating denominations? No one here expressed that opinion. I asked this question of all the teachers at the close of the term, and in particular those teachers from the other church groups. They said emphatically several times: "It is the best material we have ever used and most heartily commend its use to any community and denomination."

Let's briefly look at the material:

1. The Bible Stories. I have again looked through a number of lessons in several of these teacher's books. The lessons are definitely Bible centered. It does not say, "This is what Mennonites believe." It presents scriptural facts and truths and then gives splendid lesson applications.

2. The Pictures and Illustrations. These do not emphasize dress and cutoms characteristics of some groups of Mennonites. And if some may interpret it to be so, why escape from the things that are true? There are people in America that dress differently and they are often brought to the printed page by artists and photographers because they are a part of our American life.

3. The selection of songs is splendid. They can be sung in any church and home and, no doubt, many of these are being used in our Christian homes and churches.

4. The Mission Stories. Here we have our Mennonite mission emphasis. How did we deal with this section of the material? In the lower age groups no particular Mennonite mission field is stressed. Here is what it does for example in Grade I, Lesson 1. The missionary story is called "London Johnny." The word "Mennonite" is never once mentioned. Any teacher can tell this story and teach the missionary lesson intended.

The older classes give special emphasis to Mennonite mission fields. But we agreed to carry out the mission emphasis in this manner: There were three cooperating churches. One week we presented the Presbyterian mission in the given country, the next week the Methodist mission, and the third week the Mennonite mission. Thus our children learned what each cooperating church was doing, let us say in India. This was good, and both teachers and pupils learned to know what was being done in India to make Christ known there.

As far as the Bible school material is concerned, the cooperating churches had no conflict. A Presbyterian minister told me only recently that this Mennonite material was by far superior to theirs.

I trust that other communities will give this new material a fair trial. I believe they will like it. May God give you grace and tact to introduce it and use it to His honor nd glory and to the salvation of our boys and girls.—H. N. Harder

Refugees Visit MCC Headquarters

Six more Mennonite refugee families arrived in New York on May 4. This brings to a total of 46 the number of persons who have come during the past two weeks. Another family is scheduled to arrive on May 11. There is no further information on the coming of additional refugees, although it is hoped that many more will be able to follow these first few.

The most recent group of six families stopped for a day at the MCC headquarters at Akron. Here they became acquainted with the various aspects of the work, and also joined the staff group in a devotional service. The new immigrants expressed deep appreciation for all that had been done for them, emphasizing especially two thoughts—appreciation for their own immigration to the United States, and hope that more of their refugee brethren may also come.

Workers Needed for Orient

The MCC will need at least twelve mature people during 1949, for relief work in the Far East, including Japan, the Philippines, and China. As workers on the field complete their terms, others are needed as replacements in order that the work may go on. Applicants should be 24 to 45 years of age, with high school education or equivalent skill, and feel a Divine call to serve. The term of service in the Far East is three years. Workers for this area need to be mature, and may be married or single. Several persons with leadership ability are especially needed.

Material Aid Shipments

During the month of April the following shipments of relief materials from the United States and Canada, valued at a total of $105,180.86 left port: To French Zone Germany, 64 tons mixed foods; to U.S. Zone Germany, 79 tons flour; to British Zone Germany, 4 tons food and clothing; to Sumatra, 8 tons clothing; to to Paraguay, 139 tons agricultural equipment; to various countries, 4 tons of miscellaneous supplies.

A summary of shipments during the past nine months shows that 3½ million pounds of relief materials have been sent abroad. This includes food, clothing, shoes, soap, tools, and other items. In addition to this, nearly one-half million pounds of materials are ready for shipment.

One delaying factor in the shipping of material aid is the new export license for meat which has not yet been granted. This license is required by a regulation which went into effect after the meat canning program of this year was in operation. A number of shipments containing varying amounts of meat are delayed for this reason.

Service in Mexico Continues

The Voluntary Service Program in Mexico consists of several related aspects. Six workers are assigned to the new community hospital in Cuauhtemoc which has been opened recently. (The small hospital formerly operated by the MCC workers closed when this new hospital opened.) Four workers are to be assigned to an MCC sub-unit hospital located in the Mennonite colony of Santa Clara, about 80 miles from Cuauhtemoc. There are also plans for a program of education, health, and recreation work with the Mexicans of Cuauhtemoc and vicinity, which will require two workers. For this latter project, there is urgent need for an additional worker. Qualifications are teaching background or interest, and knowledge of the Spanish language of interest in learning the language.

Personnel Chosen for European Service

June 14 is the date on which the European Summer Voluntary Service group will leave. This educational and service project is under the sponsorship of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges, with Menno Travel Service making travel arrangements and MCC administering the one-month period of work experience in Germany.

Those participating in this project are: Ruth K. Baughman, Marjorie E. Fast, and Edna M. Peters of North Newton, Kans.; Paul Esau, Whitewater, Kans.; Frances Ewy, Parlier, Cal.; Hazel Graber, Pretty Prairie, Kans.; Arlene D. Neufeld, Hanston, Kans.; Helen W. Penner, Beatrice, Neb.; Howard E. Baumgartner and Phyllis Baumgartner of Berne, Ind.; Dorothy Hurley, Danvers, Ill.; Margaret Olivet, Chicago, Ill.; Lois A. Rich, Washington, Ill.; Carlton J. Sauder, Grabill, Ind.; Harriet J. Schertz, Metamora, Ill.; Aldine M. Zimmerman, Gridley, Ill.; William M. Gering, and Floretta J. Kaufman of Marion, S. D.; Lynette Waltner and Katherine Kaufman of Freeman, S. D.; Kenneth W. Steider, Shickley, Neb.; Kenneth Loewen, Hillsboro, Kans.; Kathryn Wiens, Hutchinson, Kans.; Paul D. Hertzler, Donald G. Miller, and Mervin L. Miller of Goshen, Ind.; Ella Mae Hooley, and Beulah Schrock, of Ligonier, Ind.; Myrl A. Nafziger and Loretta Zehr of Hopedale, Ill.; Carol L. Pletcher, Nappanee, Ind.; Twila Hostetler, Orrville, Ohio; Doris Liechty, Archbold, Ohio; Jocele Thut, West Liberty, Ohio; Robert W. Miller, Akron, Pa.; Faithe Light, Cleona, Pa.; Martha Groff, Holtwood, Pa.; Ruth A. Hess, Lititz, Pa.; Mary M. Brubaker, Grantham, Pa.; Glenn C. Frey, Conestoga, Pa.; M. Evelyn Poe, Chambersburg, Pa.; Ruth E. Mumma, Florin, Pa.; and Dr. Guy F. Hershberger, Goshen, Ind.

CHURCH UNITY SUNDAY, MAY 29

Leaders of General Conference congregations are reminded of the Church Unity Committee request that on Sunday, May 29, the Lord's Day preceding Pentecost, we endeavor to "stress unity through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit resulting in a practical manifestation of love, power, and service throughout the churches of our Conference."

Colleges Announce Commencement Speakers

PROMINENT CLERGYMAN AT BLUFFTON

"How to Fail—Successfully" is the subject of the commencement address announced by Dr. Bernard Clausen to be delivered to the Class of 1949 of Bluffton College on May 30 at 11:00 A. M.

Dr. Bernard C. Clausen, pastor of The Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland, Ohio is a graduate of Colgate University, 1915, and Union Theological Seminary, 1918, with a degree of Doctor of Divinity from Syracuse University and Doctor of Humane Letters from Alfred University.

He has been the pastor of the Baptist church at Hamilton, New York, ministering to the students of Colgate University, and of the First Baptist Church of Syracuse, New York, and of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. In all of these places he has specialized in campus religion and contacts with young people. He is the author of more than a dozen books, has been a pioneer in radio broadcasting and is now involved in experiments looking forward to television and its use in religion.

Dr. Clausen led his church in formal action which joined his congregation to the United Nations during its first year, and has since fully cooperated with the whole program of World Citizenship. He is now on the staff of WEWS, the first Television F.M. Broadcasting Station in Ohio, with studios around the corner from his church, where he is responsible for daily religious programs.

CHURCH HISTORIAN AT BETHEL

Dr. William W. Sweet, author, teacher, and church historian of a wide reputation, will deliver the commencement address at Bethel College, Tuesday, May 31. The subject of his address will be "The Sources of Our Religious Liberty." President Ed. G. Kaufman will speak at the baccalaureate sevices on the subject "The Meaning of Suffering" the Sunday before, May 29.

Chairman of the faculty of the Perkins School of Theology, Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas. Dr. Sweet is the author of more than 20 works of history. Among his best known writings are three volumes on "Religion on the American Frontier," and "Religion in Colonial America." He has been teaching church and secular history for about 38 years, half of these at Chicago University.

After attending Ohio Wesleyan University, Dr. Sweet continued his training at Drew Theological and Crozer Theological Seminaries, and the University of Pennsylvania, which granted him the Ph.D. degree. He is considered one of the greatest authorities on the history of American Christianity.

Fifty-six students will graduate with a bachelor's degree at Bethel on May 31. While 43 students will receive an A.B. degree, the others will be granted a the B.Sc., degree in such fields of study as business, education, industrial arts, home economics, music education, and physical education. The graduating students come from 11 states and three foreign countries, Canada, Germany, and Holland.

SEMINARY HOST TO CIM BOARD

The Seminary was happy to be host to the meeting of the Congo Inland Mission Board. This well known inter-Mennonite agency has been carrying on work in the Belgian Congo for many years. Members of this Board are A. Neuenschwander, Grabill, Indiana, president; Allen Yoder, Goshen, Indiana, vice-president; R. L. Hartzler Bloomington, Illinois, recording secretary: C. E. Rediger, Chicago, Illinois, corresponding secretary and treasurer. A. E. Kreider, president of the General Conference Foreign Mission Board was attending the sessions on behalf of his group.

Cecil Hinshaw presented a chapel message recently. He was the former president of William Penn College of Oskaloosa, Iowa. He said that if Christian ideals are to be practiced, three things are necessary. First, we must be willing to suffer; second, we must believe in the possibility of redeeming fallen human nature; third, we must learn to make our witness as part of a disciplined Christian fellowship.

May 7 the Seminary Women's Fellowship made a conducted tour through Hull House, the famous settlement house founded by Jane Adams.

Marie J. Regier delivered the message at the Mother-Daughter Banquet of the Danver, Illinois, Mennonite Church on Friday night, May 6.

Once again a group of refugees were escorted through Chicago by Seminary people. This time, however, we did not have the privilege of entertaining them directly at the Seminary home. Several of our folks went to the station to take them from the Eastern line to the Western line.

The Washington Scene

by Paul Goering

While the North Atlantic Treaty was partially designed to preserve the peace, there are many people who think it will do just the opposite and lead us into war. Accordingly there are a few questions which should be honestly faced and answered in light of the Christian faith.

What is the fundamental nature of the Treaty?

The heart of the Atlantic Pact lies in Article 5. In it each party to the Pact agrees to assist any other party which is attacked, by any means it decides necessary. Underlying many releases by State Department officials is the bold assumption that this is a military alliance. The European countries would have had no interest in the Treaty if it were not a military alliance. If the Senate approves the Pact, our country will be functionally committed in advance to go to war if any other party is attacked. History has proved that military alliances lead to war.

Does the philosophy underlying the Pact agree with the teachings of Christianity?

As noted above, even the literal wording of the Treaty says that the means to ward off attack shall be those "including the use of armed force." Christ's Sermon on the Mount is a definite sermon against the use of force.

Will our country be expected to send arms to other nations if the Treaty is ratified?

Article nine states that a council shall at once be established and that in turn "it shall establish immediately a defense committee." Publication 3462 of the State Department on the Pact says that "a military assistance program is now being considered by the executive branch of the Government." The estimated cost of this assistance runs from one to twenty-five billion dollars extra per year.

Are there alternative peaceful means of opposing the spread of Communism?

The answer to this question is definitely in the affirmative, on several counts. First, the best way to stop the spread of Communism is to help countries to rehabilitate themselves. In terms of both the church and the nation as a whole, to continue our relief efforts is a most effective means of preventing the spread of Communism.

Second, further diplomatic efforts should be exerted to repair the rift between the United States and Russia.

Third, we should work to strengthen the United Nations. The Atlantic Pact should never precede the exertion of prolonged and tedious effort to strengthen the United Nations.

Fourth, we should work diligently for disarmament. Of all the nations of the world, the United States has set perhaps the poorest example in the matter of disarmament.

Fifth, we should not abandon our efforts to complete peace treaties between antagonists of the last war.

Sixth, as a church and nation we should be more willing to rely upon the power of the Christian Gospel to defend the world from evil and strife. If the basic mission of the church is promoted and promulgated, the tension which seems to supply the need for an Atlantic Pact will disappear.

Jottings

—Medford Church, Medford, Oklahoma: Brother B. H. Janzen visited our church April 24 and showed pictures of his visit in Mexico. April 21 a kitchen shower was held for the church kitchen. The many useful articles received were dedicated in His service and an interesting program was rendered. The church piano was rededicated for its new place of service in the church basement. Another piano has been bought by the Sunday school and Ladies Aid for that use.

—Emmaus Church, Whitewater, Kansas: The ministers of the Gnadenberg, Swiss, Burns, Walton, Zion, and Emmaus churches exchanged pulpits on conference Sunday. Joint meetings in the afternoon and evening consisted of an institute on peace, missions, and Voluntary Service.—Marie E. Fast, Corr.

—First Church Beatrice, Nebraska: Rev. Victor Sawatzky, pastor of the Mennonite Church in Hutchinson, Kansas, was the speaker for the annual pre-Easter services April 10-15. His theme was "The Heart of Man Exposed in the Light of the Cross." May 1 Mr. H. J. Andres of Newton, Kansas, reported on the settlement of our Mennonite Brethren in Uruguay at a joint C. E. meeting. Our pastor is completing a Bible study course at the Sisters Home, held every Tuesday evening for the hospital workers and anyone else who can attend.—Mrs. Abraham Jantzen, Corr.

—Salem-Zion Church, Freeman, South Dakota: Six young people were baptized on May 1. The Mission Society is requesting clothing for relief which will be packed at the June meeting. Rev. J. J. Regier has resigned and will leave after May 31 for Dallas, Oregon, to serve a church there. Rev. Russell Mast of Wadsworth, Ohio, has accepted the call from our church and expects to begin in September.—Mrs. Robert Graber, Corr.

—Medford Church, Medford, Oklahoma: After serving the Medford Mennonite church for a little over ten years, Rev. Albert G. Schmidt has resigned as pastor of the church. The congregation has accepted this resignation which will be effective June 1.

—First Church, Halstead, Kansas: An Easter sunrise service was held at 6 a. m. in the Mennonite Church with Dr. J. W. Fretz, from Bethel College, as guest speaker. The meeting was sponsored by the young people of the churches in town. Holy Communion was observed during the morning worship service. The pastor chose "The Day of Days Is Here" for the Easter message. The Mary-Martha Society presented a program on the evening of April 3, with Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Schmidt, Newton, as speakers. Pictures were also shown.—Betty Jean Franz, Corr.

—First Church, Upland, California: Palm Sunday eight members from five different states, were received into the church by letter and six young people by baptism. Mr. J. W. Warkentin spoke and showed pictures on Paraguay recently. The Pacific District Conference will be held in this church June 23-26.—Metta Niswander, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Inman, Kansas. Miss Viola Duerksen who recently returned from Paraguay showed some slides and told us about the work there recently. Consecration services were held on Mother's Day with two children and their parents taking part. The Men's Chorus gave a program in the Burrton Church on May 8.

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Raymond Jantz from Drake, Saskatchewan, now a student at Bethel College, brought us the morning message while Rev. J. M. Regier spoke at the Bethel Hospital at Newton, Kansas, May 1.—Mrs. Arnold A. Plenert, Corr.

—First Church, Caldwell, Idaho: April 12 Rev. Solomon Moutett of the "Go Ye Mission," showed pictures and told us of the work in the Ozark Mountains. Easter Sunday a group from our church joined the other Caldwell churches for a sunrise service on Lizard Butte, near here. The ladies of the church are planning a cooked food sale for May 7.—Mrs. L. Schmidt, Corr.

—Apostolic Church, Trenton, Ohio: The Easter Sunday offering was $75. Reverend Amstutz attended the Middle District Conference in Pandora, Ohio, and preached the Sunday morning sermon. Earl Gingerich and Carl Ehresman conducted the worship services in his absence, Mother's day was observed with a special musical program by the church choir.—Edna M. Kinsinger, Corr.

—Hoffnungsau, Church, Inman, Kansas: On April 26 it was our pleasure to welcome into our community a Mennonite refugee family who had recently come from Germany. With them came two other families who went to the Hillsboro and Moundridge communities.

Through the MCC it became known that several Mennonite families would be able to enter the United States if congregations would find employment for them and give assurance to the government that they would not become a public charge. Upon hearing this, an application was made and on Tuesday April 26, at 12:05 p. m., Mr. and Mrs. Franz Dyck, their two sons, Jacob and Viktor, and Mrs. Maria Kwascha, the mother of Mrs. Dyck, arrived at Newton and were taken to the custodians home which had been redecorated and furnished by the congregation. They will be employed as church custodians.

On Friday evening, April 29, a service of welcome was held and part of their experiences and hardships were related by Mr. Dyck. It was a joy for the congregation to receive them and to welcome them into a place which they can again call home.

Summer Vacation Bible School is again in session for a three-week term with four teachers in charge. There is a large attendance. Mr. H. J. Andres, who was in Uruguay to help the refugees settle, was in our group on April 24 to show pictures and tell of the work there.—Mrs. Albert Ediger, Corr.

—First Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: Twenty-four Revised Standard Version New Testaments have been sold in the congregation by the Library Committee.

—Immanual Church, Los Angeles, California: Rev. H. D. Burkholder resigned as pastor of this church. He has accepted a position as instructor at Grace Bible Institute in Omaha, Nebraska, where he will teach courses in Theology. He and his family plan to leave in July. The pastor conducted a week of meetings at the New Hopedale Church in Meno, Oklahoma, from April 3 to 10. Plans are being made for the California Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention which is to be held in our church. The Rev. Wilbert Regier of Oregon is to be the guest speaker. Stainiers "Crucifixion" will be presented by the church choir on Good Friday. The choir will give another rendition of the same during our 25th Anniversary Services April 24.—Betty Kroeker, Corr.

—Gospel Church, Mt. Lake, Minnesota: A recognition services for Rev. D. P. Eitzen, former minister and now a member of the church board, was observed during the morning services March 27. During the service Rev. Suderman read the poem "Not Growing Old" and made a few remarks, Rev. H. H. Quiring gave a message in German on II Corinthians: 6, and Rev. I. J. Dick spoke on the subject "Remember Who Hath the Rule Over You." Music was furnished by the men's chorus and a duet by Rev. and Mrs. Suderman.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: May 2 Edward Schrag of Moundridge, Kansas, who was an MCC worker in China for three and one-half years, shared his experiences with us and showed pictures. Reverend Kaufman, Roy Dick, and Wilfred Ewy attended the Church Workers Conference at Turpin, Oklahoma, on April 29-30. Rev. Sam Goering of Newton, Kansas, and W. F. Unruh of Moundridge, Kansas, were the principal speakers.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

The Christian Doctor in a Sick World

by Dallas Glick, Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio

The Sick World

In a world such as the one in which we live today where there is so much enmity, hatred, prejudice and immorality it is sometimes hard, and we do fail, to recognize the basic Christian principles which we are supposed to have learned. Incessantly evil principles seem to creep in. People develop ideals of revenge and theories of death and destruction. Scientists teach us to think in terms of the seemingly infinite universe and try to show us what infinitesimal parts of it human individuals really are. Biologists throughout the laboratories strive ever harder in their search for new and more powerful agents for biological warfare. They tell us of one agent they now have—one ounce of which, if properly administered, could destroy several million people. They also tell us of other agents which would render the water supply of a nation unfit or stop the growth of plants.

Meanwhile, physicists continually construct new and more powerful atom-smashing machines—machines, they tell us, to make possible the harnessing of atomic power for a more rapid development of the human race. But we don't believe this, because we remember Hiroshima and Nagasaki where many thousands of people died or disintegrated into gas due to the terrific forces of the atomic power. Many thousands more were left behind to suffer the lethal effects of some radioactive disease. We pick up a newspaper, thinking to distract ourselves for awhile, and what stares us in the face but large headlines telling us of another large airliner crash in which some thirty people had their lives instantly snuffed out. Or we read of a large nightclub fire which has taken the lives of over nine hundred people.

Yes, this is the atmosphere in which we must exist. We develop within ouselves a fatalistic attitude and wonder what is the use of it all. It seems we are reared and taught to speak in terms of mass death and destruction. Unless we are directly associated with some war-torn country or have lost someone through it, we can hardly realize the meaning of a human individual, and a human life seems almost insignificant in value. Into such a dilemma, however, comes a counter force in the form of illness. Someone becomes sick and we begin to see ourselves lying under an oxygen tent, under the surgeon's knife, or on a deathbed. Only then can we realize what one single human life is. We think of our own and how we are afraid to loose it.

Mass Death and Life's Worth

We remember how it was once told us that "Not even a sparrow loseth its life lest the Master knoweth it." I think if we remember the teachings of Jesus trying to put more emphasis on them instead of all the ideas of mass death, we can realize how important it is for us to know the very high value of each individual personality.

What we need foremost in such a world is men and leaders who are capable of doing things in harmony with the principles of Christianity. Even as statesmen down through the years to have a peaceful world by forming such institutions as the League of Nations and the United Nations, so doctors have fought the never ending batttle for health. Doctors have tried to whip the disease that has scourged the earth since the beginning of man and have tried to save the invaluable human life. They know disease is no respecter of age, sex, race, color, wealth, or position.

The Problem of Disease

I think all of us have read of the terrible Black Plague which swept the earth several hundred years ago killing millions of people. We also know the horrible story of how cholera wiped out whole nations or races of people. These are just two of the great maladies which have been beaten by medical science with new and better methods of hygiene and sanitation. Close to the present day, however, are the stories of malaria, yellow fever, and smallpox. These are just a few more of the plagues which today are on the way out due to great pioneering feats in the field of medical techniques by such great men as Walter Reed.

Disease of our Day

Let us now look at some of the great diseases of our day which will in the future probably be beaten by newer and better methods of medical research. First of all let us look at cancer. Seemingly, everyone, without exception, is subject to this dread disease which has been taking the lives of over 180,000 Americans every year. Some think cancer is caused by cosmic rays from outer space while others say it is due to the wrong diet. What really causes it? That is what research men are asking and trying to find out.

Next, there is infantile paralysis, leaving in its path death and invalids. Surely everyone has seen someone who has to go through life on crutches or must spend a large part of his time in an iron lung. Put yourself in his place. What would you think, feel, or do?

Next—suppose you are having a quiet conversation with someone when suddenly this person falls to the floor—dead of a heart disease. So many people say, "I'm taking it easy, I don't have to worry about heart trouble." Is this statement really valid? Perhaps heart disease isn't the result of a fast and complex life. Sometimes it is those who are taking it easy that die first.

Lastly, I would like to touch briefly on mental illness. This is a disease which affects about one out of every twenty people during their lifetime. Mental illness can be caused by many things, chief among which are strains of living, alcohol, drugs, narcotics and veneral disease. Mental illness as the result of veneral disease is probably the worst. A fellow who worked in a mental hospital once told me that he saw the skull of an individual who had died with syphillis of the brain. Inside you could see a large area almost eaten through the bone of the skull by this disease. Such is the result of prostitution and uncleanness.

Certainly mental illness caused by veneral disease is one of the most evident forms in which we can see sins punished. These diseases: cancer, infantile paralysis, heart disease, and mental illness are just a few of the afflictions that could hit any of us at any time.

Medical research men are trying to do their part. Let us educate and stand behind them so we may become part of the solution instead of the problem. Let us strive to conserve that invaluable human life.

The Tools of a Christian Doctor

by Howard Shelly, Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio

Every vocation has something with which to work that we might call "raw material." The farmer has his soil and livestock, a teacher has students, and a doctor has sick people.

Each vocation has a certain goal or end-product in mind. The farmer wishes to develop good crops and livestock. The teacher wishes to develop educated healthy people. Each vocation also has tools with which to work toward its goals. The tools of a doctor are many and varied. With the advance of scientific research a doctor's tool chest is ever increasing.

The Doctor's Tools

The electron microscope has enabled scientists to see things which they were hitherto unable to see with their most powerful miscroscopes. The Time magazine reported on September 20, 1948, that a remarkable picture of the polio virus at work had been obtained. As one doctor put it, "Once we can see a thing, we can study it; and when we know how it operates we are usually able to stop the operation."

The same issue of Time reports that during the war workers in a factory which make magnetism tubes for radar sets found that they could give themselves diathermy (deep heat treatments by standing near tubes on the test racks. Consequently, a machine was devised employing these tubes to heat tissues deep within the body.

It also reports that super-somic waves are being developed for medical use. These short sound waves, inaudible to the human ear, violently destroy microorganisms by tearing them apart. However, in small doses it can be used to heat deeply seated areas of the body.

The October, 1948 issue of the Hygeia magazine reports a long list of scientific advances which are eliminating the need for many of the former surgical treatments.

Gynecologic conditions always accounted for a large number of our surgical operations. The increased knowledge of the use of sex hormones of various types has eliminated treatment by surgery of many diseases of the female genetal tract, menstrual disorders, repeated miscarriage, sterility, and tumors in the uterus.

The discovery of the use of Vitamin D in prevention of rickets and softening of the bones eliminates operations to correct deformities resulting from their diseases. It was the discovery that the cutting of the vagus nerve is very effective in reducing the need for surgical procedures on gastric disorders.

New Fields of Medical Advancement

Advances in the field of pharmacology, bacteriology and chemistry has established effectively the use of antimicrobial agents in eliminating surgery. Some of the things affected are tonsilectomies, adenoidectomies, respiratory infections, acute infections of bone marrow, peritonitus, inflamation of the gall bladder and inflamation of the kidney.

Advances are being made in the field of cancer research. Many cancer producing agents have been discovered, but the medical treatment of cancer is still largely in the experimental stage. Nevertheless, promising results have been obtained with several agents, among which are nitrogen mustard and radioactive isotopes. Tuberculosis offers a good example of the effect of preventive medicine on the treatment and occurrences of a disease.

Religion and Medicine

These above-mentioned tools are available to all doctors. I feel, however, that a Christian in any vocation should have more to offer than the ordinary run of his profession. The Christian doctor's opportunity comes in the field of psychsomatic medicine.

During the first week of December, 1948, a conference of clergy and physicians was held in Chicago's huge medical center. The key note of the conference was set by a physiologist, Andrew Conway Ivy, who is vice president of the University of Illinois Medical School. He said, "Medicine is the handmaid of science and religion. Religion and spiritual realms overlap more with the healing acts and sciences than in anything else man does. Try as we might to separate them, we can't do it because that is the way we are built."

Missionary E. Stanley Jones, said, "A doctor must train spirtually as well as physically. Fifty per cent of sick people need prayer more than pills, aspiration more than aspirin, meditation more than medication."

Dr. Herbert Ratner, the head of the Student Health Service at Layola University School of Medicine made the most blunt statements of the conference when he said, that many medical schools have sunk to a "ve-

A Variety of Service at Gulfport

Camp Projects

Many of the men serving at Camp Landon, Gulfport, Miss., have been working on projects of reconstruction, home repair, building of recreational equipment, and so on. One year volunteers engaged in this aspect of the program include Pete Yoder, Glen Hostetter, Henry Schrock, Clarence Stutzman, and Harold Davis, with Chester Slagell serving as foreman.)

Church Building

One of the projects is the building of an addition to the Wayside Mission. The work was done under the leadership of the pastor, Ed Miller, who was also a former member of the camp. Camp personnel has contributed 196 days. The addition includes five classrooms and a storage room. The building, a former 20' x 50' army barrack has been greatly improved by this addition by the lining of the interior, replacing the small barracks windows by frosted ones, putting on asbestos siding, and painting the exterior.

Public Health

In a survey of the schools for infestation of hookworm C.P.S. men sometimes found more than 70% of the children infected. Two basic steps are necessary in the control of hookworm. One is the sanitary disposal of human waste and the other the wearing of shoes. C.P.S. men installed many units and we are now continuing their project, which also aids in the control of disentary. The Harrison County Health Department, with our help, has filled a number of orders.

Recreational Equipment

Another project is the building of swings and teeters for needy community schools. All framework is large steel pipes, which makes them very strong and long wearing. Two sets of wings and two sets of teeters were built for the Dedeaux school. The school had most of the essential materials such as pipes and lumber, but no equipment of this nature. Camp personnel, using school materials, are able to build this equipment at small expense. This is greatly appreciated because funds for such equipment are very limited.

Home Repair

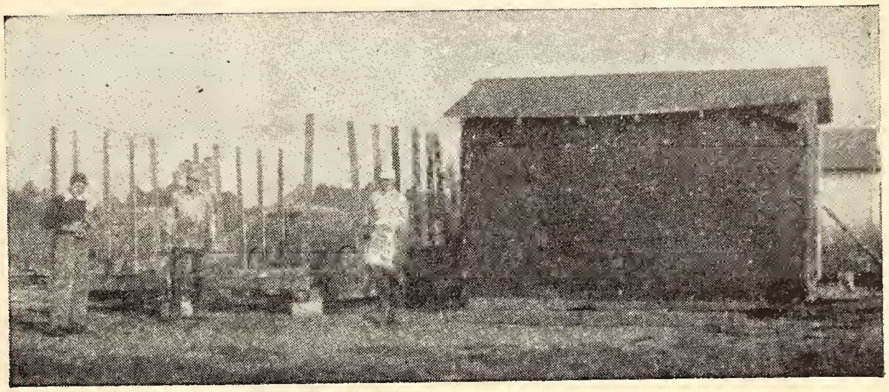
Home building and repair is a problem to the people of this area. Many families have need for additional room for the size of their families. In some cases houses have been started, but because no written plan or estimate of the cost had been made the house has been partly built without money to finish it. Five houses have been completed since we arrived at Gulfport last fall.

We have felt the joy of knowing heartfelt appreciation for what has been done by the camp project of home building. All have expressed a desire to do something for the church which we represent. Herein lies an opportunity to invite them to church and Sunday School. When they attend church we can encourage them to continue and remind them that we are doing what we can because God has saved us and we want to do things for others to show His redeeming love.

Teaching in Colored Schools

The teaching of Bible literature and supervision of recreation in the rural, colored schools of the county is a project begun last year. The children in these thirteen schools are taught songs, Bible verses, and stories with the use of a flannelgraph; and the principles of cooperation and fair play through recreation.

These children respond very well to kindness and friendliness. This often opens the way for a positive Christian testimony. We also hope that the little we can do for them will help them to become better citizens of their communities.



Gulfport Voluntary Service workers helping build a house for the family living in the tool shed seen in the picture. A fire destroyed the family's house.

Maintenance and Gardening

Four of the volunteers have spent the major part of their time with camp maintenance, and in preparing a plot of ground for a garden which will enable the camp to greatly reduce its food bill the coming summer and winter. Irvin Musser, Marvin Bartel, Norma Gerber and Dorcas Alwine have been engaged in this work.

Shop Classes at Gulfport

Mr. Schultz, manual arts teacher who is serving at Gulfport during his leave of absence from Berea College, has made possible the development of work with adult men of the community. He is conducting a class in manual arts, teaching men how to use a hammer, saw, nails, and other common hand tools. It took some pressure to influence men of the community to come to the first class. After their first evening, which was spent in making corner shelves, knife holder, or foot stools, they left with a good interest. We are planning to sponsor two white classes, one colored class, and to make the instructor and shop available to the New Hope community.

We are attempting to interest the Orange Grove consolidated school in introducing some practical courses into the curriculum. Their junior and senior high schools have mostly college preparatory courses. Because they lack equipment for manual arts courses. Mr. Schultz has been teaching a course in blueprint reading.

One of the most urgent needs for the development of this aspect of the progam in both the community and schools is that of more adequate tools. The instructor is using his allowance for the purchase of additional equipment. Other gifts will be welcomed and well invested.

Mr. Schultz will need to leave at the end of a four month period, and we will be in need of a manual arts instructor. The field of service is great; for not only do these men not know how to use tools, and therefore are unable to make simple but necessary repairs in their homes; but many of them have not been interested in the church. This presents the added challenge of witnessing to them.

Family Welfare Worker Needed

One of the great needs of the community is better home management. Mothers need to learn how to better take care of clothing and how to can food grown in their gardens. They need to be taught habits of cleanliness and orderliness. Fathers need to be taught to make necessary repairs and simple articles which would be helpful in the home. Budgeting of their income and learning to buy wisely are further needs which could help them to better liing. Learning to dress simple wounds could prevent much suffering and missing of school by children.

Along with these family needs there is the need for activities that are planned and enjoyed by the entire family. Parents do not entertain their children and so children frequently do not respect and obey their parents. If parents could be encouraged and taught to do things with their children rather than letting someone do it for them, they would know a great deal more happiness and joy in living, and children would have a greater respect for home and family life.

Remedial Teacher Needed

High on our list of needs is our need for a school teacher with patience, imagination, and love for pupils. The work is not to be an easy task, but a rewarding one; for it is to be work with children who need special attention but for which the teachers do not have the time. There are numerous pupils in the community who are retarded but who, with special help, would do their work satisfactorily. One of our camp members has been helping such a pupil daily. Although she has been giving him only 25 to 30 minutes a day, he has been doing passing work. His teacher expressed deep gratitude for the help given to him. Do we have one teacher in our Mennonite churches who will dare to undertake this challenging work?

terinarian level" by studying man as if he were a horse instead of a human being with a spirit. We see nature as violated when modern man, as a result of medical propaganda, goes through life fearing death and ends up a vitamin-taking, antacid-consuming, barbiturate-sedated, aspirin-alleviated, weed-habituated, benzedrine-stimulated, psychosomatically-diseased, surgically-despoiled animal.

Treatment for the Disease of the Spirit

Fifty per cent of the people who visit physicians have a psychosomatic disease. These are diseases caused by an emotional stress or strain. A principle of mental hygiene is that a person must have emotional security in order to have mental health. This is transferable to psychosomatic diseases. Two of the factors in emotional security are self-respect and social status. A person loses his self-respect because he feels he has sinned. Christianity through a Christian doctor can offer forgiveness to these people as they seek aid for their physical ills. Christianity says, "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

Social status is lost when a person feels he has failed or not quite attained as he should have. Christianity offers a second chance to those who fail. Christianity also says that every job is important. Paul compares it to a human body. Even the smallest part is of importance.

Man has succeeded in controlling many sections of his environment, but he has always failed in controlling himself. Many of our diseases could be prevented if people would avoid immorality, intemperance in eating and drinking, and the other pitfalls of our so-called "fast" life. Man has given up trying to control man. They resort to "cures" rather than "preventions." The Christian has the prevention in the transformed life through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I feel that the Christian doctor has an unusual opportunity to be an ambassador for Christ. The opportunity is not limited to a Christian doctor. Every Christian in any task has an unusual opportunity to be an ambassador for Christ.

Beyond Our Own

PENIEWEN, JAVA. — In the course of a "cleaning-up action" by the Dutch army on Sunday morning, February 20, ten members of the Christian congregation of Peniewen, including a member of the church council, were killed. The execution took place at 9 a.m., the customary hour for the Sunday morning worship service.

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND. — "The Protestant stand against communism should be exclusively motivated by Christian convictions and not identified with a general anti-Communist crusade," stated Dr. W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the World Council of Churches in one of the Geneva Protestant churches recently. "The World Council of Churches cannot possibly represent a third political force, but it should draw to itself that great number of people of all churches who look to the church for a word of hope that will transcend the present conflict."

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS. — The National Association of Evangelicals will meet for their seventh annual convention on April 19-22 at the Congress Hotel in Chicago. The purpose of the N. A. E. is to move together toward common aims and to set forth the cause of Christ.

NEW YORK.—The eleven Lutheran bodies in North America sent 191 missionaries to mission fields in seventeen countries during 1948. For 104 of them it was the first assignment to a foreign station.

GOSHEN, INDIANA. — $60,000,000 or $3,000 each is the total income of wage earners in the Mennonite General Conference in (Old) 1947, it was revealed at the Fourth Annual Conference on Evangelism and Missions held in Goshen College on April 6-7. The concern of this year's meeting was specifically with the related subjects of stewardship and church finance.

NEW YORK.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has urged Trygve Lie, secretary of the United Nations, to refuse to permit the U. N. Food and Agricultural Organization to accept an invitation by the University of Maryland to establish offices on its campus, or at any other place where racial segregation is practiced and supported by law.

PENTECOST IS AT THE DOOR. Many Pentecost sermons will be preached. Will these sermons hold out to the believers the promise and hope of receiving the Holy Spirit in new power as the Apostle Peter's sermon did? The power of the Holy Spirit which Jesus promised is essentially the power of love—a love given by the Holy Spirit (Rom. 5:5) which knows no greater passion than to glorify Jesus Christ by helping other people to appreciate Christ's love for them. Pentecost sermons might well be less theological, and more practical, pointing out how the Holy Spirit is given by God and how received by the believer. "The Holy Spirit in the Experience of a Believer" would make a sermon theme that should give the listener a new hope for victorious living in his own life, and hope for better relations with other believers. Love shed abroad in the hearts of believers is the basis for true church unity. What more effective way of striving for church unity is there than to emphasize love as the fruit of the Holy Spirit?—WFU

UNITY AMONG CHRISTIANS was the prayer of Jesus and is a crying need today. The Christian testimony is weakened greatly because professed Christians, divided into various denominations, do not see eye to eye on many things and allow themselves practices which confuse those who look to the church for help. How can this be remedied? Has the clergy perhaps failed to emphasize the ministry of the Holy Spirit sufficiently? Jesus promised that the Holy Spirit would lead believers into all truth, (John 16:13). Again the Scriptures say that the love of God is shed abroad into our hearts through the Holy Spirit, (Rom. 5:5). The Christian church needs to be bound closer together in the bond of love. Have the churches been too negligent in asking the question which the Apostle Paul asked of the believers whom he found in Ephesus, "Did ye receive the Holy Spirit when ye believed?" (Acts 19:2).—WFU

AT A TIME when our educational institutions through their commencement activities are bringing to a close the formal educational activities of millions it is good that we remind ourselves that education does not necessarily equal salvation. Fulton, Oursler, senior editor of Readers Digest, writer of the widely publicized book, "The Greatest Story Ever Told," and one who describes his recent experiences in terms of "the unpopular, old-fashioned word, conversion," says "only when the heart is right can the soul make decent use of its chief tool, the brain." The heart needs an education all of its own. Only in Christ can the heart see its true need for a redirection of the will in humble repentance and faith in God through the saving work of Christ. Apart from the education of the heart by the grace of God there is no assurance of the proper channeling of all the knowledge and skills we have learned in the direction that others will be blessed and God glorified.—JJE

THERE ARE THOSE who would like to wait with the matter of larger church unity until doctrinal uniformity has been reached. If such a policy were applied on the local level we would have no churches at all. For it is probably quite beyond question that most of our churches have differences of opinion within them that are as widely divergent as the various viewpoints held by different Mennonite conferences and other denominations. On the other hand some would rush toward unity without even stopping to find the reason or the basis for fellowship. The first attitude inevitably results in confusing those the Church is trying to win to a personal acceptance of Jesus Christ; this results in their hesitancy to accept Christ at all or in an individualistic—perhaps even selfish—appropriation of the blessings of salvation. The second attitude mentioned above may be even more dangerous in that it conveys to the world the idea that unity in itself is automatically beneficial. This can result in salt that has lost its savor. The Church must guard against both of these extremes. This she can do by drawing ever nearer to Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ who is the Head of the Church.—JJE

BEHIND THE PRISON BARS OF IGNORANCE.—This is the way Dr. Frank C. Laubach, the apostle of literacy, likes to describe the plight of the illiterate—the person who can neither read nor write.

The Laubach method seeks to simplify the language so that an adult of ordinary intelligence, who already can speak the language, will be able to learn to read and write in remarkably few lessons. He first developed his method by reducing to writing the language of the Moros on the Island of Mindanao of the Philippines by using only sixteen consonants of the English alphabet. Thus simplified, the Moros were able to learn to read their language with amazing rapidity. At the end of five years 70,000 out of 100,000 were literate.

If it works among the Moros it will work among others—this became Dr. Laubach's vision. Since 1936 the Laubach method and Laubach literacy charts have appeared and have been promoted in scores of countries all over the world. Dr. Laubach writes recently from Siam, in the midst of one of his numerous world tours to promote literacy:

"In rapid succession nations are starting literacy campaigns, and calling upon educated Christians, as well as others, to help teach. This is a perfect opportunity for evangelizing, as it offers endless occasions when a Christian can witness for Christ while he is teaching a friend to read.

"The illiterates of the world are fast coming to the state where they want to read as much as a blind man wants to see. They know that they are poor, sick, exploited, because they are ignorant. They don't want our doles; they want us to help themselves.

"When a Christian sits down beside an illiterate and teaches him, he is meeting the greatest of all felt needs of that man. The illiterate will love his new friend, believe him, follow him, read what is given him."—by J. D. Graber in the Gospel Herald

A United Mennonite Witness

by Don E. Smucker

"That they all may be one: as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they all may be one in us: that the world may believe thou hast sent me" (John 17:21). Unity is commanded by Jesus Christ. It is not for efficiency but for evangelism. This, to the end that the world may be truly convinced that Jesus is the Son of God.

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place" (Acts 2:1). The most decisive revelation of Divine power came to a small but unified apostolic church. Unity is a prime condition for enduement with the Holy Spirit.

"Now there are diversities of gifts but the same Spirit. And there are diversities of administrations but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations but it is the same God which worketh all in all" (I Cor. 12:4-6). A living unity is not a dull uniformity. A living unity under Christ permits differences in talent, training, experience, and background.

"Now ye are the Body of Christ and members in particular" (I Cor. 12:27). The church of necessity is one. Since it is one, we are, therefore, first and foremost, Christians and, secondarily, members of a particular part of the body of Christ.

These Biblical Imperatives!

Have the various Mennonite branches taken seriously these Biblical imperatives for a united Mennonite witness?

This is a good question for the fall of 1948 when Mennonites have met in their first large world conference since the end of World War II. The question is even more urgent as the world is poised on the rim of the abyss fearfully awaiting another carnal conflict. As the world reveals once again its divisions which defy endless attempts at healing, the church, on the other hand, must demonstrate that Christian faith, hope, and love can truly provide a cementing ingredient which, at the very least, binds Christians together.

The United Witness We Have

In contrast to the state churches with their territorial limitations to evangelism, the early Anabaptists took the Great Commission seriously. Acts 1:8 gives witnessing in Jerusalem, Judea, and Samaria and the uttermost parts of the earth as the main key of the apostolic impact on the world. The early church did not build geographical walls around its witness, neither did the Anabaptists. In this they were unique among the Lutherans, Calvinists, and Catholics. Yet by a strange twist of history the Reformation's real missionaries became identified with a rather anti-witness, closed-culture approach. Obviously, such a profoundly Biblical impulse as to witness cannot permanently slumber among a truly Biblical people. Whenever this great missionary motive revives, cooperation likewise revives. One motive for co-operation is the missionary witness.

1. Through Foreign Missions

This is clearly seen in the pioneer nineteenth-century missionary work of the Amsterdam Missionary Society, organized in 1847, starting work in Java about 1851. This led to fellowship with the Russian Mennonites who sent Heinrich Dirks to Sumatra in 1869. In this chain-reaction C. H. van der Smissen felt this influence in Germany. From that land he brought these revived European missionary concerns to the Wadsworth (Ohio) Institute in 1869-78. Here young Mennonite pastors presented the first missionary challenge to a complacent church. S. S. Haury became the first missionary of any Mennonite group. He began in the year 1880 among the Araphoe Indians, of Oklahoma. From this chain-reaction which started in Holland, Mennonites were confronted with the urgency of co-operation in a fellowship of service and evangelism.

About ten years later the (Old) Mennonites started work in India with famine relief. A few years later the General Conference work started in India with a similar Good Samaritan ministry. The pioneer (Old) Mennonite leaders assisted the General Conference in starting its work. Deaths among the early workers brought immediate succor from both groups. From that day to this India has seen a United Mennonite witness in common tasks of service and evangelism. This was made even more real by the Mennonite Central Committee relief work in India during the second World War.

The Congo Inland Mission of Africa proved that the Central and Defenseless (now the Evangelical Mennonite Church) conferences could co-operate in service and evangelism long before this question was raised. Moreover, this has proved to be an ever-widening circle of Mennonite co-operation. The Congo

What Now?

Some say, "Let us retreat; this is already too far." Most of those who say this were always opposed to co-operation, hence they have very little, in fact, from which to retreat. Some say, "This is far enough — no farther." We have gotten thus far without much of a theory of co-operation; only a fellowship of service and evangelism.

Inland Mission is now a genuinely inter-Mennonite project.

2. Through Home Missions

Similar proximity of work has existed in home missions, particularly in large cities like Chicago where sectarianism is smothered in the desperate need for an anti-pagan Christian front. A. H. Leaman illustrates this trend. Coming to Chicago forty years ago from the Lancaster Conference, he now serves in both a General Conference and an (Old) Mennonite church and maintains pulpit fellowship in the Lancaster Conference.

The Next Step

The next step can be taken if all branches make it quite clear that they take the Bible seriously as normative in faith and morals. This, of course, will not be exact agreement about the Bible but a serious attempt to be obedient to Scripture at all times under the illumination of the Holy Spirit and in the light of the Anabaptist tradition. All branches must seek to take Christian ethics seriously, in order not to strain at the gnat of legalism and swallow the camel of materialism, racialism, and pride.

3. Through MCC Relief

Today the major asset of the American Mennonite corporate witness, if not that of international Mennonitism, is the Mennonite Central Committee. It is a fellowship of service with very definite evangelistic outreach, since there are many areas where the starting point of evangelism must come through service.

The Mennonite Central Committee was organized in response to the Russia famine of 1920-22. Later it moved forward under the call from the Russian refugees of 1929-30. This was followed by the first really great service and united witness opportunity in Civilian Public Service here in the United States beginning in 1940. This, combined with overseas relief, refugee- and colonization work has made the Mennonite Central Committee an impressive, mature, far-flung organization, operating with the combined resources of all branches. Thus, the reasons for the greatest achievement in American Mennonite co-operation are rooted in the suffering of our European brethren. The "brethren" making this call from Russia were mainly from the General Conference and Mennonite Brethren groups. Yet the response cut across all branch lines, stimulated new leadership, mobilized unbelievable resources of men and money and dramatized the power of a united witness under the Lordship of Christ. This remarkable development was described by the Mennonite Central Committee itself in the 1945 handbook as follows:

> .... in a very real sense the Mennonite Central Committee is a spontaneous and essential organization and not an artificial one. It had to be and it still has to be. As long as all the branches of the Mennonite family are held to a Christian faith and ideal which move them to feed the hungry and clothe the naked and to seek to testify by loving service to the Gospel of peace, love, and nonresistance, they will seek an effective organization to serve them in their work.

4. Through CPS

Through the experience with conscientious objectors in Civilian Public Service, the American Mennonites discovered that there was no marked superiority in piety, faith, morals, and general vitality in any one branch. However, it was instructive to discover the large common ground existing among such diverse groups. The original Mennonite core had maintained itself better than one might have expected.

On the other hand, there were tensions and difficulties. Camp directors were often shocked by the failure of the local churches to nurture young men in whom the new birth seemed real and decisive. Men of all groups often had childish personalities, bitter personalities, anti-social tendencies, running the gamut from license to legalism. Moreover, the diluted and pale Biblical convictions of some Mennonites made the others wonder if some of their American brethren had not actually abandoned the Bible as the authorative guide. This seemed to suggest that the acids of modernity were eating away the evangelical center of the early Anabaptists. On the other hand, those who had lost some Biblical ground for valid criticism were repulsed by the ethical inconsistencies of others, who were unable to grasp the realities of the social scene, as well as by their general manifestations of pride and self-righteousness.

Yet, in spite of all these conflicts manifesting themselves, a common core remained: a Biblical faith, a practical Christianity, a capacity for disciplined, hard work, a heritage of suffering, a solid family life, a rejection of conventional worldliness, a delegated approach to authority which rejects pure democracy, a desire to serve the nation without killing, and a commitment that love is the heart of the Gospel. Moreover, it was further joy to discover that these Mennonite common denominators were attractive to other members of the body of Christ outside of our tradition. Never has American Mennonitism witnessed across the length and breath of the United States of America so effectively. At the end of the war thousands upon thousands of people knew something real and accurate about Mennonites which they never knew before. What is most important, they knew something real and accurate about the Gospel recorded in the New Testament.

5. Through Student Exchange

Meanwhile, on the relief field a very close cooperation developed. This, in turn, led to creative contacts with our brethren in Europe. This suggested the student exchange in the fall of 1946, which will continue for an indefinite period. In many respects this is the first meeting of American and European minds. Unlike hurried brief conferences, these European students have many months for the more leisurely exchange of views and convictions about the Christian task in the world today. Tomorrow's leaders on both continents should have by far the

Joy Not Tears

At Jesus Departure

by Isaac I. Friesen

JOHN 16:7 "It is expedient for you that I go away." Christ left this world at the time of his ascension. In Luke's gospel we read, "And he led them out as far as Bethany . . . and while he blessed them, he was parted from them and carried up into heaven, and they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy and were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God." We may well ask, what reason did the disciples have to rejoice at this time? Ought they not have been downhearted and sad to see their dearest friend depart from them? Ought they not to have returned to Jerusalem with heavy steps and slow? Why do we read that they returned to Jerusalem with great joy and were continually in the temple praising and blessing God?

The only explanation for this is that Christ must have finally persuaded them that it was expedient or profitable to them that he go away. At first the thought of his departing had sent shivers through their souls and we read that sorrow filled their hearts. Now they had come to see that Christ's words were indeed true, "It is expedient for you that I go way." Let us at this time point out some reasons as to why it was expedient that Christ should go away.

> Had Christ tarried with the disciples it would hardly have occurred to them that they themselves were to be the body of Christ. Christ now had no hands except their hands with which to carry on his work.

Spiritualizing of Faith

It was expedient for the spiritualizing of their faith. This was the reason given by Christ himself. He said, "If I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart I will send Him unto you." Thus in consequence of his going away the Holy Spirit has come to the church. They were no longer to remain dependent on his physical or visible presence. As a result of the coming of the Holy Spirit his spiritual presence should become an even more vital thing to them than his visible presence. The spiritual presence of Christ outranks the bodily in value and surpasses it in power. It is now the definite work of the Holy Spirit to take of the things of Christ and reveal them to us. It is through the Holy Spirit that we gain a fuller insight into the character and person of Christ. As a result of the coming of the Holy Spirit our faith in Christ is deepened; our love for him is increased; our desire for Him is enlarged; and our communion with him is sanctified. As the Holy Spirit fills us we come to see that our knowledge of Christ depends more on what we see with uur spiritual eyes than what we could have seen with our physical eyes. Thus it was expedient that he go away for the spiritualizing of our faith.

Universalizing the Gospel

It was also expedient that he go away for the universalizing of the gospel. When Jesus was here on earth he could not minister to people in all parts of Palestine at the same time. When he was ministering to the needy folk in Galilee he could not also be with those who needed him in Judea or in any other part of the world. Jesus must have often felt the cry of humanity and the needs of the multitudes who were beyond his reach. Hence only by departing from the vision of the privileged few could he reign by his Spirit in the hearts of all. Only by ascending to heaven and casting off the limitations imposed by a human body could he belong to all the world. As the ascended Lord he now becomes the universal Christ who can minister to the needs of all who come to him through faith.

Energizing of Evangelism

His going away was expedient for the energizing of evangelism. With the going away of Christ a new conception of Christ's body became evident to his disciples. Paul speaking to Christian says, "Ye are the body of Christ." Had Christ tarried with the disciples it would hardly have occurred to them that they themselves were to be the body of Christ. Christ now had no hands except their hands with which to carry on his work. He had no feet except their feet to pursue the lost and to rescue the perishing. It took the departure of Christ from this human scene to convince the disciples that they were now the agents of his will upon earth, and that the future of Christ's kingdom now rested with them. If they should fail him there would be none other to carry on his work. Hence his going away has been expedient for the energizing of evangelism.

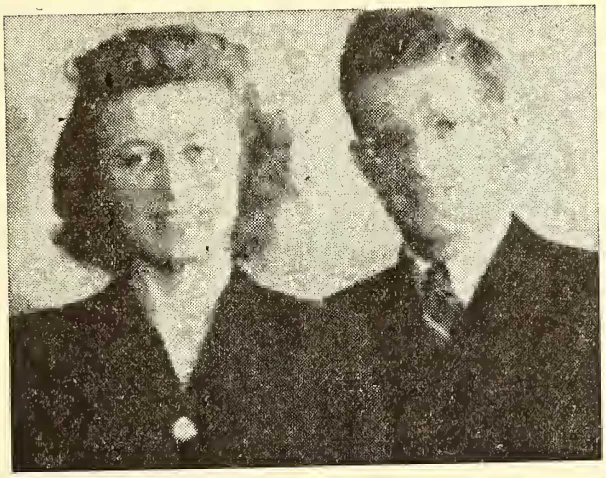
Fortifying of Their Faith

Finally it was expedient for the fortifying of their faith. Christ ascended and exalted to the right hand of God the Father is a proof to us that he has not been mastered by evil but has himself been the conqueror. He has not gone down in defeat before the most concentrated powers of an evil world. He has been exalted far above all principalities and powers and world rulers of darkness. This fortifies our faith that in him we too can be more than conquerors. For as someone has said, "If evil, at the very point where it had put forth its maximum force in one crowning deed of consummate iniquity—its crucifying of Christ—had met its match, and lost the battle, and been routed utterly, what more have we to fear. Christ crucified and ascended—there is the ultimate reality; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Literacy--Foundation of Mission Work

by Malcolm Wenger

Did you pause this morning to feed your soul on the Bread of Life by reading the Bible? Have you not found God's Word to be a lamp unto your feet and a light unto your path? What a privilege is yours! Have you ever thought what your Christian life would be like if you were unable to read the Bible? Many of the Cheyenne Christians are not able to read the Word for themselves. Christian growth is slow when one hears only occasionally the Word of Life.



Rev. and Mrs. Malcolm Wenger

When the missionaries first arrived among the Cheyennes there were very few who understood any English. It was evident that the missionaries would have to learn the Cheyenne language in order to effectively present the life-giving message of the Gospel. Of course there were no dictionaries, no grammars, no primers, or reading books. There wasn't an alphabet because no word of Cheyenne had ever been written.

First, a Dictionary

It became the special work of Rev. Rodolphe Petter to patiently record the sounds and words of Cheyenne and thus give to these people a written language. God had called Mr. Petter from Switzerland for this task and had prepared him well since he was familiar with at least seven languages. Mr. Petter worked out the grammar of the language and printed, with the help of his son, an English-Cheyenne Dictionary of 1126 pages.

Then, the Scriptures

As soon as possible portions of the Word were translated. These were constantly revised and added to until in 1934 the entire New Testament was published by the American Bible Society. Also in print is a summary and selections from the Old Testament, Pilgrim's Progress, and a song book with sixty-one songs. Mr. Petter wrote in 1934, "And now the message of God and his Christ is in the Cheyenne mouth for a witness to be accepted or rejected."

Now, Teaching to Read

The task that now lies before the missionaries here is making the most of this great work that has been finished. Almost invariably the strong Christians are able to read the Word for themselves. This small group must be enlarged until every Christian who is physically able learns to read. Others too might be brought to the Lord could they read the Word in the tongue which they learned as a child.

But are not the Cheyennes taught to speak English? Yes. The school has been here among the Northern Cheyennes just about as long as the mission. But come with me as we visit a few homes in the "Camp." Did you understand what those little boys said as they were playing together? No, because most children speak only Cheyenne until they start school. Those teen-agers spoke pretty good English but did you notice how they started to speak Cheyenne to one another as soon as we left? And this old lady understands no English at all. The day is coming when English will supplant Cheyenne but today with some exceptions it is still the language of the heart and the home.

A Start on a Primer

Can people who have never read in their lives be taught to read? Yes, but it is not easy, especially since the Cheyenne has such very long words. Some things that may prove helpful in reaching this goal are a primer, easy readers, and Bible story books. To prepare these much wisdom is needed. A start has been made on the primer.

The goal of mission work is not only to preach the Gospel but to bring into existence a church that is self-supporting, self-governing, and self-propagating. Before this can be realized the Christian must be able to read

Christ Speaks on Memorial Sunday

by George G. Dick

Memorial Day at first was to commemorate the war-dead of the Civil War. Later it was made to include all war-dead. Now, I think, it is usually meant to include all those who have died, that is the rank and file of American people. It is on this day when wreathes and other grave decorations are placed on the graves to commemorate those who were dear to us. This is fitting. It should be so, but so often we forget some of the weightier truths connected with our loved ones' departure.

The World's Memorial Day

Memorial Day speaks of a past. In the catagory of the soldier's death his bravery, his sacrifice, and his so-called accomplishments are usually thought of. Of our loved ones, it is of their deeds, their aspirations, and often of their sudden going that we think. To the ordinary individual Memorial Day is only the remembering of one who lived, but now is dead, gone, not conscious.

But Christ Speaks of . . . .

Many people of Christ's day also had become materialistic in their thinking. To them Jesus said, "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." In fact the Sadducees were a large influencial party who held that there was no life after death. To these people the words of Christ should have brought hope but as is so often the case, they scorned his word.

Immortality

It is remarkable what light Jesus sheds on the subject of existence after death. "Ye shall be as angels" was his word of man's future state. Man will not any longer live as though the height for which he was created is in the realm of the sense life, but in the realm of spirit. God grant us to listen intently to the Lord Jesus, He knows by creation, by redemption, and by giving rewards for faith and condemnation, for unbelief. Every responsible individual who has gone on had his opportunities, his time of decisions, he is now waiting the fullness of his labors or procrastinations.

Of an Instructive Past

Memorial Day also speaks of a present. You will recall one phase of Abraham Lincoln's address, "that those who have died should not have died in vain." This is also true in the Christian. Christ laid great stress on the here-and-now. So often we remember only the good things which those did who passed on. To a certain extent this should be so, but Jesus put these words into the mouth of Abraham when conversing with the rich man, "remember thou." We often learn from others' mistakes as well as from their worthy endeavors. It is a sad commentary of the human race the way they forget what happened to others who went counter to the plans and purposes of God. Christ would have us "remember."

Of Hope for Harmony

Memorial Day also should speak of a hope—a hope doing away with all that disrupts a God-desired harmony. Never in our life-span have we experienced more uncertainty and grave concerns than what we are experiencing today. In one generation of time we have witnessed two world wars. You ask where is there any sign of harmony and unity in the world. It is true there is none, but never-the-less the common concept of all people is that there should be harmony.

Where did man get this inner longing for peace and harmony? I think there is only one answer, he got it from God. It is strange that man, when he tries to bring about harmony, usually leaves God out of the picture. Jesus said, "ye believe in God, believe also in me." Final harmony will not be brought about by merely human desires and implementation, but will be brought about through the Lord Jesus Christ. As He is the Way, the truth, and the life, so is He also the one through whom this is to be realized.

Of Rest and Work

Christ speaks on Memorial Day to all who would listen. To the unbeliever, the sceptic, the pessimist, the one in despair, Christ again gives his words of "come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." He knows the burden of the unbeliever and he knows their lack of purpose and direction, to say nothing of their guilt of sin. No wonder he adds "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." To the Christian, Memorial Day should speak again of the aspirations of those who have lived before us, and help him re-evaluate his compliance with the eternal purposes of the Lord Jesus Christ. I am sure this will bring greater inner Christ-likeness, and a better carrying out of the commission which He left with us.

the Word in order to guide their own lives and that of the church. The Word is basic. Reading is essential.

Will you join in special prayer for God's guidance and help for the workers here in preparing teaching materials, arranging for reading classes, and seeking to encourage the Cheyennes to read so that the Word of God may be as easily accessible to them as it is to you? Finally, remember our own study of the Cheyenne. At times our progress seems exasperatingly slow. We long to be able to express ourselves clearly and freely in the Cheyenne tongue.—Workers' Exchange.

GROUND-BREAKING CEREMONIES AT BLUFFTON

Breaking of ground for the new auditorium-gymnasium at Bluffton College will be one of the main events on the campus during the commencement activities May 27-30. This will be held at 3 P.M. on Saturday and will be followed by crowning of the May queen, Miss Janice Welty, Pandora, Ohio, on the baseball diamond. The annual alumni banquet will be held at 6 P.M.

Other activities during commencement week include a Pi Delta banquet and student recital on Friday evening, class reunions and 1949 and 1939 box ceremonies Saturday afternoon, Baccalaureate services, the president's reception and vesper choir concert on Sunday, and the commencement program in the First Mennonite Church on Monday morning.

Three seniors in music gave their graduating recitals May 13. They were Claren Sommer, organ and piano; Ruth Porter, violin; and Elizabeth Brand Howe, voice. The Men's Glee Club gave a concert the evening of May 17. A general student recital was presented in Ramseyer Chapel May 21. The last radio broadcast of the year was given Sunday afternoon, May 8, composed of a concert by the Vesper choir. The choir will take a trip to points west as far as Mountain Lake, Minnesota, immediately after the close of school.

Foreign students, accompanied by Dr. Irwin Bauman, spoke in church services in northern Indiana May 15. Jacob Friesen and Joan de Monchy appeared in the Middlebury and Goshen churches, and Herman Neff, Jack Rote, and Iris Melicio took part in services at Nappanee and Topeka. Offerings were used for the foreign student program. President Ramseyer accompanied by the College Men's Quartet took part in the Community Church in Dayton, Ohio, on the same Sunday, where Rev. Raymond Hilty, an alumnus, is pastor. Following the services a Bluffton College alumni dinner was held there.

CONFERENCE PRESIDENT AS SEMINARY COMMENCEMENT SPEAKER

Commencement events are now very much in the center of our attention. The annual commencement address will be delivered in the evening of May 29, by our General Conference president, Rev. Jesse N. Smucker, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Bluffton, Ohio. Baccalaureate services will be held the same day, with Warren W. Slabaugh, of the Bethany faculty delivering the sermon. Both services will be held at the First Church of the Brethren.

Marvin Dirks will lead the combined Bethany and Mennonite Biblical Seminary choir in selections from Handel's "Messiah," in a program at the First Church of the Brethren May 15 at 7:30 P.M. The student voice and piano recital, featuring the students of Marvin Dirks, Alvin Brightbill, and Wilbur Royer, will be held on May 16. A senior, Harold Thiessen, will give a violin recital May 17 and graduate students in voice and piano will be presented in a recital May 19.

Vesper services featuring the nine seniors of the Seminary graduating class will take place May 22 at Mennonite headquarters. Members of this class of 1949 include: Jacob D. Goering, North Newton, Kansas; David Habegger, Busby, Montana; Robert W. Hartzler, Goshen, Indiana; Esko Loewen, Topeka, Indiana; Irvin Richert, Los Angeles, California; Maynard Shelly, Allentown, Pennsylvania; Harold Thiessen, Middlebury, Indiana; Benno Toews, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada; and Orlando A. Waltner, Champa, India.

A high point in the spiritual experience of Mennonite Biblical Seminary this year came on Thursday night with the baptism of Hanno Klassen, of Heidelberg, Germany, followed by the celebration of the Lord's supper.

HARDER RECEIVES PH.D. DEGREE

M. S. Harder, director of education at Bethel College, returned from the University of Southern California where he successfully passed his examination for the Ph.D. degree. He and Mrs. Harder will return to California on June 11 at which time the degree will be conferred. "The Origin, Philosophy and Development of Education Among the Mennonites" was the subject of his 600-page theisis.

I. G. Neufeld, in charge of news service, journalism, and publications at Bethel College for the 1948-49 school year, will return to Tabor College, Hillsboro, where he taught two years previously. He will head the Mennonite Historical Library, supervise publications, and teach journalism.

Friends of Bethel who have contributed $10 or more since August 1, 1948, are being invited to attend the annual booster program and reception in Memorial Hall, Saturday night, May 28, at 7 p.m. Light lunch will be served and a program will be given by various college organizations and faculty members.

Commencement week at Bethel will open Friday evening, May 27, when the seniors present their chapel program. Sunday the A Cappella choir will be presented in a final concert which will be followed by a choir reunion concert. Baccalaureate services, with the sermon by president Ed. G. Kaufman on "The Meaning of Suffering," will be held in Memorial Hall at 8 P.M.

Monday is Alumni and Ex-Student day. Honors chapel will be held at 9 A.M. when all honors for the school year will be conferred on those earning this reward. The day will be spent in class reunions, divisional group meetings, and alma mater meetings, and will be climaxed by the alumni and ex-student banquet at 6:30 P.M. Commencement exercises will conclude the week on Tuesday morning at 10 A.M., with Dr. W. W. Sweet speaking on "The Sources of Our Religious Liberty."

Headquarters to Be Remodeled

by A. Theodore Mueller

When the General Conference Headquarters Office opened in 1943 it began to utilize a floor space 25 x 150 which had previously been occupied by the Herald Publishing Company. The front part had been used as a bookstore and the rear section had been a print shop.

At first only Dr. P. A. Penner, as Office Manager, with his secretary and Rev. J. M. Suderman, Manager of the Mennonite Book Store, occupied only the front of the building. Within the brief period of a few years other conference workers, such as the editor of the Mennonite, the Executive Secetary of the General Conference, the Executve Secretary of the Board of Education, and the Manager of the Publication Office moved in while the bookstore, in order to allow room for these conference workers, found other quarters. The mailing department of the Publication Office was moved into the back part of the building.

Dr. P. A. Penner Initiated Plans

The internal arrangement of this building, known as the Krehbiel Memorial Building, stands today as it did before 1943. It was not long, however, after Dr. P. A. Penner first opened the office that he and the executive committee of the General Conference began to plan to remodel the building to arrange for the adequate housing of all the conference offices which should be moved to this headquarters office. Committee rooms should also be provided.

Early in 1946 the first floor plan had been prepared and presented to the executive committee. Progress was slow. It was not until January of this year that the architect was instructed to prepare his final drawings and specifications.

These Present Plans

The plans for remodeling specify the removing of the display windows at the front so that area can be otherwise utilized. Two committee rooms, one large, will be arranged. The front office work room will remain very much as it is. The mailing department of the Publication Office will occupy the rear of the building and the offices for the manager of the Publication Office and the editor of the Mennonite will be adjacent. There will also be a ladies' lounge, which may, when necessary, be used as a committee room. A forced-air heating unit is to be installed which may also be used as an air-conditioning system. The wood floor is to be covered, and the whole interior will be redecorated. The remodeling of the upstairs rooms is not included in the plans at this time.

An Invitation

All persons who are interested may stop in at the headquarters office and look over the plans for remodeling this office. We hope the plans meet with your hearty approval as we arrange the office to permit all our conference work to be carried on more efficiently and more effectively for the sake of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

We ask for your earnest and sincere prayers and encouragement as we prepare to set this milestone in the history of our headquarters office.—Respectfully, A. Theodore Mueller, Office Manager best mutual grasp of one another's backgrounds and special concerns. Various publications are assisting in these interactions.

6. On the Local Level

Finally, the fellowship of service and evangelism operates on the local level in two ways. Often the biggest issues of a united witness are within given congregations where conflicting conceptions of Christianity are in operation along with conflicting backgrounds from Europe. The newly organized General Conference Mennonite Church in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, for example, had members with backgrounds from the Lancaster Conference, the Evangelical Mennonite Brethren, the Mennonite Brethren, Franconia Conference, the Congregationalist, and the General Conference. Yet there is substantial harmony.

Where Do We Go From Here?

Some say, "Let us retreat; this is already too far." Most of those who say this were always opposed to co-operation, hence they have very little, in fact, from which to retreat.

Some say, "This is far enough—no farther." We have gotten thus far without much of a theory of co-operation; only a fellowship of service and evangelism. Yet it should be noted that on December 19, 1942, the annual meeting of the Mennonite Central Committee adopted a statement of faith virtually without dissent. That same year the Mennonite Central Committee issued the famous core-course booklets, "Mennonites and Their Heritage," by H. S. Bender, C. Henry Smith, Guy F. Hershberger, E. G. Kaufman, P. C. Hiebert, and the late Edward Yoder. Here, again, it was obvious that such common ground would suggest some further steps.

The Next Step

The next step can be taken if all branches make it quite clear that they take the Bible seriously as normative in faith and morals. This, of course, will not be exact agreement about the Bible but a serious attempt to be obedient to Scripture at all times under the illumination of the Holy Spirit and in the light of the Anabaptist tradition. All branches must seek to take Christian ethics seriously, in order not to strain at the gnat of legalism and swallow the camel of materialism, racialism, and pride.

Let us assume these two prerequisites—Biblical authority and a serious ethical concern.

Another approach stemming from this shared conviction could be more pulpit- and altar fellow-

BEHIND THE 100% PLAN

First Mennonite Church

Beatrice, Nebraska

Jacob T. Friesen, Pastor

(Serving 170 homes)

One hundred and seventy different addresses receive "The Mennonite" or "Der Bote" through the 100 per cent Plan of the First Mennonite Church of Beatrice, Nebraska.

This congregation has participated in the 100 per cent plan for a number of years. This has become an intergral part of the church's program and the local ministry of the church.

In response to personal questions addressed to various members of the church the following are typical reactions. "It is a "good thing.' " "Every family gets an opportunity to read our church paper." "I read The Mennonite to get acquainted with our Conference and the work of other churches. I read the 'Jottings' first." One thoughtful brother suggested that he felt "it simplified the work of the Publication Office and eliminates delinquent subscription rates." "It keeps our young people in school and absentee members in contact with the Mennonite Church."

The above reactions add up to a word of genuine appreciation for the 100 Per Cent Plan and the way it operates in the churches of our Conference. No church can afford to be without it.

ship. I do not mean open communion and totally open pulpits. If open communion is practiced by some Mennonites, their whole structure of discipline collapses. This would be a tragic loss when one examines the bitter fruit following the abandonment of discipline within some groups. I do mean that all Mennonites with essentially common evangelical convictions and common ethical standards should fellowship occasionally at the Lord's table and in the washing of feet. Perhaps the latter experience, though not practiced by all branches any more, might be the very thing which would bring home the need of service and humility among the American Mennonites. Practically, this ought to permit some shared communion experiences in Mennonite Central Committee units and on the mission fields where the unity in Christ against the anti-Christian front is a matter of life and death.

The matter of more pulpit fellowship will have to operate only among those with mutual respect for one another along theological and ethical lines. Surely men and women who have labored together in common Gospel tasks across this nation and Canada and across Europe and Asia have a common message to share in the pulpit.

With these approaches to a united witness we will be in better condition to consider the larger task of witnessing to the Gospel of love in Jesus Christ in the larger church. The mission of the Mennonite church as a whole can be no other than recalling the church from its apostasy on repudiating love as the Alpha and Omega of the Gospel; and particularly the failure to unify faith and works by practicing what it preaches.

Today the Word of God and the word of man are in conflict. The Word of God commands a united witness among the people of God. We have a unique witness to make; we can make it much stronger.—Reprinted through the courtesy of Mennonite Life.

MEN NONITE MEN FOR CHRIST MEN

BEATRICE, NEBRASKA

MIDDLE DISTRICT

In response to roll-call at the laymen's meeting of the Middle District Conference all but a very few churches responded informally with what men were doing. Only about one-fourth have organizations but others carry on many worthwhile activities and programs informally. New officers elected for president, are Eldon Schrock, Nappanee, Indiana; vice president, N. N. Soldner Pandora, Ohio; and secrettary-treasurer, Clarence Schrock. St. John Church near Pandora, Ohio.

Jottings

—First Church, Bluffton, Ohio: Pre-Easter services were conducted by Rev. A. E. Kreider, president of the Foreign Mission Board. Prior to each message he showed pictures of our mission fields which he had visited. Our Sunday school superintendent, Carl Smucker, has been ill for some time and Irwin Baumgartner, who has recently moved into the community, is serving in his place. The foreign students conference held at Bluffton College recently brought many foreign guests to our Sunday school and church when they presented talks and songs. The Goshen College A cappella choir presented a program here recently. The Mennosingers, composed of men from eight denominations from the Goshen area, gave a concert May 11. Many of our members attended the Middle District Conference in Pandora the last week of April.—Zilla R. Amstutz, Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pennsylvania: We had a good response to the children's relief shoe project sponsored by the "Junior Stewards for God" class. Spring communion was observed on Palm Sunday instead of the usual Easter Sunday. Arch McQuilken, national C. E. leader, spoke at our Easter sunrise service. A relief clothing drive has just been completed by the Ladies Missionary Society. The young people sponsored a Christian motion picture, "The Power of God," recently. We worshipped with the Deep Run Old Congregation in their new church building recently. Our pastor, J. Herbert Fretz, was re-elected for his second term as president of the Eastern District Conference at West Swamp during the annual conference. Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: The Women's Missionary Society is planning the annual mother-daughter social for June 1. Sunday morning and evening, May 1, Hanno Klassen, a German foreign exchange student at the Seminary in Chicago, brought the messages. In the morning he spoke of the difference between divine love and human love. In the evening he gave his experiences as a German Mennonite during the war years in Germany, telling how he came to see and believe in the utter futility of war.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

—First Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Group fellowship meetings were held in homes of church members recently. Representatives from Bethel College were present to help us get better acquainted with our college. Monday, May 2, the young Ladies Aid sponsored a mother-daughter tea with Mrs. B. A. Goertz as leader. April 24 the ladies sextet under the direction of Mrs. Gertrude Hohmann Dyck, and the men's octet, directed by Professor Suderman from Bethel College, presented a sacred music program here, which was well attended.—Mrs. Albert Penner, Corr.

—Walton Church, Walton, Kansas: Heinold Fast, a German student at Bethel College, spoke to the adult Christian Endeavor May 8. The midweek Bible classes closed on April 27 with an evening of recreation and worship led by Coach Bob Tully from Bethel College. Plans are again being made for a Walton Community Bible School, in which both the Methodist and Mennonite churches will participate.—Ella Voth, Corr.

—Bethel College Church, North Newton, Kansas: Plans are being made for the annual Vacation Church school, which is to open June 6 and will continue for four weeks. Six new members were received into the church by letter on Easter Sunday. The week of April 24 the pastor, Rev. Lester Hostetler, conducted a series of Bible studies in the First Church at Geary, Oklahoma. The Junior Choir, directed by Joan Veston Enz, sang at the song festival on May 1. A class of fourteen is taking catechetical instruction under the pastor, and baptismal services are planned for Pentecost Sunday.—Corr.

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Oregon: The Women's Missionary Society held an all-day meeting May 4. Clothing was brought, several small size comforters were made, and baby garments were finished. These will be shipped May 17 for overseas relief. Mrs. Paul Roth was elected delegate for the Conference in June in Upland, California. Officers of the Society elected were Mrs. Lester Conrad, president; Mrs. Frank Hostetler, vice president; Mrs. Melvin Burck, secretary treasurer; and Mrs. Ivan Learfield, reporter. —Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr.

—First Church, Lehigh, Kansas: Our congregation met with the Mennonite Brethren Church on Mother's Day due to the illness of our pastor. Seven babies were dedicated May 15. Reverend Goering conducted the consecration service and Rev. H. G. Neuman of Alberta, Canada, brought the message. Dr. J. E. Hartzler filled the pulpit May 22.—M. E. Goering, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Lancaster, Pennsylvania: May 6 approximately twelve workers held a work party at Akron when ten cases of baby shoes were packed for overseas relief. Following the party a brief meditation, "In the Name of Christ," was led by one of the MCC workers.—Raymond E. Harnly, Corr.

—First Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: The all-church choir under the direction of Mrs. Ruth Hippensteele presented a sacred musical program, on May 15. The evenings offering was used for missions and relief.

Church Celebrates Centennial

Nine services with special programs and speakers will be held May 8-15 in celebration of the one-hundred years of service since the founding of the Deep Run Church in Bedminister, Pennsylvania. Programs each evening will be sponsored by various organizations of the church. Guest speakers during the first three nights will be Rev. Russel L. Mast, former pastor, now in Wadsworth Ohio, and Rev. Howard T. Landes, Bluffton, Ohio.

At the opening service Tuesday evening the Sunday School was in charge, Wednesday the Women's Missionary Society, and Thursday the Christian Endeavor Society. Friday evening was Community and Former Sons Night with music by the Doylestown-Deep Run male chorus, greetings from ministers of the community and former sons in Christian service, and a summary message by Freeman H. Swartz.

Historical evening will be held Saturday with message by the pastor, Rev. Herbert Fretz, and Dr. Elmer E. S. Johnson, special music by the Gahman Male Chorus, and greetings from Hiriam H. Keller, Judge of Bucks County Court.

Sunday afternoon the Conference will be stressed with greetings by ministers of the Conference, a summary talk by Freeman H. Swartz, and special music by the Springfield congregation. The last anniversary service will be held Sunday evening when the cantata, "The Holy City" by Alfred Gaul, will be sung by a chorus from the local congregation and community.

A special historical committee was appoined to plan and sponsor these anniversary meetings and a historical booklet of the church is being published.

The Recently Discovered Isaiah Scroll

By John C. Trever

The fact that the scroll was used for a long time in ancient times is indicated by the darkened central portions of the rolls at both sides, the result of many hands holding the scroll at those points. The total length of the scroll is 23¾ feet. It is made up of 17 sheets of parchment sewn together as seen in two places on this picture. The sheet exposed measures 15⅝" by 10⅜".

"The greatest Bible manuscript discovery of modern times." That was the comment of a leading scholar on the discovery of the Isaiah scroll and a number of other first-century B.C. Hebrew scrolls in February, 1948. Lively discussion among Bible lovers everywhere has been the result.

The rare opportunity of receiving the Isaiah scroll for examination, identification and photographing came as a rich blessing to me, adding a thrilling climax to eight months of living with the Bible in Palestine. The story is recounted here briefly.

Having gone to Palestine as a Fellow of the American Schools of Oriental Research, I shared with the other Fellows and students of the Jerusalem School the difficult, yet profoundly enlightening, experiences which we met during the turbulent months leading up to the end of the British Mandate on May 15, 1948.

THE DIRECTOR of the School, Dr. Millar Burrows, his wife, and one of the students, left for a two-week trip to Bagdad the morning of February 15. Having been appointed acting Director for those two weeks, I was called to the telephone three morning later to answer for the Director. It was Father Butros Sowmy, priest of the St. Mark's Syrian Orthodox Convent in the Old City of Jerusalem. He wanted to know if someone at our School could assist in identifying and dating some old Hebrew manuscripts in their library. Although somewhat skeptical of his description, I invited him to bring the scrolls to the school the next afternoon.

Promptly at 2:30 he arrived with his brother, Karim, carrying a little satchel containing five rolls, wrapped in Arabic newspapers. When I opened the largest of the rolls, I was amazed to discover that I was looking at a manuscript which I knew must be much older than any Bible manuscript in Hebrew of which I was aware.

The script was strange and puzzling, so I asked to be allowed to copy out several lines for study.

AS I WORKED, they related the story of the discovery. Wandering Bedouins, they said, found the scrolls in a cave, not far from 'Ein Fashka, near the northwest end of the Dead Sea where they had been carefully concealed in sealed jars and preserved by wrapping in yards of cloth and covered with pitch. Tearing the outer wrapping from them, the Bedouins took them to Bethlehem to seek a customer with ready Bakshish! There they were told the writing looked like the Syriac language and were advised to offer them to the Syrians. The Syrians in Bethlehem called their superior (Metropolitan) in Jerusalem, Mar Athanasius Yeshue

*EDITOR'S NOTE: As Director of the Department of the English Bible, Dr. Trever's primary task is to interpret the work of the Standard Bible Committee, which is preparing the Revised Standard Version of the Bible. The New Testament was published in 1946, and the Old Testament will be published not later than 1952. Dr. Trever is a young man, still in his early thirties, but a Bible scholar of great promise.

About six miles to the south of the hills in the background, but in similar, though more rugged and high country, is the cave in which the Jerusalem scrolls were found by Arab Bedouins. Like the Essenes, the original owners of these manuscripts lived a monastic life in this Wilderness of Judea. The "Sectarian Document" contains some rules and rites of this sect whose library has now been found.

Samuel, who immediately offered to buy the scrolls for his library. Thus they came into the hands of the Orthodox Syrians.

When the men had left, I immediately set to work on the lines copied and soon discovered the quotation was Isaiah 65:1! "I am inquired of by them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not: I said, Behold me, behold me, unto a nation that was not called by my name."

As Tischendorff remarked about his discovery of the great Codex Sinaiticus in February, 1859, "sleep seemed a sacrilege that night." Closer examination of the script soon revealed the startling fact that the scrolls must have been copied before the time of Christ! It all seemed incredible, for no biblical manuscripts in such perfect condition have come to light from earlier than the fourth century A. D., and no early manuscripts have ever been found in Palestine!

EARLY NEXT morning I made arrangements to go to the Old City, something we had felt unsafe to do for months, and found my way to the Syrian Convent, not far from Jaffa Gate. The Syrians were most cordial and happy to learn of my identification.

We were soon good friends, and I proceeded to try to win their confidence so that we would be allowed to photograph the precious discovery. They finally agreed to let me do it the next day! Then the Metropolitan brought out the scolls so that I could examine the extent of the Isaiah scroll and look for proof of authenticity, which to more experienced eyes would have been immediately apparent.

Carefully we unrolled the long scroll. All doubt of authenticity vanished after carefully examining a few columns of the writing. The last eight or more columns were badly broken, but finally I found what appeared to be the first column of the scroll, which had been rolled with the end outside. I was too excited by then to notice Isaiah 1:1 on the piece in my hand! Rather, I copied out the first two lines and made a hasty departure to keep another appointment.

TO REPAIR the Isaiah scroll demanded more than half of the next day, but by late afternoon, I had photographed the entire scroll and part of another. The Syrians obligingly left the other scrolls for me to repair and photograph more leisurely, which was accomplished within the next three days. In the meantime Dr. William H. Brownlee, the other Fellow left at the School, went to work on a small leather scroll which he later discovered to be a commentary on the Book of Habakkuk. The whole lower part of this manuscript is completely broken away, leaving much to be desired when it was translated.

The Isaiah scroll proved to be complete, except for a few small breaks. It is 23¾ feet long, 10¼ inches broad, and contains 54 columns of beautifully preserved Hebrew writing. Seventeen sheets of carefully prepared parchment were sewn together to make the complete scroll. The abundant evidence of much wear in ancient times suggests that many devout Jews who belonged to the sect, whose library has now been found, pored over these sacred columns. As far as we know, this was the book of the Old Testament most revered by the sect, of which we know little as yet. Despite the fact that every column of the Isaiah scroll contains numerous differences from the received text used by scholars today, the most amazing fact is how few of the differences are significant for the meaning. Besides its antiquity, the scroll will be valuable mostly to scholars who wish to know more about the Hebrew language.

THE SECTION of the Standard Bible Committee which is revising the Old Testament for the Revised Standard Version of the Bible had done very little with the Book of Isaiah until recently.

Dr. Millar Burrows, a member of the Committee, having collated the Isaiah scroll on his way home from Palestine, has been sharing with the members all the significant variations for discussion.

It was my privilege to sit with the Committee recently as they discussed Isaiah 8:12—12:6. In these particular chapters only three differences found in the scroll demanded discussion by the Committee! Only one of these was considered important enough to be given a statement in a footnote! When the final revision is undertaken later, it is possible that even one will be omitted.

Thus perhaps the greatest significance of the Isaiah scroll discovery is its testimony to the substantial accuracy of the established text which is based on manuscripts copied more than a thousand years later than the one just discovered.

How We Got Our Bible

Article III in a Series

by Jacob T. Friesen

You may have called it a prison, but it was home to Alfred. The house was large with massive walls hid from view by a large cliff jutting from the side of the mountain. Rooms were all alike, distinguished only by the number on the door. Alfred lived in room No. 8. He was one of thirty living in this monastery away from people and the evil temptations of the outside world. House rules were very strict. The hours of the day were carefully divided between prayer, meditation, study, eating, physical work, and rest. Even though life was hard, Alfred was convinced he was doing the right.

As a young man Alfred had been forced to work with ungodly men and the pressure of evil had become so overbearing that he faced the alternative of giving up his faith or leaving his job. When a friend faced a similar situation, he chose to withdraw to become a monk. An inner urge told Alfred to do the same. In the monastery he would be encouraged in the Christian life as he lived with those of like mind and faith. Alfred obeyed.

After appropriate procedures Alfred became a monk assigned to room No. 8. When he first entered, the walls seemed strangely bare. One small window to the east broke their staring sameness. The chair, table, and crude bed were the only furnishings, but they filled the room. Everything seemed strange at first. Time passed slowly. Alfred spent much time in the reading room. It contained writings of the history of the church. Alfred soon learned the why and wherefore of the church and world conditions.

In 313 A. D. by the Edict of Tolration Constantine granted to Christians and to all others full liberty of following the religion of their choice. In 325 he encouraged all of his subjects to become Christians. Persecution was over and thousands joined the Church. The Church grew in numbers but lost its spiritual power. Sincere Christians faced the alternative of being absorbed or of withdrawing. They asked the perplexing question, "If, when the world becomes Christian, churchman become as lordly as senators, and emperors banish bishops, what should the sincere Christian do? 'Get out of the world,' answered some. 'Go to the desert, flee the world, flee the cites, go back to the fields where the farmer sings psalms at the plough, flee the murderous emperors and the sleek ministers, flee everybody and live all alone.'" Bainton, R. T., The Church of Our Fathers.

Alfred had fled and was living alone. A number of years had passed since he first entered the monastery. Through his interest in reading and study he had distinguished himself as a scholar in ancient languages and the study of Latin, the official language of his church. Alfred was assigned the task of making copies of the much used Vulgate Bible. This Latin translation by the ancient scholar St. Jerome had become the official Bible of the Catholic Church. Constant use of this Bible made it necessary for the best scholars to make new copies. This work was very exacting. Words and lines had to be checked and re-checked. Page after page had to be transcribed by hand.

Whenever Alfred became discouraged, he thought of himself as called of God to study and preserve the ancient wisdom and Holy Scriptures. The early Christians had given birth to the New Testament. The great church councils under the guidance of the Holy Spirit had drawn together the writings which should be preserved. Many scholars had made translations but that of Jerome stood above the rest. St. Jerome had also been a monk not as strict as many. He became a great student of the Hebrew and also the ancient Greek. Toward the end of the 4th century many errors had crept into the Latin versions of the Bible. Jerome was asked to make a revision of the New Testament which he completed in 385 A. D. Later he translated the Old Testament directly from the original Hebrew, a task of which perhaps no other Christian scholar of this day was capable. These translations greatly influenced later scholars. Hundreds of years had elapsed and Alfred was passing on the message of this Bible to generations still unborn.

This very moment the pagan tribes and nations were destroying each other. Barbarian hordes were sweeping down upon unprotected cities to plunder and destroy. In the peaceful stillness of Room No. 8 Alfred was pouring out his very life for a God appointed task.

History had proven the correctness of Alfred's secret thoughts. During the turmoil and social chaos of work on the scrolls. Repeated visits to the Syrian Convent were necessary. Always the Metropolitan and priest were most cordial and helpful. They visited our School on numerous occasions. The cordial relations added much to the thrill of the discovery itself. But conditions in Palestine were rapidly deteriorating as May 15 approached. We hastened our work while preparing to leave. Once all the protographic work was finished, we urged the Syrians to carry the scrolls to a place of safety outside of Palestine. This they did, shortly before we all left.

On Monday, April 5, I left Jerusalem to fly from Lydda to Beirut, rejoicing that we had done everything possible to ensure the safety of the manuscripts and to prepare for their ultimate publication for the scholarly world.

Arriving in America I was shocked to learn that during the battle for the Old City, the Syrian Convent was badly damaged and my good friend, Father Butros Sowmy, was killed! Although mingled with trials and tragedy, the discovery of the Isaiah scroll, at this time, points significantly to the fact that "grass withers, a flower fades, but the Word of our God is established forever" (Isaiah 40:8). The discovery suggests the conclusion that the purpose of God is revealed, and that He is pointing to that book of the Old Testament which, more than almost any other, challenges the world with a message that could bring peace.

the Middle Ages, God was preserving his written Word behind the iron gates of the monastery. Sincere Christians offered themselves unselfishly to the study and preservation of the Holy Scriptures which the pagan world was unwilling to accept. The ancient wisdom of the Greeks and Romans as well as the record of the Holy Scriptures are ours today because sincere Christians obeyed the voice of God to withdraw from the over whelming evil of paganism.

Alfred was one of many who withdrew, but in withdrawing he advanced the ultimate spread of God's Word. He became a part of a living link which God chose to keep His written Word in tact for all time and for us.

Shine His Shoes

by Don Snider

Youth Director for the Church of the Brethren

The tags on their trunks and suitcases read Colorado, Michigan, Virginia, Kansas, Indiana, and Pennsylvania as they arrived that first day. Twenty-three Brethren youth were beginning two months of basic training in their year of volunteer service.

That first day they were strangers. In their first meeting they asked, "How can we break the ice, and get acquainted quickly?" Pooling several ideas brought out an idea which worked.

A penalty was agreed upon for any person who responded to a greeting from another person by using the same word. For instance, if John passed Mary in the hall and said "Hello," she should reply "How are you?" or anything except "Hello." If she said "Hello," she had to shine his shoes. Polish, brushes, and chairs were fixed up for the service. For three days everyone was shining everyone else's shoes and having loads of fun doing it. It furnished a topic for conversation. Everyone was extra cautious after the outdoor volleyball game played on a muddy court. Such a practice was not far afield from the Brethren custom of washing each other's feet as a lowly humble service at communion time.

About four weeks later a leader met with them and discussed techniques of reconciliation. They examined Matthew 18 on becoming right with an offended brother. They agreed that destructive criticism—this business of finding faults in others and passing them on as gossip—was a vicious practice. They asked themselves, "How can we reduce this disease among us?"

"The shoe-shine kit—the communion kit! We have almost forgotten about it. The polish and chair are still there. Let's shine a person's shoes if we catch ourselves running another person down." They all agreed. It would be voluntary and no social pressure would be used.

One day went by and no one used the "communion kit." Two days went by. They came to the leader and confessed. "This is too hard." They discussed it. Next day a boy broke the ice. Interrupting the class discussion, he got the brushes and shined a persons shoes before everyone else. It was a spiritual experience. No worded apologies. Just a simple act which asked for forgiveness.

Later in the day others did the same. Sometimes the shoes of a person who seemed to be more guilty were shined by the innocent party. But the act revealed that there was more in the person's mind than was revealed on the surface. He felt responsible and guilty. Everyone became unusually alert to the worth of everyone else.

Were they not carrying out the spirit of the love feast and the Lord's Supper in a magnificent way?

VOLUNTARY SERVICE ASSIGNMENTS AND TRANSFERS

The following service assignments have been given to the members of the volunteer group taking their orientation course at Akron from April 15 to May 15. Willard Albrecht to Mexico Service Unit; Claude & Edna Beachy to Frederick Home for the Aged, Frederick, Pennsylvania; Emma Bergen and Erna Derksen to Brandon Mental Hospital, Brandon, Manitoba; Carl Derksen and Willard Hooge to the Duarte T. B. Sanitorium, Los Angeles, California; Gerald Hershberger and Harvey Wall to the National Training School, Washington (Federal Bureau of Prisons); Allen Dale Kaufman, Robert Swartz and Kenneth Miller to Skillman State Village for Epileptics, Skillman, New Jersey; and Edward Stutzman to the MCC Material Aid Program.

Melvin Headrick of La Junta, Colorado; Henry Jantzen of Plymouth, Nebraska; and Galen Flickner of Moundridge, Kansas left on May 10 for Voluntary Service at Espelkamp, Germany.

The Princeton Commonweal School at Nathrop, Colorado closed recently, thus terminating the Service Unit located there. Workers of this unit are being transferred elsewhere—John Hershberger to Gulfport; Lawrence Harder to the California MCC Mental Hospital farm; Marvin Bartel, Vernon Suderman and Robert Blough to MCC truck driving; Roland Ediger and George Bohrer to eastern units. Also transferring are Vernon Friesen and Harold Pankratz from Florida migrant work to Duarte Sanitorium in California.

General Conference Mennonite Missions in India

Christians on the mission fields have higher ideals if the desire for an education can be called that. They want to send their children to school. Some of the reasons are the promise of better salaries, but some seek a higher education because of the love of knowledge. A mission rule is that all children of Christian parents on the India field can be sent to the boarding schools at Jangjir and Birra by paying a very small fee.

PENTECOST TEACHES us that the Christian Church and all its activities originated as the direct working of God in history. The same Holy Spirit who gave birth to the Church fifty days after the resurrection also guided the Church to its first organization when the seven deacons were chosen. The Holy Spirit, when He came upon the household of Cornelius, once and for all made the Church colorblind racially (how we must be grieving the Spirit by keeping negroes at a distance from our churches). With the coming of the Holy Spirit on the Samaritans, home missions were begun. Under the guidance of the Spirit foreign missions began at Antioch. Throughout all these manifestations of the Spirit men were used as instruments to teach and preach bringing the Good News of the new life in Christ. Thus the education and preaching ministry was used of the Holy Spirit. The Church is God's creation! —JJE

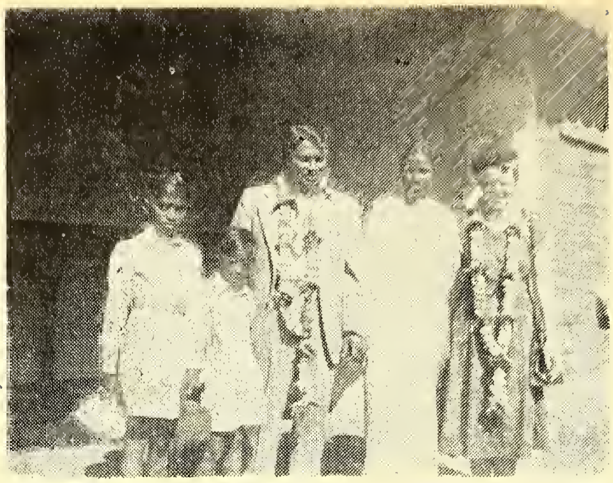
ISAIAH SAID, "Lord, here am I; send me." Too many modern Christians say, "Lord, here am I; send my sister." When there are appeals that come from various agencies and boards for Christian men who will serve in many many different kinds of tasks, one is inclined to wonder whether the number of those in what we have popularly called "full-time Christian service" is not far too small. M.C.C. this week calls for a man to dig wells "In the Name of Christ." This is but a single illustration of how varied the needs for personnel are. Probably behind much of our hesitancy to respond is the knowledge that we may have to sacrifice some sense of security. If that is the major issue at stake then we are not genuinely Christian.—JJE

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY recently stated that religiously speaking he saw three major categories of people. They are the Communists, the convinced Christians, and a third group which he labeled the "amiable non-entities." There is a sense in which Christians and Communists are alike. Both assert that their cause is inherently implied in the very nature of things and that history will bring them the victory. Both are convinced they can't lose. The difference however is striking. One works with God as revealed through our Lord Jesus Christ. The other operates without this God but by implication sets up a worship all of its own—the worship of the state. The one redeems man and restores the image of God; the other de-humanizes men and deifies the state. What ought to alarm every convinced Christian is that every form of statism, which in essence is the same godless materialism as Communism, is equally dangerous even if so-called Christians uphold it. This is where the "amiable non-entities" which represents thousands who change their minds according to prevailing public opinion, may be the most dangerous element! It will necessitate a conversion experience for many who think they are converted. —JJE

I ALWAYS FEEL my soul has missed a major part of its Sunday nourishment if I happen to miss the hymns and other musical elements that open the service. For me these are not the "vestibule" of the worship order through which I am given time to "make it" for the sermon. Rather, the hymns are the way in which I receive the power for every-day living that comes from the consciousness that I am part of a living Fellowship that includes the Church Triumphant (those who are with Christ) and the Church Militant (those who are still in the body). In the physical gathering there is the sense of fellowship with the latter. From the knowledge of the fact that generation after generation has been inspired by the hymns I sing, comes the fellowship with the former. To help me realize how this fellowship came about my pastor often includes a sentence or two telling when or under what conditions a great hymn was written. Now I am to have additional help. "The Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary" is a book of some 465 pages that gives details about the hymn writers and composers and how they came to write and compose the various hymns. This volume by Lester Hostetler is another major contribution to Mennonite literature. Pastors, Church School teachers, Summer Bible School teachers, program committees, as well as parents, should be aware of the resources in this volume that will help deepen our appreciation of the psalms hymns and songs of all ages.—JJE

"WHAT CAME UPON THOSE EARLY CHRISTIANS was a recreating of personality that could not be analyzed. Jesus the man of history had set new life glowing in them. But that Jesus always drew men's thoughts beyond Himself to the Father. And the Father since the life and death of Jesus had become accessible through His Spirit as He had never been before. It was a Trinity of experience that they were in process of formulating. The God who had long disclosed Himself as the Creator and the Righteous Author of the moral law had now drawn closer to men in the Son, the Redeemer, and He continued in that deeper intimacy opened up by the Son through His abiding Spirit, the upbuilder and sanctifier of the new life."—John Dow, Zion Mennonite Bulletin, Souderton, Pennsylvania

"THERE ARE SOME WHO TALK about war as though it were an unpleasant but necessary remedy for existing ills. The fact is that another World War would plunge all of humanity into a pit too awful to contemplate and make it almost impossible to achieve the good ends for which, no doubt, the combatants would profess to be fighting. It was World War I that delivered the 200 million people of Russia to the dictatorship of the Communist Party and World War II is delivering perhaps 700 million more people to that control . . . No one who is sincerely anti-Communist can be complacent about war unless passion dominates his reason."—John Foster Dulles



Helen Kornelson and Puran Banwar Welcomed to India

First Impressions of India

To Dongreepali by Jeep

by Helen Kornelson

"Do you girls want to go along to Dongreepali?" Did we? There was no hesitation on our part. In the beautiful early morning hour of December 23, we girls dressed in Indian sarees, merrily tumbled into the jeep. Our group consisted of our driver, Mr. Duerksen, Miss A. Schmidt, Melva Lehman, Lois Duerksen, Marie Duerksen, and myself.

Our "Hari-Lal" (thus our jeep has been christened) took us determinedly over humps and bumps, over rough unbroken paths, through hollow water-filled holes, over rocks and giant tree roots, and through almost impenetrable dust clouds raised by the countless number of creaking ox-carts on the road day and night. If it were not for the pathetic situation the ox-cart drivers find themselves in in the approaching of an automobile, one would be inclined to laugh at them as they frantically attempt to move their immovable bullocks to the side of the road.

The Men Go First

It was a merry jostling along and a precarious bouncing up and down. Being quite new here, I found the trip exceedingly interesting. I was amazed at how many people are always on the road. Some leisurely sauntered along, others were hurrying, carrying burdens on their heads. The men precede the women, the latter usually carrying the heavier burden, oftentimes with a child on their hips and perhaps one or two youngsters running alongside. I saw quite a number traveling on bicycles. One gentleman had the fortune to be able to ride on something that resembled the skin and bones of a horse. At one place in the road we had to move to get past a broken-down cart.

At the Sound of a Motor...

We passed through several villages. At the sound of a motor, people streamed out of their huts to see the motor and to run after it; not only children but grown-ups as well. Frequently the youngsters try to cross the road quickly before the car passes them. The children are naturally all dressed in their birthday suits. Here and there we saw brightly colored sarees, orange, red, blue, green, etc., spread out on the ground to dry. The sides of the houses were "decorated" with dung-patties, put there to dry and later to be used as fuel. We passed several Hindu worship places. Right beside the road we saw a weaver busy at work, weaving sarees.

A Clean People . . .

Near every village is found a talab, a water-tank or reservoir to preserve rain water for the village use. Many interesting things go on in such a talab. On the edge of it the women are busy at work with their laundry, slapping their clothes on the flat slabs of stones. Others are energetically bathing themselves. The Indian people are clean people as far as bathing is concerned. A few yards hence water-buffaloes are relaxing in the coolness of the water. With a handful of straw they are given a good rubbing down, which these animals love. Not only is this same water used for washing and bathing purposes, but also for drinking and cooking.

We hurried on. In another village we passed through a bazaar. All the saleable goods, such as fruits, vegetables, sweets, breads, etc., were spread out on straw-mats alongside the road, with the ready dust of every passing vehicle and the many eager flies settling on these foodstuffs.

Only One Hour Late

A sign-post (quite an unusual thing in India, I am told), with the name "Dongreepali" gave evidence of our being on the right road and nearing our objective. We looked at our watches; it was eleven o'clock. We were supposed to be here at ten o'clock. Minor matter, as Lois says. In India time is not so important. As we came into the clearing, the beautifully decorated school building and a large group of school children came into view. Hardly had "Hari-Lal" come to a stop, then the happy youngsters joined in a lusty song of welcome. As each one of us climbed out of the jeep, we were presented with a beautiful garland of flowers. Even "Hari-Lal" was honored with one.

Everything Hand Made

The front yard of the school was gaily decorated with colorful paper streamers and flags, in colors of pink, red, purple, green, blue, and yellow. These people love bright colors. What we appreciated about this decoration was the fact that nothing had been bought; all things were hand-made. As we entered the small school building, consisting of two tiny rooms, we were pleasantly surprised to find it beautifully arranged and having a right atmosphere of a Christian school. Along the walls were all kinds of maps. The Lord's Prayer in neat Hindi letters hung on one side. Even a big Sunday School picture of Paul in Prison, with the German words below the picture: Paulus im Gefaengnis. A small mirror likewise decorated one wall.

Three Christian workers, a young couple and an unmarried young man, are teaching here. The village is an entirely heathen community. These Indian co-workers wished our presence at their Christmas program, and thus our being here this day. Since we had not come earlier, they decided to have the program in the afternoon.

White Skins Are Unusual

We were given cots to sit on, while the teachers hurried to prepare some Indian bread for us. We had food along, but they insisted upon serving us "roti." As we sat there in the comfortable coolness of the school house. I became conscious of an increasing darkness in the room. I looked up at the window and saw nothing but a muddle of brown faces and black tousled heads. No wonder the room was dark. I counted nine such heads pressing to see inside.

Our efforts to make friends with the village youngsters were fruitless. They were too frightened, being unaccustomed to seeing white-skinned people. Those who could run scampered off as we tried to come near them, and the babies gave vent to fearful howls. So we were forced to give it up as a bad job.

Indians Are Born Actors

The Christmas program took place in the afternoon. There were no girls in this group of school children, so the boys made up the entire program, even taking the place of Mary in the Birth Story. The Indian people seemingly are born actors, and just love to dramatize. Although one of these lads was a Christian these boys sang with a joy and heartiness those beloved Christmas songs—"Silent Night, Holy Night," "Hark the Herald Angels Sing," "While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks By Night," etc. It was a joy to hear them.

An Unusual Uninhibited Curiosity

We were not the only audience to hear the program. Since the program took place outside, in no time a large audience of curious on-lookers, mostly men, had assembled. The Indian people possess an unusual uninhabited curiosity, which I, for one, find exceedingly interesting.

As the Word of God went forth in song, dramatization and in memorized Scripture recitation, we prayed that it might touch the hearts of these rugged, wild-looking men. In the midst of the program another man joined the on-looker group, murmured something, and in no time almost the entire group had dissolved. What had happened? A tomato-seller had come to the village. Having had their curiosity satisfied here, they now went in search of more excitement.

A Group of Our Missionaries in India

Our Hearts Rejoiced

The program was very good. Thanking these faithful Indian co-workers of ours, and bidding them farewell, we left them. On our homeward way we stopped at another village to visit with one of our Bible-women. We were very cordially welcomed and invited to stay for tea. Although very simple and plain, her house was neat and clean. With much enthusiasm she showed us her flannel-graph pictures she used in her Bible work. It was a joy to visit with her and her family. Naturally we were again immediately surrounded by a pressing crowd of curious people. This time I counted sixty-five right around us, with more looking over the wall.

As we wound our way homeward, we were occupied with various thoughts of the occurrences of the day. For Marie and me it was our first visit to an Indian village. We had been deeply impressed with the countless new things we had seen, many not as uplifting as others, but nevertheless all impressive and meaningful. Our hearts rejoiced at what the Lord can do with those who are faithful to him. It is by no means easy to live in an entirely heathen community and after months of hard labor still see no visible results, but these teachers we visited were not discouraged. They faithfully labour on. Lord, help us likewise to be faithful!

Northern District Conference

56th SESSION, JUNE 11-15

The fifty-sixth session of the Northern District Conference will be held at the Bethesda Mennonite Church in Henderson, Nebraska, June 11-15 under the central theme of "Stewardship."

Pastors Convention Saturday

Opening the Conference will be the pastors convention on Saturday evening at 7:30 p.m. Chairman for this meeting is Rev. Jacob L. Hoffman, with Rev. T. A. van der Smissen giving the evening message on "The Minister As a Steward."

Sunday: Missionaries Speak

The Conference sermon by the President, Rev. J. J. Regier, at the Sunday afternoon meeting at 2 p.m. will be preceded by a word of welcome by the host pastor, Rev. Arnold Nickel. Speakers at the Sunday evening service are Rev. and Mrs. Harold Ratzlaff and Rev. Paul Roth, the latter speaking on "Stewardship in Youth Life."

Business Meetings Monday and Tuesday

A prayer service at 8:30 a.m. will precede the business meeting in charge of Rev. J. J. Regier on Monday morning. The message on "Stewardship of the Revelation," and the closing prayer will be rendered by Rev. A. E. Kreider. Also delivering the Monday afternoon

Eastern District Conference Convenes

by Ward W. Shelly

The Eastern District Conference convened for its 151st session April 28 to May 1 in the West Swamp Church. The session opened with a devotional period in charge of Rev. J. J. Plenert who read Romans 12, followed by a preliminary to the business session, a lecture on the Book of Galatians, by Rev. Willard Claassen of Freeman, South Dakota who gave further messages in the conference.

Contributions and Budget

Total contributions reported during the business session for the past year for relief causes was $10,753.68. At this session the life rates for admission into the Frederick Home for the Aged were increased to minimum of $3,000 and a maximum of $6,500, depending upon the age of the guest when entering the home. The district budget for the coming year was set as follows: District Home Missions $4,380, Shelly Fund $300, Retreat Grounds $500, Historical Committee $700, Peace Committee $100, and Conference Expenses $800, making a total of $6,780.

Officers Elected

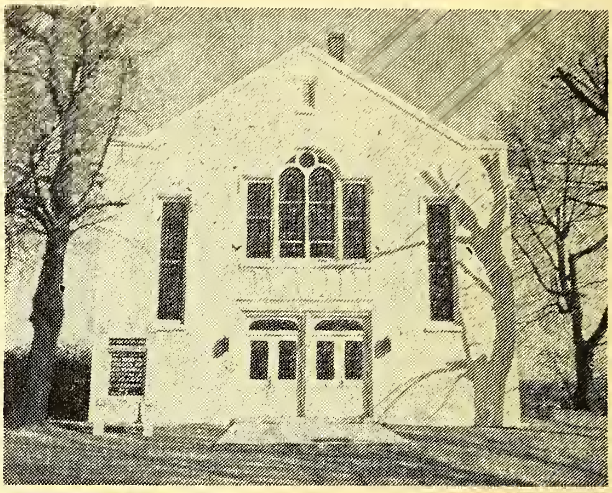
With the resignation of Ward Shelly as secretary, Rev. Walter McDowell was elected to succeed him. Other officers are president, J. Herbert Fretz; vice president, Walter Dick; treasurer, Alvin H. Alderfer.

Statistics

The total membership of the twenty-eight congregations of our district is 4,333, an increase of 160 over last year. With the exception of the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchener, Ontario, all of these are located in Pennsylvania. The largest congregation is the Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, with 618 members. The second largest is the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church with 431 members. Seven churches have a membership of less than fifty. Several churches in the district are without pastors. Bowmansville, Richfield, and First Philadelphia are among these.

The college supported by churches within the district is Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio.

The West Swamp Congregation very ably entertained the conference with food and lodging and also special music during the sessions. It was in this meeting house that the General Conference had its beginning 102 years ago.



The West Swamp Mennonite Church

Visitors at the Conference included Miss Elsie Pfister, Rev. Willard Classen, Dr. L. L. Ramseyer, Rev. Harry Yoder, Rev. Paul Shelly, Mr. James Downing, Dr. S. F. Pannabecker, and Mrs. A. Lorenz.

The annual meeting of the Eastern District in 1950 will be held in the Hereford Mennonite Church, Bally, Pennsylvania.

message, Reverend Kreider will talk on "Stewardship of Our Conference Work." General Conference DVBS work will be presented by Rev. Ronald von Riesen, with a continuation of the business session following. The Monday evening message on "Stewardship in Our Sunday School," will be given by Rev. Paul Roth. John Ewert will speak on the subject "What Do We Owe to Our Prospective Sunday School Teachers."

'Women in the Church" on Tuesday

A Memorial Service in charge of Rev. John A. Schrag will be held previous to the Tuesday morning message on "Family Stewardship" by Rev. A. E. Kreider. A prayer service and a continuation of the business meeting will also be held. "Stewardship in the Life of Women" will be the topic presented by Mrs. L. S. Amstutz Tuesday afternoon. Two other talks will be given by Mrs. Marvin Dirks and Mrs. John Suderman. A pageant entitled, "Mercy at the Cross," will be presented by the Henderson Church. The evening service will feature the message by Rev. Paul Roth on "Stewardship in the Christian Endeavor." A special attraction will be the testimonies to be given by the young people on "What the C. E. Means to Me."

Young People's Day Wednesday

Theme of the Wednesday morning Young People's Day service will be, "The Christian Witness of Youth," with Rev. Esko Loewen delivering the message. The communion service is in charge of Rev. John C. Kaufman. Following the noon meal, sponsored by the host C. E. group, a panel discussion on "Christian Witness in One's Vocation," will be held by the young people on the following vacations: business session is in charge of Carl Epp. The last session of the Conference is Wednesday evening with Rev. Esko Loewen delivering the sermon.

When nothing seems to help, I go and look at a stonecutter hammering away at his rock, perhaps a hundred times without as much as a crack showing in it. Yet, at the hundred and first blow it will split in two, and I know it was not that blow that did it, but all that had gone before.—Jacob A. Riis

MCC Plans 1950 Relief

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA: The general scope of relief work for the next year is being planned now, particularly with respect to the kind and amounts of material gifts that can be used to good advantage. The MCC workers report that among certain classes of people (aged, convalescents, war widows with families, T.B. patients, returned prisoners of war, and needy students) there will continue to be need for relief assistance "In the Name of Christ." We therefore encourage gifts of concentrated nature similar to those of last year, with special emphasis this year on dried milk, meats and fats, leather, yard goods, and yarn. Cash contributions are also essential for shipping and other expenses involved in the total program.

A Service in the Philippines

Two of the MCC workers in the Philippines are serving as director and matron of the Abiertas House of Friendship, an institution sponsored by the Women's Christian Temperance Union and dedicated to the cause of caring for unwed mothers and their fatherless children. Since June 1948 twenty girls have been admitted to the institution. Requirements for applicants include a certificate of health and statement of willingness to abide by the rules of the House. The girls share household duties and are taught various domestic skills. At the end of their stay at the Home, effort is made to arrange for suitable employment for them. At the Home, effort is made to help these girls spiritually as well as in a material way. There is a daily devotional period, weekly Bible class, and regular Sunday services. So far one girl has made a definite decision for Christ, and it is felt that others have also been touched.

Appreciation for Work in Belgium

The following is a translation of a letter of appreciation which was written by the town officials of Bullange for the work done by the Mennonites through the Builders Unit at Bullange.

"Before you leave our community we feel it our duty to thank you very warmly for the willing services you have always rendered to the people of our community. Through your sacrifice you gave a roof to many of our unfortunate people. During the long winter evenings our youth could enjoy in your modest home many joyful and pleasant hours. You did not even forget our children who have received in these hard times much joy through all kinds of gifts. With all that, dear friends, you have healed many wounds and you granted to these poor people a joyful look in the future."

Need for Man to Dig wells

A Christian agency composed of several mission boards working in a joint effort toward the settlement of distressed person in Pakistan reports urgent need for a man skilled in operating power well-digging equipment. The work would consist of operating the equipment (the type mounted on a truck and operated by internal combustion engine) and keeping it in repair. A qualified person would be accepted for a term of several years with adequate salary or support. This project is not connected with the MCC relief program, but anyone interested may contact the agency by writing to the MCC, Akron, Pennsylvania.

Workers Assist at Reedley Farm

William Miller of Iowa City, Iowa, and Joseph Beachy of Hutchinson, Kansas, are working for about three months on the farm near Reedley, California, which is later to be used as a site for the Mennonite Mental Hospital. Also serving there are Lawrence Harder, for a one-year term, and Willard Hooge Carl Derksen, Harold Pankratz and Vernon Friesen, each for a temporary period until the hospital unit in Los Angeles, to which they are assigned, is opened.

Additional Units to Be Opened

Plans have been made for opening three additional summer Voluntary Service Units. Fifteen to twenty young people will serve at the State Hospital at Greystone Park, New Jersey. Ten girls are to be assigned to the Vineland State School, New Jersey, for recreational therapy among the mentally deficient patients. Six to eight persons will serve at the Industrial Home School Annex, Washington, D. C. to carry on Bible School and recreation among the homeless and underprivileged children cared for there.

In addition to this, the MCC office has made contacts for the establishment of two service units which are to be under the direction of individual conference groups.

MEN NONITE MEN FOR CHRIST

ABERDEEN, IDAHO

The wives of the Brotherhood were guests at their March meeting. The guest speaker was Miss Esther Lehrman who recently returned from Puerto Rico, where she served 18 months in voluntary service. At present the Brotherhood is busy collecting and dismanteling horse-drawn machinery which is to be shipped to South America.

NEWPORT, WASHINGTON

The men of the church have built a garage at the parsonage and now they are in the process of drilling a well.

PORTLAND, OREGON

A Men's Fellowship dinner was held at the Y.M.C.A. on Friday night, April 1. A real time of fun and fellowship was enjoyed.

232. O have you not heard of that beautiful stream

R. Torrey, Jr.

Contrary to general opinion, this hymn, a great favorite in many churches, was written originally in the English language. It was written by R. Torrey, Jr., of whom no information has been traced. The hymn with the present tune was published in Spiritual Harp, 1868, Boston, copy of which is in the writer's library, a book composed of songs for congregational use as well as solos, quartets, and anthems, dedicated by the authors to "the Spiritualists and Reformers of the world, in love of truth and progress." The names of author and composer are not given.

Two years later, in 1870, the hymn appeared in England in the Sunday School Hymnary, published by the National Sunday School Union in London.

The German version is a free translation made by Ernst Heinrich Gebhardt, 1832-99, a Methodist minister and evangelist who is known in Germany, the place of his birth, as the father of German revivalistic and holiness songs. It is superior, in poetic beauty and evangelistic appeal, to the English original.

Gebhardt was born in Ludwigsburg, in Wurttemberg, July 12, 1832. He prepared to be an apothecary but later decided to go to Chile, South America, to live with relatives. After spending five years in Chile, during which he was employed on a farm, he returned to Germany to visit his mother. The experience of a shipwreck on this return voyage resulted in his spiritual awakening; and when he arrived at Ludwigsburg, he united with the Methodist church, to the great joy of his mother. It was during the Sylvester service on New Year's night of 1859 that he experienced the conversion which changed his future course. There came to him the assurance of the forgiveness of sins and the conviction at the same time that he should dedicate his life to Christian service. With this in view, he attached himself to the school for ministers in the Methodist Church at Bremen, where his fluency of speech and musical gifts were quickly recognized and he began to be used in evangelistic work. He served as Reiseprediger in Ludwigsburg

CONCERNING THE AUTHOR

Lester Hostetler is minister of the Bethel College Mennonite Church at North Newton, Kansas. Previously he held pastorates at Sugarcreek, Ohio and Upland, California. Graduate of Union Theological Seminary. He served for a time as editor of the Christian Exponent. For many years he contributed to the Mennonite Adult Sunday School Quarterly. Co-author of The Mennonite Hymnary. He studied music and hymnology in college and seminary; and, in addition to the work of the pastorate, taught music classes in public schools and churches, and for a number of years directed community oratorio societies. He is a member of the Hymn Society of America.

THE HYMNARY is probably the most-used, most-referred-to book that enters into the life of the Christian. We need commentaries to help us in an understanding of the Bible, and we need handbooks for the best understanding of the great hymns of the church.

WHOEVER SINGS needs the HANDBOOK. To "sing with understanding" (Psalms 47) definitely assists in personal and public worship.

THE ENTIRE FAMILY will enjoy reading the stories back of our great hymns. Every great hymn has a story behind it and to know that story—how the hymn came to be written, what makes it a great hymn, why has it lived through the ages, etc.—puts a new meaning into family worship.

MATCHES THE HYMNARY. Special efforts were made to match the two books—the HYMNARY and the HANDBOOK. They can be bought separately or together in pairs.

INDEXES. The indexes in the HANDBOOK are similar to the indexes in the HYMNARY itself, but fully revised in the HANDBOOK.

AUTHENTIC. A great deal of work has gone into research to make the work as authentic and reliable as possible and to bring to you the best information available on each song.

THIS COMBINATION of HYMNARY and the HANDBOOK TO THE HYMNARY makes an ideal addition to anyone's library, a splendid gift for any home.

Through Your Local Society

In order to get the quickest possible distribution of this book the young people in some local churches are undertaking house-to-house canvasses in each community to take orders and make deliveries. If your local society of young people is organized you may wish to place your order with them. Help your local society. For every copy of the HANDBOOK sold by the young people of your church, the local Society gets 15 per cent, the Young People's Union of the General Conference gets 10 per cent and the balance goes to the General Board of Publication to cover printing and other costs. Help them, and you help all.

Seventh Annual Cultural Conference

Tabor College will be host to the Seventh Annual Conference on Mennonite Educational and Cultural Problems, scheduled to open on Thursday forenoon, June 16, and continue through Friday evening.

The conference is sponsored by the Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges.

Those planning to attend are asked to write the College Office, Tabor College, Hillsboro by June 8, stating the time and place of arrival and for what period they wish board and room. Meals will be provided in the college cafeteria.

Problems of General Administration

Theme for the first meeting of the educational section on Thursday at 9 a.m will be "Problems of General Administration," with Ed. G. Kaufman, Bethel College as chairman. Speakers will be Arnold Funk, Hillsboro, Kansas; Ernest E. Miller, Goshen College; and Harry Martens, Bethel College.

Problems of Internal Administration

Chairman of the Thursday afternoon meeting at 1:30 p.m. is Lloyd L. Ramseyer, Bluffton, College. The theme is "Problems of Internal Administration," with the following speakers: C. K. Lehman, Eastern Mennonite College; Laurence Horst, Hesston College; Viola Good, Goshen College; and J. S. Schulz, Bluffton College.

Mennonite Parochial Schools

L. J. Franz, Tabor College, is chairman of the first meeting of the cultural problems session on Thursday evening at 7:30 p.m. Speakers under the subject "Mennonite Parochial Schools" are Silas Hertzler, Goshen College, and Marvin Harder, University of Wichita, Kansas.

Problems of Mennonites

Friday morning at 9 a.m. Walter Dyck, Newton, Kansas, will serve as chairman with J. Winfield Fretz, Bethel College, speaking on "The Growth and Use of Tobacco Among Mennonites," and Elvin Souder, Souderton, Pennsylvania, talking on "Problems of a Conscientious Objector in the Legal Practice."

The Mennonite Christian Community

The afternoon session Friday at 1:30 p.m. will be in charge of Harold H. Gross, Freeman Junior College. Speakers are John Umble, Goshen College, on "Factors Explaining the Disintegration of Mennonite Communities," Howard Kaufman, Goshen College, on "A Set of Standards for a Christian Community."

The closing session of the conference on Friday evening at 7:30 p.m. is in charge of Milo Kaufman, Hesston College. John H. Lohrentz, Tabor College, will speak on "Religious and Cultural Background of the Mennonite Brethren," and G. W. Peters, Pacific Bible College, Fresno, California, will talk on "Missionary Interests Among the Mennonite Brethren."

Doctrine aud Conduct Committee Reports

by Willard K. Claassen

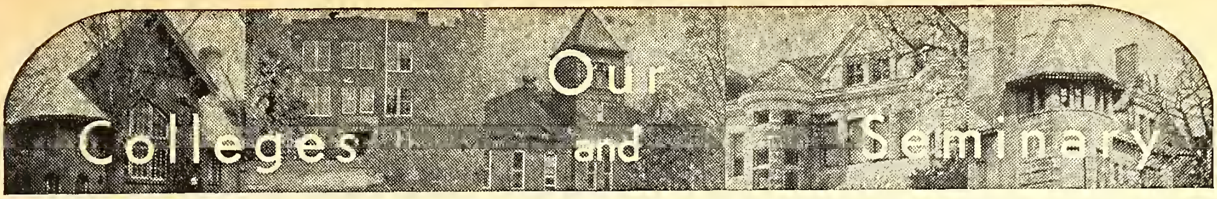
1. Concerning the statistics gathered on the subject of the status of divorce in the General Conference by the late Dr. A. Warkentin: This report was tabulated for the Committee by Jake Goering of Mennonite Biblical Seminary. This interesting report will be mimeographed and sent to the ministers and missionaries of the Conference because we believe it contains significant statistics which every minister should have in hand. The gathering of these statistics was, however, only the initial step in this study as planned by Dr. Warkentin. Now the Committee must find someone else to take up the work where Dr. Warkentin left off. A pamphlet will be prepared in the near future presenting doctrinal and practical aspects of the divorce problem.

2. The project of submitting a series of articles on the Apostle's Creed for The Mennonite, as suggested by the Acting Editor, was changed considerably in view of the pressing need for a handbook to the Catechism. Rather than to follow the Apostle"s Creed, the outline of the catechism will be followed. Don Smucker was appointed to write these articles since he is already working in this field. Articles submitted to The Mennonite on a monthly basis would be gathered into a handbook later on. At the same time, on a long range basis, the major book on Bible doctrines is still a distant objective.

3. A suggestion sheet on the general subject of stewardship will be mailed to the ministers of the Conference. This will contain helpful suggestions and material on that subject.

4. The Committee has undertaken to study the status of discipline in our conference, using a typical Mennonite community as a basis for study. Paul Shelly was appointed to head this study. Some of the questions to be raised in this study are (1) where we came from, (2) where we are, and (3) where we are going.

5. The budget was set at $500. For the "breakdown" we suggest the following: $220 for travel, $50 for postage, $100 for secretarial expense, $50 for duplicating, and $50 miscellaneous.



BLUFFTON COLLEGE CHOIR TOURS

Rev. Harry Yoder attended a meeting of the East Coast Club, an association of Alumni, former students, and friends of the College, held near Lansdale, Pennsylvania, May 21. Miss Herta van Delden, a German exchange student, also attended and spoke. She also talked at the Sunday morning service at the Fairfield Mennonite Church, Pennsylvania.

President Ramseyer gave the commencement address at the Henrietta Township High School near Oberlin, Ohio, Wednesday evening, May 25. He spoke on the subject, "Freedom—Learned and Earned.'"

College students taking work in vocal and instrumental music gave a recital in Ramseyer Chapel Friday evening, May 20.

The Vesper Choir sang at Wauseon, Ohio, Sunday evening, May 22. The choir is preparing for its western trip, which will begin May 31. The final home concert was given in the First Mennonite Church Sunday evening, May 29.

BETHEL COLLEGE

THIRTY-SIX BETHEL STUDENTS IN SUMMER VOLUNTARY SERVICE

Thirty-six Bethel College students will be a part of the Voluntary Service projects sponsored by the Mennonite Central Committee and the General Conference committee this coming summer.

Following are the Volunteers from Bethel and their assignments: Elizabeth Regier, Doris Siemens, Lola Voth,—Mental Hospital Allentown, Pennsylvania; Orlando Friesen, leader, Harold Wedel, Marlys Kaufman, Velma Gaeddert—Mental Hospital, Farnhurst, Delaware; Emil Goering—Topeka State Hospital, Topeka, Kansas; Hulda Gaede, leader, Evelyn Voran, Mary Lou Voran—Mentally Deficient Hospital, Vineland, New Jersey; Paul Jantzen, leader, Epileptic Village, Skillman, New Jersey; James Hean, leader, Carl Andres, Omar Voran, John Kliewer, Joanne Buhler, Helga Kemnitzer, Elinor Friesen, Students-in-Industry, Chicago, Illinois; Irene Zerger, Barbara Miller, Home Mission Chicago; Elsie Epp, Bruno Penner, Mennonite church, Los Angeles; Careen Duerksen—crippled children's camp, Los Angeles; Leo Miller, leader, Mary Moyer, Katherine Wiens, Katharine Enns, East Harlem, New York City; Ernest Goertzen—migrant work—Utica, New York; Elaine Waltner, leader, Sarah Penner, Youth Farm, Rosthern, Sasnatechewan; Marjorie Fast, Edna Peters, Arlene Neufeld, Paul Esau, Miss Ruth Baughman, Europe.

The senior class of Bethel College presented two programs as a part of their graduating exercises in chapel on Tuesday, May 24. After the program the traditional planting of the ivy took place.

On Friday evening, May 27, the senior program was presented. Vernon Neufeld, senior class president, presented the cash gift of the class to the college library now under construction, and bestowed his robe to the president of the junior class. Letters of seniors were then buried in the vault in front of the administration building. This vault will be opened in 1959 when the class meets for its tenth anniversary.

SEMINARY MEETS FINANCIAL CRISIS WITH PRAYER

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name O most High." Psalm 92:1.

This text expresses the feeling of the Seminary for God's goodness to us throughout the school year but particularly during the past week when a financial crisis in the institution was wonderfully met. One of our properties, known as the Bowersox apartment, had $11,000 due to complete the payments after its purchase last year. A few days before the final date when this money was due, only a few thousand dollars were on hand. During the last few days, indeed the last few hours before the deadline, several friends of the school sent substantial gifts. The remarkable thing was that these gifts seemed quite out of the question in terms of the particular financial situation of these people, but at the last minute the way was opened for these generous gifts. Answers to prayer of this kind do much to deepen the faith and heighten the thanksgiving of a Christian institution.

President S. F. Pannabecker delivered the closing chapel address on Friday to the combined seminaries. His message also centered around thanksgiving. First we have not had any catastrophes of sickness, death, or moral tragedy. Second, that in the midst of our unity with Bethany Biblical Seminary we are under no pressure for uniformity. In this connection he pointed out how Mennonites are much more diverse in pattern than members of the Church of the Brethren, because we have come from a dozen countries at two dozen different times during the past two hundred years, whereas the Brethren came from one country in one migration two hundred years ago. Then he went on to tell of the remarkable story of our financial deliverance on the Bowersox property.

One of the unique experiences which we share with the Brethren community at this time is the annual commencement Love Feast. This very worshipful experience consists of three parts: The foot washing ordinance, the love feast, which is a simple meal in the spirit of prayer; and then the celebration of the Lord's Supper with the bread and wine. This year it is to be conducted by Professor Floyd E. Mallott.

What Shall I Do With My Life?

1. Have You Considered the Ministry?

by Maynard Shelly

[In these times, there are many different tasks calling for the interest of youth. Industry, business, and professions each attract and challenge youth's spirit to venture into a life work. There always will be needed young people who see their role in one or another aspect of the work of the world. The church ever calls for devoted workers, too. Workers who have caught a vision of God and man's need for God and who are willing to give themselves to the manifold tasks of the church are always workers the Christian church needs.

Have you ever considered the work of the church in the ministry, teaching, healing, relief, missions or many another part of its work? Here is presented the experience of one youth as he thought of the ministry as his calling. In the second article is demonstrated the experiences of a minister in war-torn Europe. Ed.]

Walt had just been called into the principal's office. The small room at the end of the high school corridor held no particular dread for him. Mr. Long was always understanding and never hard on a fellow even on matters of discipline.

"Have a chair, Walt," said Mr. Long, as he shuffled the papers on his desk. "I have been looking through the Vocational Interest Blanks that you and the other members of the Junior Class filled out last month. I notice that you have three different things written down for vocations that you might like to take up after high school."

Walt rubbed his hand over the uneven surface of the arm of the wicker chair in which he was sitting and then said, "Well, I didn't know just what to put down, Mr. Long. You see, I haven't quite made up my mind as yet, but I have been thinking about some kind of work that really needs to be done."

"That's fine," said Mr. Long, nodding his head. "My only thought in calling you in here was to check on the courses you have been taking here in high school and the curses you should take next year. Depending on what you intend to do after high school, some courses might be more helpful than others. Just which of these vocations that you put down here are you most interested in?"

"It's a little hard to say right now," Walt began slowly. "There seem to be so many things that I would like to do that I don't know what to choose. I don't want a job just to earn some money, but I want one in which I can help other people to live better. Naturally, I thought about the work that the doctor does for people who are sick. They have a lot of work to do and I know it's hard, but I'm not looking for an easy job."

While Walt was talking he could hear some of his friends laughing and talking with the coach. It reminded him of something. "Some of us fellows were talking about the swell job you and some of the other teachers have been doing here in school. You sure have made learning a lot more interesting than we ever thought it could be. It made me think that being a teacher is one way you can really help young people."

Mr. Long smiled. "Thanks," he said. Then he waited for Walt to go on.

"The other Sunday noon my mother said that our minister has made this community a better place to live in since he's been here. I had never thought much about the work of the minister being important, but I can see that a minister does a lot more than most people realize. I have been thinking about the ministry, although I don't know too much about the things that a minister does or what it takes to be a minister."

Just then the school bell rang. Mr. Long stood up and said, "Well, it isn't necessary that you decide right away what you want to do, but I think it is good for you to think about these things. Since you are becoming interested in the ministry, why don't you talk to your minister about it."

The following Sunday evening after the service Walt waited until Reverend Hill was through talking with the people who had stayed to chat with him. He began to tell Reverend Hill about the conversation with the high school principal.

Then Walt asked, "I was wondering how you felt about the work you are doing."

Reverend Hill sat on the arm of one of the pews and said earnestly, "Not much publicity is ever given to the work of the minister, but I feel now that there are few vocations that I could have chosen which would have given me the opportunity to help so many people and the satisfaction that this is the most important thing I could do. I believe that the Christian minister has something to give to people that no other profession or worker can give."

"Just what does a minister have to give people?" Walt bit his lip a little after he asked this for he wasn't sure whether he should have asked that question or not, since he knew he should know the answer. But Reverend Hill didn't seem to mind.

He said, "I like to think of it this way. Most of the world is interested in making a living. But the Christian minister shows people how to live."

Seeing a question mark forming on Walt's face, he continued. "People need more than good health, a good education, and enough money to buy the things they want. They need to put God into their lives and live in harmony with God. This is the new life that people find when they accept Christ as their Savior."

Walt was waiting with another question. "But about all a minister has to do is to preach about it, isn't it?"

Reverend Hill smiled and said, "I guess that is the way it seems to a lot of people. And preaching is an important part of the minister's work, but it isn't all of his job by far. There are a lot of other things that need to be done, and preaching doesn't cover them all. Not all people can be reached with a public appeal. Most of the work of a minister has to be done with individuals, not only in presenting the way of Jesus to them but in helping them to discover the will of God for their lives. Much of my time is spent in helping people with their problems and helping them when they are in need. Besides this it is necessary to see that the organizations of the church run smoothly and do their work well so that everyone has a part. The work of the minister is never monotonous just because there is so much to do and so many different things to do."

"Yes, I'm beginning to see that the minister has an important job to do, but—." Walt hesitated, as he looked down at the floor and slowly kicked at the aisle carpet with his foot. "I wonder whether I have the stuff that it takes to be a minister."

The minister replied thoughtfully, "According to some, the main thing that a minister needs is to be a good speaker. But that was the thing that almost kept me out of the ministry. I was always scared stiff when I had to speak in public, and I found it hard to say what I meant to say. But speaking is just like anything else. To most people it doesn't come naturally, but if a person is willing to work hard he will be able to do much. And if he has something to tell that he feels is important it helps a lot."

Walt shook his head in agreement. "I guess that's true," he muttered.

Reverend Hill went on. "The most important thing in any Christian worker is a willingness to be used by God. A man that has had an experience with God that he wants to share with others and is willing to learn and spend time in being trained can be used by God in his service."

There was a long pause. Walt was thinking over the things that Reverend Hill had said. Then he ventured another question.

"A minister needs to go to school about as much as other professional men, doesn't he?"

"We have found that for a man to do his best in the ministry he needs all the training he can get and needs the best training that he can find," Reverend Hill said. "It is best if he can finish college and then study in seminary for three years after that."

"That makes seven years after high school," Walt remarked.

"Yes, it does. And I have found that I need every bit of the training I got. It seemed like a long time to spend in school and I often wished during that time that I could begin my service sooner. But now I know that it was time well invested because I wouldn't want to get along without it now."

"Well, it's getting late and I had better be getting home," said Walt. "Thanks for talking to me. You've given me something to think about.

As they were leaving the church, Reverend Hill turned to Walt and said, "When you decide to enter the ministry and have been serving for a few years you will agree with me that it is the most worth-while job you could have chosen. The world has discovered many new things in the last few years. The thing that men need most is not these wonders of science, but they need to discover God most of all. And if we can help men to find God we have done the most important thing anyone could do."

With Mennonite Friends in Berlin

An Example of a Minister's Work

by Harold Buller, Berlin, Germany

It was spring—and Holy Week. The Good Friday service was to start at 3 p.m. By 2:15 Mennonites who live in and around isolated Berlin began arriving at the quaint little colored stone church on Kirchweg street in the British sector of this battered city. Newly awakened nature had decked the trees and shrubs around the Alte Dorf Kirche, and even the cemetery itself that snuggles right up to the door of the church, with the vibrant, living spirit of Easter. The still uncut carpet of green grass competed with the half opened leaves for freshness of hue. A profusion of pansies scattered patches of rainbow color along the ridge of each closely set, neatly mounded grave. Above them rose white, stone crosses that contrasted as sharply with the ruddy red and brown of the heavy little church as the white clouds overhead contrasted with the deep blue spring sky.

The earlier worshippers gathered in front of the church and enjoyed the warmth of the sun as only those who have spent a winter in unheated homes can enjoy it. Each one that arrived came with a special Easter greeting that seemed to have become a very part of his character.

When the lay leader, Bro. Erich Schultz, arrived, the congregation, made up of refugees and resident German Mennonites, followed him into the church sanctuary. The building itself does not belong to the Mennonites whose own church is now a pile of rubble, but is rented from the state Protestant church. It's heavy walls, two feet thick, are broken by four colored windows each eight inches wide, set along either side. It smells like a museum. The choir loft and organ are on the small balcony that is crowded into the back of the sanctuary overlooking the two rows of short, rugged, age-old benches that seat barely one hundred people. Up in front, and behind the raised pulpit that is placed along the right wall, is the traditional altar decorated with two tall candles on either side of a four-foot crucifix. Overhead the dark wooden ceiling provides a somber background for pictures of Jesus' last week painted on it.

It is difficult for Mennonites of Berlin to come to church. They live over a widely scattered area in and around Berlin. Transportation systems are not up to the much needed peace-time par, especially under blockade conditions. Money for fares is scarce. Clothes that are fit for public gatherings of any kind are often not sufficient to permit every member of the family to appear. Nevertheless, the sanctuary is usually well filled. But on this day it was well crowded with one hundred and sixty-seven persons present. After the balcony, aisle, and stage had been filled to capacity—even the quaint European deacons' box—the children were called up and seated on the floor facing the audience. Brother Schultz gave up his chair to an elderly woman and stood throughout the entire time of meeting. The service lasted two hours.

It began with the congregational singing of "Jesus lebt, mit Ihm auch ich" (Jesus lives and I with him). Since this was the only Easter week service that could be held—in fact, the only adult service of the month—. Brother Schultz read the entire Easter story selected from the various Gospels. The familiar song "O Haupt Voll Blut und Wunden" (O Sacred Head Now Wounded) made the American Mennonites present feel more strongly the brotherhood which Christians everywhere find through the Easter story. Brother Schultz, preaching as always in the absence of a regular minister for the flock, took for his text John 3:16 which embodies the Easter message of God's love for sinful men. The sermon was followed by the regular monthly report on births, deaths, marriages, address changes, and new church members which is necessitated by infrequent meetings.

But in the midst of joyful Easter gathering, there were tears. After the service one mother wept for fear that her son might suddenly disappear into Siberian slavery as had her neighbor's son. Another young mother did not know what to do with her two-and-one-half year-old child while she submitted to a major operation. There would be no money to pay for its adequate care. Her salary of fifty marks a month, equal to less than twenty American dollars, would never suffice. Her husband, an invalid of the war, has lost one leg. There were signs of weary old age, undernourishment and ill health following a cold winter in unheated homes.

When everybody had gone Brother and Sister Schultz, with their two daughters, weary after a hard day of work, were left alone in front of the quaint stone church whose ruddy reds and browns glowed ruddier than ever in the late afternoon sun. But one saw a deep satisfaction even in their weariness. They are building the Church of Christ in Berlin. All week long Brother Schultz works as an architect by day and then comes home to spend long and late hours on the affairs of the Mennonite congregation. There are problems. At present, under difficult blockade conditions, he is trying to make arrangements to gather the twenty-five baptismal candidates for a much needed two weeks' instruction period. Many of them have had almost no such instruction because of former Nazi and present post-war conditions. Also he must try to get a minister into Berlin at the right time so that baptism will be possible. At that time the congregation will be able to enjoy the fellowship of Holy Communion. Just last week a dying brother was denied this privilege—one of his last requests—because there is no ordained Mennonite minister in this area.

Sister Schultz works with her husband. Only a knowledge of God's grace can explain the seemingly inexhaustible source of the motherly smiles that so frequently flood her face. Yet these can never quite erase the haunting shadows of weariness that surround her eyes. Sister Schultz tries to share each joy and shoulder each sorrow of the congregation. And she has ample opportunity for this. Along with two assistants Brother Kruger and his sister, she directs the relief work among Berlin Mennonites. Much harder than a day's physical labor, she says, is her unhappy task of answering letter after letter telling truly needy people that she cannot help them.

For six months it has been impossible to bring any bulk relief supplies through the blockade for these isolated brethren of the faith whose need, and especially the need of those behind the Iron Curtain where two-thirds of them live, does not decrease. In a few weeks there will be nothing left unless God answers prayer. The assurance coming with each gift that American Christians have not forgotten them in their plight means as much as the food and clothing itself. People who are hungry and sick have souls too. Mennonite Christians everywhere should take it upon themselves to share the burden of Sister Schultz before God.

The Schultz's older son is studying agriculture in Western Germany. But their seventeen year old daughter, Brigate, helps with both the Mennonite youth meeting on a second Sunday and with the Mennonite children's meeting on a third Sunday of each month. The fourth Sunday is reserved for a service in the Russian Sector.

A picture of the family is never complete without a mention of pretty, vivacious, pigtailed Ingrid, who, still too young at seven or eight years to share the family sorrows, does very well at sharing—and magnifying—its joys. She walked all the way to church in order to be on hand just in case there might be a chance to ride back in a real car. So we invited the family into our litttle MCC auto, a Volkswagon, and took them to their home on Hirschsprung.

DUTCH COs GO TO WORK CAMPS

More than 700 men have applied for recognition as COs in Holland since the German occupation, and about 500 of these have been sent to work camps resembling our CPS. They do civilian work, mostly of an agricultural nature, and receive the same pay and leave privileges as do soldiers.

Of those denied CO status some are declared medically unfit but many are court-martialed. Some receive recognition as COs at this point, and others have been given prison sentences up to five and a half years.—Fellowship

Not Second but New Birth

by Helen E. Nickel

It was a railroad-station waiting room and a long, long wait. The fans were whirling overhead; but there seemed to be no relief from the intense heat of late April. A porter came in followed by two cultured, Middle-aged Hindu women. They quickly made a friendly contact with the three of us: Mrs. Moyer, Gladys Klassen and myself. Mrs. Moyer threw out some fine ideals of the Christian life as we chatted back and forth. Then she and Miss Klassen left to get some hot tea at the refreshment room while I stayed because of the luggage. The younger woman immediately turned to me and said, "I have not had such satisfying conversation with any women for years. You are interested and informed about everything. You also read your religious books and know what your teacher (guru) taught. Is it true that there is something about second birth in your Scriptures?"

More and More Questions

For a moment I was perplexed, thinking that she was a Hindu pandita who knew their sacred writings and wanted to agrue about transmigration. I prayed silently for guidance and then was led to answer, "There is nothing about second birth but there is a great deal about the "new" birth in the Bible. The story of Nicodemus was so clear and pointed, she listened with intense interest. Several times, talking aside to her older sister, she repeated what I had said in beautiful, idiomatic Hindi. She asked more and more questions and for an hour I told her of the mystery and the grace of God's salvation through Jesus Christ.

But I had to confess that I was a very inefficient missionary because I had come away from home without taking Hindi gospel portions or tracts, and here were two educated women begging to read and know for themselves the Christian Scriptures. One so seldom makes contacts with educated woman.

We Know Very Little

Most unusual, too, was the fact that they both were unmarried—"In your community not strange because you still have status and a place for service, but in our community a rare thing indeed. Our father had no sons so in order to tell the world, and his caste brothers in particular, that he regarded us just as highly as though we were sons, he refused to arrange for our marriages. We were educated and in a small way we have influence, but such a sphere of service as your religion provides, of that we know very little."

Sweeter than Amrit

Conversation led to their request that they come to Jagdeeshpur to see for themselves the hospital, schools, and the Christian community. "What you have told us of the new birth is sweeter than amrit." (Amrit is the heavenly nectar of Hindu mythology.) Pray that they may come to pay us a visit after the rainy season and get that deeper understanding of the Way. Jesus has pronounced His blessing on those who hunger and thirst after righteousness. In these two unusual women we sensed a longing to experience the new birth.

Beyond Our Own

LANCASTER, PENNSYLVANIA. — The Pennsylvania Dutch Folklore Center, Inc., Lancaster, Pennsylvania, sent out the first issue of The Pennsylvania Dutchman, a periodical in English with stories, poems, rhymes, and riddles in dialect, on May 5. This periodical is an eight-page tabloid weekly published for those who are interested in Southeastern Pennsylvania and includes their customs and beliefs, their history, music, cooking, crafts, sports, and tales.

NEW YORK. — Workers who depend for "healing upon prayer or spiritual means" have been made exempt from coverage of compulsory disability insurance in laws recently passed in New York and the State of Washington.

MEXCO.—The conversion of 300 persons has ruined the alcohol-making business of a prominent citizen living near Chapulhaucanito in the state of San Luis Potosi. The Indians do not drink alcohol because they have become Christians so the alcohol has to be shipped to Mexico City now.

A VOLUNTARY Service Program will soon be established for the youth of its conference by the Mennonite Brethren Churches. Three projects—a mental hospital unit at Topeka, Kansas; a tuberculosis sanitorium unit near Los Angeles, California; and a health and sanitation project in the Rio Grande Valley of south Texas;—are being investigated and plans are being laid to open these units soon. Working in co-operation with the Committee of Public Relations and General Welfare of the M. B. Conference, the MCC will open these units and then allow them to be directed by the M. B. Conference.—The Christian Witness BEICHTE SONTAG was the name which the Lutheran Church used to give to the Sunday preceding the Holy Communion. The word means Confession Sunday, that is, a day of confession of sins. That day we search our hearts to remove all things that might be a hindrance in our communion with our Living Redeemer. Our fellowship with the Saviour through the sacraments will be a joyous experience as the Holy Spirit comes to reveal our Blessed Lord to us. Let us pray that the Lord may be pleased to manifest Himself to us.

The Master has told us that our relationship with Him cannot come to full realization if we are not right with our fellowmen. Therefore we will do well to examine ourselves on our relationship to our fellowmen. First, have I a forgiving attitude toward my fellowmen? Jesus has taught us that our Heavenly Father forgives us as we forgive our fellowmen. How can we feel ourselves forgiven and accepted, if we harbor grudges or ill feelings toward anyone? If we do not have the assurance of forgiveness, is it perhaps because we feel hard towards some person? Second, Do we love our church members? The Holy Communion is a fellowship with Christ and also a fellowship with Christ's people. Do we love each other in Christ? Third, how is it with our hearts as we think of the sacred emblems, do we consider them very sacred? I Corinthians 11 places great importance on this point. It says, we may eat and drink judgment upon ourselves if we discern not the body.—If we find ourselves lacking in these and other matters let us humbly confess our sins to the Lord and ask Him for He forgives us, so that our communion with our Living Saviour and Friend at the Lord's Table Day may be a joyous experience for all of us.—WFU

CONSIDERABLE STRESS is being laid on recreation in many of our churches. There is a valid reason for this. In our time many secular and aggressively non-Christian agencies are providing all sorts of questionable entertainment and amusement. They appeal to the God-given fundamental desire in people for fellowship; but they feed this urge "food" that tears down. People are influenced by the various groups in which their basic desires are being met. In this way people have become more concerned about having good status with their fellowship and recreation group than with their church group. To augment the problem, parents often have been so busy that they have abdicated a basic function of home life—providing wholesome recreation. The church has a responsibility in this area. But let the church guard against a very real danger in this area. People by nature will respond readily to this emphasis. Because of this the temptation will come to stress this more and more. Finally the emphasis on fellowship and recreation may even completely overshadow the other major areas of concern in Christian education—worship, study, service, and personal experience. When this happens the church is no longer true to her Master's calling.—JJE

HOW LONG CAN A PERSON be saved without being a disciple? The requirement for salvation is "to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ." This three-fold title is very significant in setting forth the nature of saving faith. "Christ" is the Greek equivalent of the "Messiah" or the "sent one" of the Old Testament. This term expresses the fundamental biblical conviction that man is dependent on God for help,—that God, alone, can meet man's need. "Jesus" is the equivalent of the Old Testament "Joshua" or the deliverer" and "saviour." So while "Christ" expresses the origin of our salvation as coming from God, "Jesus" expresses the nature of Christ's work in redemption and deliverance—"He shall save his people from their sins" — relating it specifically to the Son of man who wrought it within history. There are some aspects, of the term Lord as applied here to Jesus, however, that have been overlooked. The term, of course, relates Jesus Christ directly to the "Lord" of the Old Testament. He is this Lord in human flesh. In him is vested complete authority over life. In the Old Covenant every area of life was under the authority of the Lord. This is also true of the New Covenant when the law is written in the heart. Can this mean anything else, then, but that when a person becomes a child of God through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ that he forsakes all known sin which the Lord Jesus Christ, his Saviour, shows him at the time; and, that as he continues in his relationship to Christ he turns from every sin as his now-Christian conscience enlightened by the Holy Spirit reveals it to him. If this process begins when one accepts the Lord Jesus Christ as personal Saviour when is there a time after this step that he is not a disciple?—JJE

THE DISPLACED-PEOPLES PROBLEM is turning out to be a real test of the depth of our convictions about Christian love. It is clearly evident that Jews and Roman Catholics have taken better care of those of their faith than Protestants. Probably a large number of Mennonite churches are in the midst of discussions as to whether they will be responsible for giving assurance of help to displaced peoples. This is a test of our love; is our love valid only at great distances through specially delegated people—our relief workers? Or will it find its expression in a loving welcome of strangers to our midst. Will it find us seeking for them such tasks that will help them to adjust efficiently to American life? Will it find us with a patient, day by day, Christian concern for helping these people directly and personally "in the Name of Christ."—JJE

WORSHIPPERS

The types of hearers who go to worship are:

The worshippers by proxy, applying what is said to someone else; the superficial worshippers, busy inspecting what is worn by others, looking to see who is there; and the real worshippers—those who attentively hear, consider and obey.—The Christian Index.

The Child and the Kingdom

by Dorothy A. Krehbiel

JESUS called a little child unto him and set him in the midst of them, and said, "Verily I say unto you, Except ye become converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven." As it has been said, Jesus in calling the child to Him, did not say to the little one, "Look at Peter, what a great big strong fisherman he is. I trust that when you grow up you will be like Peter." Instead of pointing to the disciples as examples, He drew their attention to the child and said, "Except ye become as little children." Human wisdom says to the child, "Be a man!" Divine wisdom reverses the process, saying to the man who would secure God's favor, "Become a child."

The Child as a Model of Discipleship

Jesus set before the disciples and he sets before us the little child as a model or type of the true disciple, and teaches that to enter the kingdom we must have the child-spirit. "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein." What is this spirit. The answer is found in these words: "Whosoever shall humble himself as this little child," has the spirit of humility which is the first step toward the kingdom of heaven. Worldly ideas and ambitious thoughts must be abandoned. Pride and arrogance cannot enter the door.

We cannot forget while dealing with this subject, that a child has much of human nature, and the fondest mother cannot help seeing in the child she loves tokens of waywardness, temper, and selfwill. But, there are many traits exemplified by this child, who would leave his play and self-interest in obedience to interest in obedience to Jesus' call, to be emulated.

Thus Jesus would place a child before us to see innocent confidence and trust. Children are not natural skeptics, but as a rule are receptive and open to God's truth, for childhood is a period of perfect trust. It has been left to the adults to be guilty of unbelief.

As naturally as the child flees for refuge to its parent's arms, confides itself and all it has or hopes for, to its parent's wisdom and love, so Christ invites all to come. He longs that all might commit themselves and all their interests to the loving Savior in complete trust and faith.

Jesus would have us see a child in his unworldliness. No one is more simply natural and unconventional than a young child, who knowing nothing of the ways of the world is not concerned nor awed by worldly pomp and splendor. To him there is no difference between classes and races until prejudiced by his elders.

Jesus would have us note the example of the child in teachableness. The docility or readiness to accept what has been told, the eagerness to learn, to receive instruction, and the willingness to be corrected without hurt pride. The child who simply takes in the light of truth which is offered and grows thereby.

One of the dearest characteristic of the child that Jesus would have us express is his loving and affectionate spirit. The first thing a baby does is to hold out its little arms. He wants to love and be loved. He clings to his parents in a deep devotion. The punishment inflicted but a moment before for some childish offense is forgotten and the arms of affection are ready to embrace the father and Human wisdom says to the child, "Be a man!" Divine wisdom says to the man, "Become a child."

Pacific District Conference Program

FIFTIETH SESSION, JUNE 22 - 26

The Pacific District Conference will meet for its fiftieth session in the First Mennonite Church in Upland, California, June 22-26 under the central theme, "The Spirit-Filled Life." The theme song to be used is "Holy Spirit Faithful Guide."

Wednesday — Committee Meetings

Individual committees of the District will meet Wednesday morning at 9 a.m. with a joint session in charge of Rev. Paul Roth at 1 p.m. The evening's service will be a panel discussion on "Church Problems" under the chairmanship of Rev. P. K. Regier. Speakers include: Rev. W. A. Regier, Rev. Rudolph Schmidt, and Rev. Henry N. Harder.

Workers Conference Thursday

Rev. W. Harley King is leader of the Thursday morning service on "The Spirit-filled Church and Home." Following a devotional service by Rev. Menno Kliewer, speakers on various subjects are Rev. Clyde Dirks. Rev. Willard Wiebe, Mrs. Chris Ummel, and Rev. Henry Dalke. After the noon ministers' luncheon, separate business meetings for the ministers, laymen, Women's Mission Society, and young people will be held. The combined session at 3:45 p.m. is in charge of Rev. Ben Rahn and Rev. H. P. Fast will deliver the message. Regular Conference sessions begin Thursday evening at 8 p.m. to be preceded by a muscial program. The address of welcome will be given by Rev. Earl Salzman, the response by Rev. George W. Kopper followed by the Conference sermon by Rev. Paul Roth.

Friday Sessions

Rev. Paul Roth, president, will preside over the Friday morning and afternoon meetings. In the morning reports from all the Conference officers and committees will be heard. The afternoon message will be preached by Rev. H. P. Fast. In charge of the evening's service is the Women's Missionary Association, with Mrs. W. Harley King, president, presiding. The message will be presented by Mrs. Enns, missionary from Africa.

Young People Meet Saturday

Saturday morning unfinished business will be taken care of followed by the budget presentation for 1949-50. The sermon will be given by Rev. H. P. Fast. All business will be concluded during the afternoon session with the remainder of the day open for sight-seeing.

"Christ Challenges Youth in the Present Crisis," is the theme to be followed during the Young People's Meeting Sunday night. Dicussions on various phases of this topic will be given by representatives from Washington, Idaho, and Oregon. The guest speaker will be chosen by the young people.

The young people will also hold two business sessions Thursday and Friday afternoon with Kermit Dirks as chairman. Friday evening the young people will hold a Fellowship banquet in charge of the local young people.

Jubilee Sunday June 26

A special Jubilee worship service will be arranged by Rev. Earl Salzman Sunday morning. At the 2:30 p.m. session two reports will be given on the "Beginning and Growth of P.D.C." by Rev. Harold Burkholder, and the "Evangelization and Mission Report," by Rev. W. Harley King. Rev. H. P. Fast will deliver the message. In the evening the Los Angeles Male Chorus will present a musical program, to be followed by installation of new officers and a message by Rev. H. P. Fast.

The Child and the Kingdom . . . Continued from p. 4

mother whose painful duty it has been to administer it. This spirit of love and forgiveness Jesus desires in His followers.

The Child's Service in the Kingdom

Although some may consider the child of little importance in the service of God, yet God has used and does use these little ones. There are some things that He hides from the wise and prudent—the overly clever and smart ones—and yet shows to the little ones. Matthew writes, "Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them to babes." How well the child Samuel illustrates this truth. God called the child and revealed unto him things that He did not tell His aged prophet Eli. This youth had a place of service in God's plan for it tells us that "the child Samuel ministered unto the Lord . . . . and the Lord was with him."

The child is of service to Christ in the power for good that he yields through his sweet influence. How often have the words of Isaiah been true, "and a little child shall lead them," as the Lord has drawn the hearts of parents to Himself through their love for the child. No child is too young for this service of influencing and witnessing.

Jesus in His ministry here upon earth accepted the service of children. It was the lad with the loaves and fishes who aided the Lord in feeding the multitude. He was willing to give his lunch and the Master made use of it. It was the sweet song of praise by the children in the temple that brought comfort and joy to Jesus.

The Child Has a Welcome and Claim of Christ

Jesus defends the rights of children as having a place in the kingdom and gives a special welcome with His words, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. He opened the gates of His kingdom to the little child as He opened His arms to the little children whom the mothers of Judah brought to Him. The only recorded instance of Christ being "much displeased" is when it was supposed by the disciples that He couldn't be bothered or that He was indifferent to the spiritual needs of children and that the needs of the adults were more important. This is a very tender scene of a loving Saviour gathering the little children to Himself and blessing them. It is the same Lord Jesus, today, saying to His disciples, "Let the children come unto me and hinder them not." (Scripture quotations from the Revised Standard Version.)

The Christian's Inescapable Cross

by Anna E. Isaac

For every disciple of Jesus Christ the cross is inescapable. It is inherent in discipleship, not as a punishment but as a means toward perfection. Even Jesus was made perfect through suffering: "Though he were a Son yet he learned obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him," Heb.. 5:8, 9.

Let us not confuse salvation with discipleship. Tom M. Olson says, "One may be saved and yet not be a disciple. Salvation is by grace through faith without works; but discipleship demands cross-bearing, self-renunciation, learning of Christ, following Him. My salvation does not depend on anything I do, but discipleship does. It costs me nothing to be saved, but it costs me much to be a disciple."

However not every one who has a cross to bear is therefore a disciple. The spirit in which we carry that cross determines our discipleship. Whether the fact of cross-bearing is fruitful or not, depends upon how we carry it, and then upon the end to be gained.

We are not sure that we agree with those who say that the common ills that come to saint and sinner alike—sickness, catastrophe, accidents, etc., are not crosses, and that only those burdens which we choose to bear of our own free will with and for Christ are crosses.

Jesus Chose to Pay the Price

It is true that Jesus went to the cross voluntarily. He could have refused it and thereby sealed the doom of all mankind. Yes, He could have escaped it. But there was also a divine "must" back of that cross: If God wanted a world of lost sinners to be saved, then Jesus must pay the price of that salvation. He CHOSE to pay that price. And that willing choice transformed the cross into a throne before which all Christendom bows in homage. He bore the cross triumphantly. And the reward? A lost humanity redeemed and an eternal throne at the Father's right hand. Phil. 2:9; Heb. 8:1; 12:2. He considered the gain great enough to make His suffering and death worth the cost.

Yielding to the inevitable is not fruitful cross-bearing, but picking it up and carrying it gladly for Jesus' sake is. Ordinarily, to bear the cross is not something joyous, but it can be gladly and victoriously borne. Does that sound paradoxical? Much in God's word sounds paradoxical and yet is divinely true.

In Hebrews 12:2 we read that Jesus "for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross." And in Philippians 2:8 "He humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." To endure, to humble oneself, to become obedient unto death is not something joyous in itself. It becomes worth while only as it is done gladly. We will do it gladly for love of the Master, and as we see eternal value in it. Glad cross-bearing makes it glorious and victorious.

Spirit of Victorious Cross-Bearing

A surgeon had to amputate an arm of a French lad who had been wounded in the battle of Verdun. He said to the young man sympathetically, "Sorry, lad, but your country took your arm." To which the young fellow retorted, "My country did not take my arm. I gave it." That is the spirit of victorious cross-bearing.

It is one thing to stand before a cross in adoration and even in worship. It is quite another to pick it up and carry it. Jesus says, "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me" Luke 9:23. He never bribes people to become disciples by making it seem easy. He sets the cross before them at the outset. To worship the cross is more or less objective. To carry it makes it subjective. Satan will try to make us do anything rather than carry the cross, because cross-bearing makes for Spiritual growth.

See the Need, Meet It

We often talk glibly of cross-bearing. What does it really mean? Let us mention only one of many things. Cross-bearing is to see a need and to meet that need at any cost to ourselves, and not run away from it.

> It is one thing to stand before a cross in adoration and worship. It is quite another to pick it up and carry it . . . . Cross-bearing is to see a need and to meet that need at any cost to ourselves, and not run away from it.

There is a story of an Indian raja who, when famine stalked the land, fled and became a hermit. His elephants were fed with milk and butter, but he did nothing to relieve human suffering.

Another King saw a needy, sin-cursed world. He came to share the pain and to give His life to meet that need.

We see need in many different forms about us, or farther away, but still within our reach. It may be in our own home, in our community or country, or it may be across the waters. To share in the pain, to meet that need at the cost of our own comfort or pleasure, and perhaps even of our own life, is to bear the cross with Jesus.

Sicknesses Are Crosses

If there is in the home a child that will always remain a child mentally, dare any one say that is not a cross for those parents? Or the father has developed a disease for which there is no apparent cure, is not that a cross equally for the father who would want to be the provider, and for his family who must see their loved one suffer? Or the mother is blind. I'm reminded of one such family. The mother was blind, the daughter an invalid, poverty in the

PROTESTANT FOREIGN MISSIONS REPORT

Protestants in mission areas have increased over 200 per cent in the past twenty-three years, a report issued here by the International Missionary Council, with headquarters at 156 Fifth Avenue, revealed

The report is the first since 1936 on the status of the churches in missionary areas, as well as in other parts of the world. The survey, covering 120 countries and island groups outside the United States, Canada, New Zealand, Australia, and Europe, showed that Protestant numbers jumped from 6,517,697 in 1925 to 25,341,283 in 1948.

At the same time, the report said that Catholics in similar areas now number 130,135,533 as compared to 11,595,803 Orthodox Church members.

Numerically, Protestants showed the greatest gains in South Africa and India-Pakistan, where over the twenty-three year period they increased from 714,013 to 5,467,281 and from 580,212 to 4,100,224 in the respective countries.

In South America, the largest gains were reported in Brazil, Argentina, and Mexico. In these countries the increases were from 69,527 to 1,657,524 in Brazil, from 3,350 to 259,056 in Argentina, and from 31,138 to 265,148 in Mexico.

Missionary activity in the southwest Pacific islands was recorded in the Solomon Islands, where Protestants increased from zero to 54,173 in the twenty-three year period, in Micronesia, from zero to 141,911, and in Indonesia from 300,529 to 1,737,866.

Missionary Staff

According to the report, the entire Protestant missionary staff now numbers 192,987. This includes 25,989 ordained ministers, 128,713 laymen and 38,285 women. Ordained ministers from foreign countries numbered 8, 883 as compared to 17,106 nationals. The report revealed a much higher percentage of national workers as contrasted to foreign employees.

Countries with the largest number of mission agencies and churches were South Africa, with eighty-two mission groups and denominations, India-Pakistan with 101 plus thirty-seven theological seminaries and seventy-nine Bible schools, and China with eighty-one mission groups including fifty theological seminaries and 160 Bible schools.

The total number of worship places in the areas surveyed was 141,169.

The only country to show a loss in the Protestant population was Turkey where Protestants declined from 15,283 in 1925 to 2,900 in 1948. Other countries in the Near East all showed increases, including Syria and Lebanon, where Protestants went from 3,735 in 1925 to 21,527 in 1948. During the same period, Palestine and Transjordan registered an increase from 3,136 to 16,115, Arabia from seven to fifty-two, Egypt from 41,006 to 163,190, and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan from 244 to 19,442.

In the Far East Korea showed an increase from 201,063 to 743,773, Manchuria from 245 to 54,938, and China from 594,086 to 1,404,178.

Survey Published

The survey will be available in book form this summer. Prepared by E. J. Bingle, joint secretary for Survey of the International Missionary Council, London, it will be known as "The World Christian Handbook." The Survey will be presented in three sections, including 100 pages of text, 100 pages of statistics, and 100 pages of a directory of mission agencies, churches, and international organizations. It will be published by the World Dominion Press, London, and distributed in this country by the Friendship Press, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City. It will sell for $7.50.

home. Yet in this case that cross was a shining thing. It was borne with laughter and song.—Or there may be a wayward child. Can any pain exceed the agony of seeing a child go astray, in spite of every effort to keep him or her in the way that leads to life? Is that not a bitter cross?

Then, if these are crosses, and they may come to anyone, saint or sinner, where does discipleship come in?

Bear It Gladly

Jesus does not leave us in the dark concerning this. He says if any one will not "take up" his cross and follow Him he cannot be His disciple. There is the difference between taking it up and bearing it gladly, and merely suffering it grudgingly. It is the glad cross-bearing that makes it fruitful. And it is as we bear it in obedience to His will and for His glory that we are His disciples.

Just one more point. This cross-bearing is a daily thing. Almost all of us can bear even some great burden for a short time. We may be able to face up to some sudden loss or disaster or sickness courageously. But when it comes to the daily cross which we must bear today and tomorrow, and all the tomorrows perhaps to the end of our days, then it takes more than whistling up our courage in the dark. It takes grace, and more grace from God. It takes strength and power that only God can give.

The Reward

And what is the reward for such cross-bearing? Eternal life? Yes, but there is also a reward here and now. Jowett says, "The Lord's blessing is hidden in the apparent curse. In the act of bearing the cross we increase our strength. That is the heartening paradox of grace. Virtuous energies pass from our very burdens into our spirits.—The dead cross becomes a tree of life, and a secret vitality renews our souls.

How foolish then O heart of mine, to avoid and evade the cross! Refuse the cross and thou declinest the strength! Ignore the duty and thou shalt feel no inspiration! Carefully husband thy blood, and thou shalt remain forever anaemic! But lose thy life and thou shalt find it."

World-Over With MCC

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA.—The Mennonite relief workers were scheduled to leave Poland on about May 12 as that relief unit came to a close. According to latest word, the liquidation or transfer of equipment to other units was progressing satisfactorily. The workers will be used in other countries of Europe.

The immediate reason for closing the unit is that the Polish government now feels that conditions are such that it can assume responsibility for the care of any needy people in the country. The situation here is similar to that experienced by the MCC workers in Hungary a few months ago, where the work was also brought to conclusion.

The first Mennonite relief work in Poland was carried on during the years of 1939 to 1942. When the United States entered the war, this work had to be terminated until 1947, when relief workers were again able to enter. Food and clothing distribution as well as agricultural rehabilitation have been the major emphases. The Mennonite Relief Committee has administered and financed the major functions of the Polish relief program under a special arrangement within the total MCC relief program.

Relief Project in Berlin

The M.C.C. work in the city of Berlin has become a reality with the securing of a location known as Liedertafel as a center. The work is to be of the self-service, rehabilitation type with facilities provided at the center to form a base for a program of activities with both a physical and spiritual significance. Arrangements are being made with local German agencies for helping to defray the expenses of certain aspects of the program. An additional aspect of this work is the opportunity to keep a contact with the Mennonites of the area. Harold and Ann Buller are directing this work in Berlin.

Conditions in China Continue Unsettled

There has been no indication that the M.C.C. workers in China are in any immediate danger, despite the recent developments in the civil war. Two workers are located at Chinkiang where order has reportedly been maintained in spite of Communist occupation a short time ago. Two more workers are at Tsingtao, which is largely isolated, but not in an area of active fighting. Four workers are in the city of Shanghai along with the many other Americans who have not withdrawn from the city. No evidence has been received that they are in danger, although the city is apparently being occupied. Five American and three Chinese M.C.C. workers are located in Hengyang Orphanage and in Formosa, neither of which are in the area now affected by the advances of the Communist forces. Several other workers are on the way home, having nearly completed their terms.

Work in Naples Opens

A project similar to the community centers which have been such an effective type of relief work in Germany is being organized in Naples, Italy. Only recently have arrangements been completed for housing for the center. The work is located in a crowded area of the city, offering a great opportunity for service to poor children. The service will include some material aid gifts, general welfare work and religious instruction. Ross and Ruth Goldfus have initiated the work; Velma Schlabach, who is now enroute to Europe, will assist in the program.

Land Purchase in Uruguay under Consideration

A site has been tentatively chosen and negotiations for purchase are in progress to secure a tract of land in Uruguay upon which the Mennonite immigrants may settle. The land lies about 150 miles northwest of Montevideo in an area now becoming settled, but heretofore devoted largely to cattle raising. A site in the northern part of Uruguay had also been considered, but the immigrant committee did not favor this location because of the distance to market and other factors making future development more difficult.

Waltner to Europe

Sturges and Bernice Miller returned from India on May 14; Frank and Marie Wiens from Germany on May 19. Franklin and Mildred Steiner of Dalton, Ohio left for Switzerland on May 20, after having served for a few months at the Akron headquarters.

Leaving on May 27 for various assignments in Europe were Velma Schlabach of Mulino, Oregon for a second term of relief in Italy; Aganetha Duerksen of Goessel, Kansas to serve in Germany; and C. J. Rempel of Waterloo, Ontario and Erland Waltner of Mt. Lake, Minnesota who are to serve in Europe this summer under the M.C.C. Peace Section.

Clothing Needs Summarized

From time to time the MCC workers in Europe review the specific clothing needs so that the people at home may know what is most urgently needed.

At present the chief needs are for work and dress clothing for men and boys, dresses and yardage for women, and underwear, stockings and shoes in all sizes (especially large sizes). Knitting wool and bed sheets or sheeting can also be used to good advantage. Clothing for babies and young children is not as urgently needed now as had been the case earlier. The need for scissors, needles, safety pins, and thimbles also seems to have been quite well supplied. Sewing circle groups, and others desiring to help where the need is greatest, should give more special emphasis to the items listed.

Correction

In the release of May 6, the total of material shipments during the past nine months was given as 3½ million pounds. Actually this figure included only food; the clothing, shoes, soap and other items were in addition to this.

Other Uses For Summer Bible School Materials

by Paul Shelly

Most of the people in our conference are aware, I believe, that grades three, five, and seven of our new summer Bible school material is available now at our book stores at Berne, Newton, and Rosthern. This material, as has been previously announced, is an adaptation of the Old Mennonite summer Bible school material.

The primary use for which this material is intended is for summer Bible school work. It has been designed for this purpose and provides for the total program in the areas of Biblical content, missions, music, and other fields.

At a display of this material at the Middle District Conference, Pandora, Ohio, April 21-24, some people who will not have a summer Bible school, pointed out that there are a number of other possible uses of this material. The suggestions of these people may be of help to others who are looking for suitable materials for other phases of Church work.

The Three Types of Materials in the Units

BIBLICAL. Each of the units has the Biblical material well worked out with workbooks provided for the pupils. In grade three the unit is entitled "What God Does for Us," in grade five "The Life of Jesus," and in grade seven, "Followers of Jesus." These Biblical units not only present the Biblical material so that students can learn the contents of the Bible but also have practical implications of these Biblical truths for the age group for which they are intended.

MISSIONARY. The mission material includes some material of a general nature but also includes much that has been worked out by our own conference on our own mission fields. This material too has been worked out well. It includes pictures and cut out material in the workbooks for the pupils, stories, suggestions for the teachers, and maps of our fields. In grade three the mission material is on China, in grade five, Africa, and in grade seven, missionary pioneers.

MUSIC. The music material includes from ten to fifteen hymns, choruses, and gospel songs in each unit. These are printed in both the teacher's book and the workbooks. Suggestions are also given for the teachers as to how to make both the message of these numbers meaningful as well as to methods by which the pupils will be able to appreciate the music. The music is well chosen and will be of definite value in introducing the children to the great music of the church.

Uses of These Materials Other than Summer Bible School

A number of uses have been suggested. These certainly do not exhaust the possibilities but may be beneficial to you as to how you can best use this material in your own church.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASSES. One person felt that she would like to use the Biblical material for a unit in Sunday school sometime in her Junior class. This can be done if you are using the uniform series or one of the graded series. It may be that some time you feel a special need for one of the units of this new series and would like to substitute it for a regular unit. For Sunday school purposes certainly one could adapt the number of lessons. There are ten lessons in each unit of this material but these could be adapted for one quarter or could very well be extended over two quarters because of the detailed workbook material. Some groups might even want to spend a quarter on one of the mission units. There is a difference of opinion on this but certainly this would be one opportunity to teach all of our Sunday school children the importance of missions.

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR. All three of the types of material are adaptable for Junior Christian Endeavor work. One could very easily use any of these for a quarter of a year or even for a half of a year. Certainly the Biblical material would be well adapted for this use. The mission material would also be adapted for this use. Since Biblical material is almost exclusively used in Sunday school it would be well to use the mission material in Junior Christian Endeavor at some time. The music section would also make an interesting series for one quarter. If the children would be introduced to some of the hymns and gospel songs that are used in our church services they would be able to enter into the worship more wholeheartedly and reverently.

JUNIOR AND INTERMEDIATE MISSION GROUPS. The missionary material is especially adapted to this use. There is ample material included for

FREEMAN COLLEGE

Sunday evening, May 29, at 8 P.M. the Baccalaureate service took place in the gymnasium. Dr. Harold Gross, Dean of the College, gave the message.

June 3 was Alumni Day with a track meet in the afternoon and the annual Alumni Banquet in the gym.

The venetian blinds, made possible by the Class of 1923, have been installed in the Study Hall, taking the place of the old, worn-out shades. This adds much to the appearance of the room and is a gift that is greatly appreciated.

School was dismissed on Thursday so that all students could go out in the interest of the new Auditorium-gymnasium, selling paper bricks representing the real bricks for the new building. Not all reports have come in, but the results to date are very gratifying.

Commencement exercises for all graduates took place on June 2, at 8 P. M. Prof. M. S. Harder, Associate Professor of Education at Bethel College, will deliver the address. Prof. Harder is the son of the late David Harder who was Professor of Bible here at the College about 18 years ago.

THIESSEN ADDRESSES SEMINARY ALUMNI

The graduating class figured prominently in several interesting activities as new members of the Alumni Association. Incidentally, the Alumni Association of Mennonite Biblical Seminary has now been combined with that of Witmarsum Seminary which was located at Bluffton, Ohio, between 1921 and 1931. The Seminary Alumni Association held its annual meeting and dinner Thursday evening, May 26. A welcome to the class of 1949 was given by Frank Mitchell of Meadows, Illinois, where he directs the Home for the Aged, operated by the Central Conference. Frank Mitchell graduated from Witmarsum in 1925. Response was given by David Habegger of the class of 1949. Maynard Shelly, of Hopedale, Illinois, who is soon to take the pastorate at Allentown, Pennsylvania, recounted the early days of the Seminary since he was a member of the first class which assembled here under the leadership of Abraham Warkentin. The major address of the evening was given by John Thiessen, on furlough from our mission field in India, who had graduated from Witmarsum in 1930. He urged seven important parts of the Mennonite heritage as basic to the new work of Mennonite Biblical Seminary. These seven points were: industriousness, sympathy for the suffering, a vigorous economic life, honesty, trust and confidence in the Lord, reverence for the Holy Scriptures, and the interpretation of the Scriptures in line with Jesus Christ. He made the interesting statement that today Mennonites have to deal with an environment similar to that which the Jews dealt with during their agonizing struggle years ago. Pres. S. F. Pannabecker made a few concluding remarks at the end, following which the business meeting was held to elect new officers. President of the Alumni Association is Grover T. Soldner, of Bluffton, Ohio; Vice-President, Arnold Regier, of Winnipeg, Manitoba; Secretary-Treasurer, Frank Mitchell, of Meadows, Illinois; and member of the Board of Trustees Advisory Group, Robert Hartzler.

On Sunday, May 22, the Senior Class presented our Vesper Service.

The Bluffton College Vesper Choir, under the direction of Russell A. Lantz, will present a concert at the First Mennonite Church here on June 14.

HONORS AWARDED BY BETHEL

At the fifty-sixth annual commencement at Bethel College fifty-six students received degrees. Commencement exercises were held May 31 in Memorial Hall with Dr. W. W. Sweet of Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas speaking on, 'The Sources of our Religious Liberty."

Names of three students receiving the Order of the Golden A, Bethel's highest academic award, were announced at the graduation. Students so honored were William Klassen, Rosemary, Alberta, Canada, a natural science major; Widick Schroeder, chemistry, a Newton student; and Harold Moyer, North Newton, music.

Twelve Freshmen who had distinguished themselves during the year received class honors. Of these five students each received a $50 scholarship: Dwight Platt, Newton; Betty Ratzlaff, Goessel; Robert Regier, Mountain Lake, Minnesota; Frederic Schroeder, Newton; Norma Wohlgemuth, Hillsboro.

Six sophomores receiving honors, three of which received each a $50 scholarship: Harold Duerksen, Hillsboro; Alice Ruth Pannabecker, Chicago; Merle Siebert Henderson. Eighteen Juniors received honors upon successfully meeting certain academic and other requirements: Gilbert Goering, Moundridge; James Hean, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and Clarence Niles, Sedgwick, each received a $50 prize.

Eleven seniors were singled out for class honors. Four of these students have been granted scholarships by other colleges and universities for graduate studies: Miss Helga Kemnitzer, German-exchange student, Kansas University; Rupert Hohmann, North Newton, Wichita University; Harold Moyer, George Peabody College, Nashville, Tennessee; Widick Schroeder, University of Michigan.

BLUFFTON SCHEDULES RASMUSSEN

Dr. Carl C. Rasmussen, Professor of Systematic Theology, Lutheran Theological Seminary, Gettysburg, Pa., has been chosen as the Bible lecturer for the 1949 series of Bible Lectures. These lectures are to be given the week of November 13. Dr. Rasmussen is in much demand as a public speaker, for example, he gave the sermon at the Easter Sunrise service in the amphitheatre at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington cemetery this year.

Historical Committee

Conference Custodian of the Past

by Cornelius Krahn

The Historical Committee of the General Conference is not a Board, but a committee appointed by the Executive Committee of the Conference. Only the officers, Dr. S. F. Pannabecker and I, met in Bloomington and reported to the Executive Committee. Our report contained the following items:

1. How the Germantown Mennonite Church can become more and more as the mother of all Mennonite churches of America a monument and historical marker of Mennonitism in America.

2. How the General Conference can help to support the publication of valuable Mennonite or Anabaptist sources in Europe.

3. That the Historical Committee be authorized to publish a booklet commemorating the 75th anniversary of the Mennonite settlement in the prairie states and provinces.

4. The Historical Committee continues to collect books, letters, documents, and pictures, and other material pertaining to the Mennonites. Such material can be directed to the members of the committee, Dr. S. F. Pannabecker, Chairman, 4614 Woodlawn Avenue, Chicago 15, Illinois; Cornelius Krahn, Secretary, North Newton, Kansas; Rev. J. H. Janzen, 164 Erb St. W., Waterloo, Ontario; Dr. E. E. Leisy, 3523 Asbury Ave., Dallas 5, Texas; Dr. John D. Unruh Freeman, S. D.; Rev. Herbert Fretz, Bedminster, Penna.

5. The budget:

Microfilming documents	$300.00
Purchasing books	200.00
Publishing Anabaptist sources	250.00
Publishing commemoration booklet	500.00
Printing cards for genealogies	250.00
Binding periodicals	200.00
Miscellaneous	150.00
Total	$1,750.00

BEHIND THE 100% PLAN

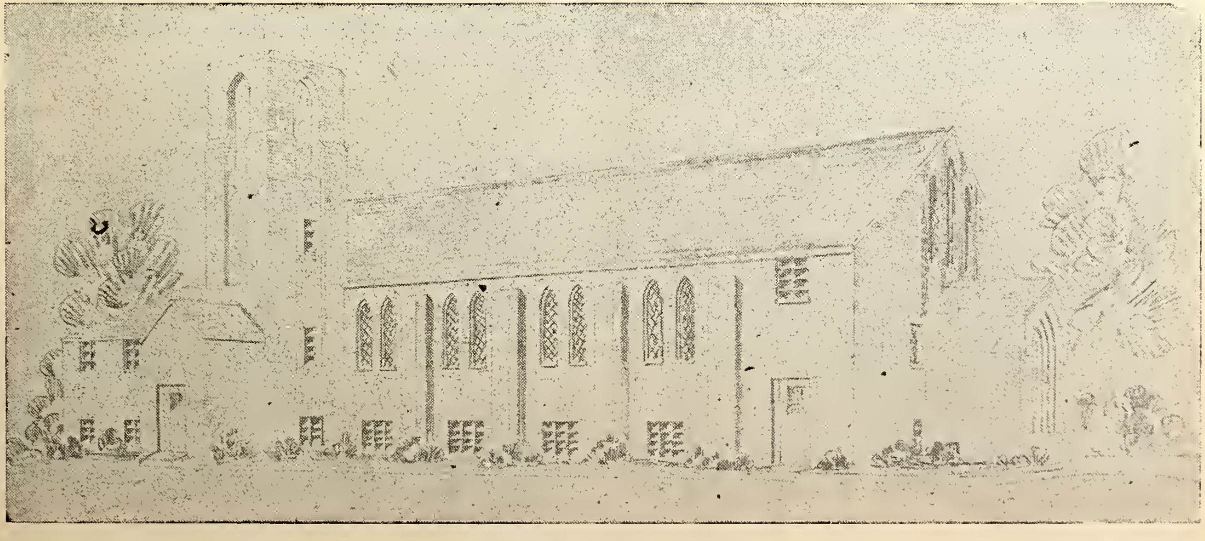
Bethany Church, Freeman, South Dakota, Hugo Mierau, Pastor — Mennonite serves 123 Homes

The HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN for our church papers has helped our people very much in getting better acquainted with our Conference work. Undoubtedly, it has repaid itself many times in the guidance and care it gives to our local congregation. Furthermore, this plan encourages and directs our Lord's divine commission of "Go ye into all the world."

We are now in the midst of building a new church edifice. The Psalmist says, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain who build it." There is really no use to build unless we build unto God. The material building is all in vain unless great spiritual interests are housed therein. The most strenuous efforts are in vain without God. It is in this spirit as the Psalmist says that we are trying to build a new sanctuary which may be a house of worship, of fellowship, of Christian education, of community and world service for our children and yours.

The first church building was erected in the year of 1900. A Sunday school was the first organization to be established. However, under the leadership of the Rev. Heinrich A. Bachman, the first pastor, the church was organized on August 6, 1905. Since then and even now this church seeks to provide a church home for many of Mennonite and Hutterite background and also others.

Architect's Drawing of Proposed Church



Jottings

—Ebenezer Church, Bluffton, Ohio: In connection with the worship service on Mother's Day, our church held a child consecration service in which seventeen babies were consecrated. The girls of the Mission Band entertained their mothers at an afternoon tea. Mrs. Wertheimer of Ada, Ohio, was the speaker. At this meeting gifts were brought to replenish the household needs of Missionary Vernon Sprungers of Africa. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hamman, relief workers in Italy, have returned home after a period of service. Rev. and Mrs. Landes and Howard went to Pennsylvania to attend the one-hundredth anniversary of the founding of Rev. Landes' home church, Deep Run. Reverend Landes spoke in these services which were held May 11-15.—M. Hilty, Corr.

—Salem Church, Freeman, South Dakota: Our pastor, Rev. Willard Claassen, was guest speaker at the Eastern District Conference held at Quakertown, Pennsylvania, April 28 to May 1. From May 5-8 he spoke at the Mennonite Church in Pretty Prairie, Kansas. May 22 the Men's Chorus presented a sacred concert. DVBS will be held May 30 to June 10 with the General Conference Bible School material being used.—Alice Kaufman, Corr.

—Bethesda Church, Marion, South Dakota: The Ladies Mission Society made 115 pounds of quilts this month and sent away 320 pounds of used clothing. Following the close of DVBS, a program was presented Sunday afternoon, May 29. Our first Singspiration will be held June 5.—Amelia Becker, Corr.

—Hereford Church, Bally, Pennsylvania: Our minister, Rev. Wilmer S. Shelly, spent the week of May 9-13 in Mennonite Central Committee Headquarters giving a course on Church History to the people preparing for relief work. Henry Riegner and Pauline Weller were married in our church Saturday morning, May 14. Regation Sunday was observed May 15 by a special service when a native larch, donated by Mrs. Ed. Nimmo in memory of her father Paul Davis, was planted on the grounds. Ralph Weller Berky wrote a poem for the occasion.—Mae Latshaw, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Dale Nebel of Noble, Iowa, presented the history and continued need of Mennonite relief work in China on the evening of May 12. Miss Phyllis Lehman and Mr. Vernon Lehman were married by Reverend Richert at our church Sunday, May 15. June 19 is the date of the organ dedication with Prof. Otto Holtkamp from Bluffton College presenting the recital. Mary Rose Sommer and Caleb Gerber are the only high school graduates this year. Sunday morning, May 22, Rev. G. T. Soldner of Bluffton, our supply pastor last summer, delivered an impressive sermon on "Crown Him Lord of All," in his usual enthusiastic manner.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

—Beatrice Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: Prof Menno Harder spoke to the Young Married Group of the First and Beatrice Mennonite Churches May 6 on "Living Sanely." Three baby girls were consecrated Mother's Day. Bethel College Day was observed May 15 with Dr. J. E. Hartzler giving the morning message. A fellowship dinner at noon was followed by an informal discussion as to the place of Bethel College in the Mennonite Church.—Mrs. Donald A. Claassen, Corr.

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Oregon: The Women's Missionary Society packed and shipped two hundred and ten pounds of new and used clothing for relief. A good assortment of yardage material was among this. The curtain for the altar railing was also finished. Vernon Neuenschwander, Lebanon, Oregon, showed pictures and gave a talk on the work being done among displaced persons in Paraguay, South America.—Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr.

—Burrton Church Burrton, Kansas: May 23 this church opened a two week session of Daily Vacation Bible School with twenty-one pupils and three teachers. May 22 the Men's Octet from Bethel College had charge of the morning worship, an inspiring hour of message and song.—Corr.

—Bethel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: There are days in the life of an individual and also in the life of a congregation, that cannot be forgotten. The Bethel Church of Mt. Lake had such a day when they bade farewell to their pastor, Rev. Erland Waltner and family. For seven and one-half years Reverend Waltner has faithfully and willingly served the congregation, not only from the pulpit but as a loving and unselfish pastor.

For Sunday evening, May 22, a farewell program was arranged and the church was well filled. Mr. P. R. Schroeder was the chairman for the evening. Various individuals represented the different organizations of the church in short farewell messages. Rev. Dan E. Friesen, from the M.B. church gave the main message of the occasion. Both Rev. and Mrs. Waltner brought responses.

The large choir and also the Men's Choir sang appropriate songs. Monday night the congregation and friends gathered again when Rev. Waltner gave his farewell message. Paul's farewell message to the Ephesians were his farewell words. He expressed a deep desire that this church would always be a true evangelical church, continue its wholehearted support in our General Conference work, and remain active in mission and relief. He was not leaving Bethel church because of selfish reasons, but felt his field of service would be enlarged in that he would be able to help many young men who want to go into the ministry.—Helen Penner. Corr.

—Evangelism Committee: The Evangelism Committee of the General Conference met in Chicago on May 25. Under consideration was the United Evangelism Advance or Crusade which is to be sponsored by the various groups of churches in the United States. Plans for the November Evangelism Through the Church School Campaign were also under consideration.—John T. Neufeld, Chairman.

—MUTUAL AID: Wanted—A young married couple to work on farm. Three room house with modern conveniences. Two miles west, one mile south of Halstead. See Fred Schowalter, Halstead, Kansas, or J. W. Fretz, Board of Mutual Aid, North Newton, Kansas.

—Bethesda Church, Henderson, Nebraska: A son, Leo Allen, was born May 23 to Rev. and Mrs. Arnold Nikkel.

Into the Beyond

CHRISTIAN D. AMSTUTZ, member of the First Mennonite Church in Bluffton, Ohio, was born August 5, 1860, and died May 20, 1949. He sang in "The Messiah" annually for forty-five years.

MRS. KATHERINE HARDER HOFFMAN, a member of the Salem Mennonite Church at Munich, North Dakota, was born May 23, 1894, and died April 15, 1949.

Reports on Retreats

The Growth and Widespread Use of Retreats

In the General Conference, the idea of holding retreats for the youth of the church is comparatively new. Within the life time of man, youth retreats have grown into a regular part of the life of the church. Only some twenty years ago was there the first of these annual outings held. They were found to be of such value that from district to district, retreats began to be held. Today the opportunity for an outing, getting together in the out-of-doors, getting acquainted with many new friends from other churches, gaining the inspiration of study, discussion, prayer and devotion, and play together, the opportunity for this is available to almost all the youth of the General Conference.

Youth Worships!

To date, three districts own their own retreat grounds. Eastern District has owned and developed Men-o-Lan, their grounds since the middle 30's. They are the pioneers. Saskatchewan bought Elim Gospel Beach at Swift Current in the early 40's. Last year the Western District purchased a site which will be developed this summer. No other district or regional group has their own grounds.

There are constantly more retreats being held each year. It will be noted that the Eastern District this year has a full month's program at Men-o-Lan. This is the first time they are doing this. Only last year the Central and Middle Districts together had their first young adult retreat. Several years ago the Ontario churches had their first week-end retreat as did the Northern District as a District group. And, this year the Manitoba churches are planning their first retreat.

Retreats are being held at many different places. The most beautiful site is said to be the camp used by the California churches in the Sierra Mountains, Camp Sequoia. Most groups rent camps owned by other groups. Retreats have been held on college campuses, the seminary in Chicago, on farms and in factory buildings. At Rosthern, Saskatchewan the youth farm is the site for a retreat as well as the camp at Swift Current, Elim Gospel Beach which the Saskatchewan youth bought already constructed.

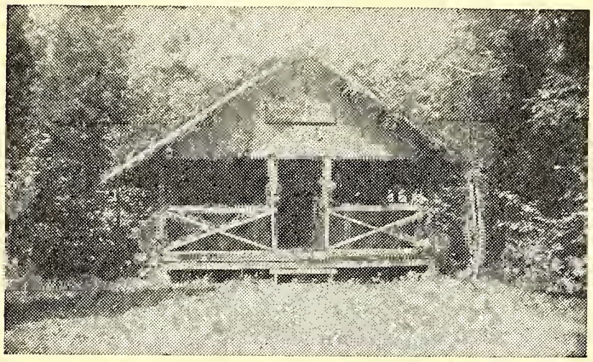
Not only are there many different places where retreats are held, but there are many different types of retreats planned by many different groups. Where district are close enough to each other, district retreats are regularly held. Where the distance is too great, retreats are held by churches or states. In the Pacific District, each state has its own retreat due to the great span of distance between them. Thus, California, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho have their own annual retreats. Since the Iowa churches are so far from the other Middle District churches, they have their own. The Kitchener church is so far from the other Eastern District churches that Kitchener has its own church retreat, as does the church at Aberdeen, Idaho. The Mountain Lake community has had its own retreats some time because of the size of that community. Now the Northern District has begun to hold retreats of a district-wide nature.

The variety and the constant growth of the retreat idea indicates that the churches have found this a very valuable experience—as have the youth who participate. That it should grow and improve from the experiences of the leaders and the participating youth, we all hope. That it can become a great influence in the youth activity of the churches, we also very much desire. In order for such growth to be realized, the need for good and adequate facilities is important. Thus, more districts will need to develop their own sites if no other satisfactory way of effectively holding retreats can be found. The need for real objectives and a full and interesting program is also important. Youth is not interested in poorly planned programs and uninteresting activities. There is need for real leadership that is informed and that knows the best in planning retreat programs. Finally, the retreat affords an unusual opportunity for young people to re-think their faith. They can withdraw from daily routine, they can live in intimate association with youth and leaders all interested in spiritual growth and renewed faith in the Christian proclamations. They can be in an out-door setting where the testimony of the Eternal hills and the beauty of nature stands as a constant declaration of their Creator. To use retreats to their fullest advantage for all concerned is of primary importance in the youth program of the church.

This issue of Mennonite Youth is devoted to a partial report on the retreats to be held this summer. As it is possible, reports from other local or district groups will be printed. This will afford to inform the reader of the wide-spread use of retreats as a part of the church's ministry to youth.

This Year at Men-o-Lan

by Rev. Walter McDowell, Retreat Chairman



We are indeed greatful that interest in our retreat is continuously growing. It has been the lament of retreaters in previous years that the retreat was too short. Following the desire of the young people who will be the future church leaders, the retreat committee this year has again increased the number of days of the retreat in confidence that the Lord will also increase the rich blessings previously received.

In the past Men-o-Lan has meant much to our conference in the spiritual and social development of the young people. There are workers on the mission field and also many now in training for the Lord's work, who yielded their lives to Him in consecration services at our retreat meetings.

In view of the great need of missions and missionaries on this darkening age the retreat committee has arranged a program which, we trust, that under the guidance of the Holy Spirit will create in young hearts a willingness to follow the leading of the Lord, and to instill in mature minds a desire to prepare for active service by definitely consecrating their lives to Him.

Our Retreat Program—

Theme — "Fellowship in Service"

Retreat Hymn — O Jesus, I Have Promised

Retreat Chorus — Saved to Tell Others.

Retreat Text — I Cor. 3:9—"We are labourers together with God"

Western District Retreat at Murdock

by Henry Fransen

Plans have been made to conduct four retreats in the Western District Conference this year. These are to be held July 26-30, August 2-6, August 8-12, August 18-21.

The two mentioned, August 2-6 and August 8-12 are for young people of High School age and a little above. This is in two sessions because we feel that we can not handle more than 50 retreaters at one time, under the circumstances at our grounds this year. The period of August 18-21 is for young adults — married as well as single. This is also planned for the camp at Murdock. The period of July 26-30 is for Intermediates, ages 12-14. This is scheduled for the Bethel College Campus, unless there is a building on our grounds with a roof overhead. The retreaters will really have to be "campers" for the three older retreat periods. Probably the only shelter on the grounds by retreat time, will be a large convention tent. Campers will have to provide own sleeping quarters. We suggest bringing tents or cattle trucks with a canvas over the top.

Plans are to have a voluntary service unit work on our grounds this summer. They would help with the building program.

An additional 80 acres has been purchased so that now the retreat grounds compromise 160 acres.

Northern District at Huron, S. D.

by Bill Gering

The Northern District Young People's retreat will be held at Bible Camp Byron, located 14 miles north of Huron, S. Dak. It will be held August 22nd through the 26th. Retreaters are to be of high school sophomore class (or age) and up.

The faculty will consist of the following: (As far as I know at present).

Camp Director, Rev. Willard Claasen, Freeman, S. D.
Instructor of Class I
Rev. John Suderman, Mt. Lake, Minn.
Intructor of Class II
Mr. Erwin Goering, Seminary, Chicago
Instructor of Class III
Dr. J. W. Fretz, N. Newton, Kansas
Evening Speaker
Rev. Ed. J. Miller, Freeman, S. D.
Director of Music
Rev. Marvin Dirks, Seminary, Chicago
Director of Recreation
Rev. Arnold Nickel, Henderson, Neb.
Instructor of Arts & Crafts
Miss Esther Bohn, Freeman, Jr. College

Class I is a Bible class. Class II is Vocational Guidance and Christian Citizenship in a Secular World. Class III is a Class in a Christian's View of Courtship and Marriage. Last year the classes were conducted in two divisions, namely of a high school age group and a college age group. We hope this can again be done.

Our Small Plot

—by Joanne Waltner, Freeman, South Dakota

We were searching for a young People's project that would involve the entire group, one that would not cost too much and would be fun to undertake. Such a big order!

By investigation, we found that a plot of land in town would be available. "Well, why not raise potatoes? They have all the qualities you want." So this became our project.

From February until October all we heard was, "Potatoes, Potatoes."

Planting the Potatoes

First the ground must be prepared for planting by plowing and raking. At last the great day arrived. All of the members came dressed in their best working clothes, some with knives for cutting potatoes, others with pans, pails, and hoes. The sturdier individuals wielded the hoes, some dropped the potatoes into their new homes and covered them up, while others cut them.

A weary, but well-satisfied group left that evening, positive that a farmer's life isn't all it's cracked up to be. Now no more work until the weeds begin to appear.

All too soon that time arrived and the group trooped out again to destroy this invader. After that it rained little and the weeds worked in harmony with the rain, so were sadly neglected.

Harvest Time

Harvest time rolled around when we unearthed our potatoes. People were amazed to find out that something was under that jungle of weeds. The weeds were pulled out and raked together. The evening that we unearthed them there were many "oh's" and "ah's" and the potatoes were really beautiful.

After the work was finished, a barbecue was held at one of the member's homes and everyone took part. The project was so successful that this year we are planting potatoes in twice as big a plot of land.

Was it Worthwhile?!

The money received from the sale of potatoes, is going into the Young People's Fund toward the purchase of a piano for our new church building.

This project proved to each of us, that when a group of individuals work together for a common good, much can be accomplished.

As a by-line, I might add that this spring the youth group here is also sponsoring a concert pianist.

separate meetings on the units covered. Each of the units would serve well as a basis for a series of meetings on the various fields which are served by our missionaries.

In the light of these possible uses of this material other than for summer Bible schools it would be well for someone in each church to order a set of grades three, five, and seven now, even though the church does not plan to have a summer Bible school this year and keep it on reference so that it can be considered by all in the church who have a responsibility for children's work in their choice of materials.

"I'D BEEN BOMBING HER COUNTRY"

William Carter, bomber pilot of the New Zealand Royal Air Force in the recent war, has become a pacifist and renounced all war. At an open air meeting of the New Zealand Christian Pacifist Society in early fall, a young man pushed to the front soon after the meeting started, and asked for permission to speak. This is his story:

"I was a bomber pilot, one of a New Zealand squadron. I was shot down over Germany and I had three years in POW camps. I came back threatened with TB in both lungs. What Mr. Barrington (Secretary of the Society) is saying is true and I'm with him all the way. My experiences in Germany opened my eyes and taught me the truth. And I want you to see it. Conditions were tough. I'd had enough, so I escaped. A German woman gave me food and soap and towel and great kindness. Her own son had been killed. I asked her why she was doing things for me when I'd been bombing her country. She answered: 'Because I'm a Christian.' That hit me fair. Wasn't I a Christian too? Why should Christians kill one another? Back in POW camp I read books by Tolstoy and others, and I can tell you war's 'had it' for me. I'm crusading for peace in future. I think what Mr. Barrington's saying is right and we should never allow war again."—Fellowship.

The Mennonite

Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ.

Volume 64 — June 14, 1949 — Number 24

In every tree I find
A poem so designed,
By breezes stirred,
To be the word
Which calls God's love to mind.

Each leaf a tender prayer
To woo my heart from care;
And beg it to
But trust Him Who
Can make a tree so fair.

And if in autumn time
The leaves fall out of rhyme,
Trees sing in turn
Of spring's return
In winter birds sublime.

Yes-trees are poetry
As real as real can be;
For line on line
This heart of mine,
They let God's-craft here see.

The Reader Says

Dear Mr. Editor,

I read in THE MENNONITE of May 10, page 5, that Reverend Neuenschwander is going to visit the "755 General Conference Mennonites in the two centers in Uruguay." I felt that I should call your attention to the fact that, so far, there are no General Conference Mennonites in Uruguay. Our Mennonites there are just Mennonites, without any epitheton ornans. I suppose that the error was merely accidental or due to the fact that the correspondent was led to this designation by his habituation to the American classifications.

This could, however, provoke some erroneous thoughts. Our West Prussian refugees, so far, had good relations to the representatives of all Mennonite groups in America, and I hope they will continue in this way.

Sincerely yours,
Gustav E. Reimer,
Bethel College,
North Newton, Kansas

Announcement

Accepting the suggestion of the Freeman-Marion, South Dakota, community, the General Conference Executive Committee announces August 23-30, 1950, as the tentative dates for the next session of the General Conference.

Editorials

DO YOU KNOW? Presbyterian Life, a bi-monthly publication in striving to keep its constituency informed on the implications of the North Atlantic pact, wants to know if the public fully understands that: accepting the pact means U. S. military aid; that estimates thus far indicate the cost for the first year will be $1.5 billion to $1.8 billion and that the intention of Congress is to do this in addition to the current defense budget of $16 billion; that this will mean an increase in taxes even without any social welfare legislation; that controls and allocation of scarce material will have to continue and may be made tighter in spots. What is more alarming is the fact that many Congressmen who have been contacted report that they have received practically no mail on the question of appropriations which are obviously necessary to implement the program. One thing would seem to be quite apparent: there is no easy solution to a situation created by failue to do that which is right in the past. Furthermore it is obvious that mistakes, failures, and injustices of the past cannot be righted by actions inherently wrong in the present. Any program of arms is inherently wrong because it misuses God's gifts. To shift to an arms program now would mean that all the relief efforts of the Government would become neutralized. To use our God-given resources for the satanic ends of warfare is to reduce our potential for creating that which blesses; this is defying God. To progressively diminish our creative potential is to prepare the soil perfectly for Communism. It is probably not realized by them as such, but those who are stirring up the largest amount of hatred and fear of Russia are helping the system of godless Communism the most. The costliest feature of the solution proposed by this program of hatred, armed preparedness, and eventual war is that it is no solution. History has taught us that it only leaves the same problem, but in a much more tangled state for future generations. There is a solution to which the Church must continue to witness; it, too, calls for "blood, sweat and tears." But they are the blood, sweat, and tears of selfless sacrificial devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ and His way of love and peace who still is the only Way even among nations.—JJE

THE CHURCH HAS NEVER OUTGROWN THE TERRIFYING, soul-wrecking heresy of "docetism," the first century error that insisted Jesus Christ did not come in the flesh. This may have grown out of a sincere desire to exalt the Lord Jesus Christ; in being sure they exalted Christ enough they didn't want Him to have any connection with the material body. This also led them to the conclusion that Jesus never knew suffering because he did not have a material body. This led many to a double set of standards for living; Jesus saved the soul, but the soul has no connection with what the body does. Their heresy was believing too much about Jesus. John in his epistle makes it a test of salvation it would seem, as to whether a person believes that Jesus Christ came in the flesh or not. In other words there is as much danger in over-stressing the Deity of Christ at the expense of the humanity as there is in over-stressing the humanity at the expense of the Deity of Christ. If we over-stress the humanity of Christ we get a human 'saviour' who himself needs saving; if we over-stress the Deity of Christ we have no one who was really tempted in all points like we are and thus our true High Priest Who knows the feeling of our infirmities. If we grant, then with Paul, that "in the fulness of time God sent forth his son born of woman and born under the law," and if we accept Jesus own evaluation of Himself that He was the Way, then it must make a bigger difference as to what we do with our bodies, which are in fact the temple of the Holy Spirit.—JJE

"IT IS THE ORIGINAL SIN which infests mankind because of our native human propensity to selfishness and self-will, and because we are all born in a world where sin has become sanctioned by custom and organized into social, economic, and political institutions." These words by Luther Allen Weigle, retiring Dean of Yale Divinity School, in which he calls attention to the way in which we can become so used to sin that we call it good, accept it, and even make it possible to become more widespread by organizing it, is aptly illustrated in the following quotation from Conscription News:

"Frank L. Weil, Chairman of the President's Committee on Religion and Welfare in the Armed Forces, on May 5, 1949, urged the Annual Convention of the United States Brewers Foundation to aid young people in the armed forces. The committee of which Weil is chairman was set up as a result of a recommendation by the President's Committee on U. M. T. Several members of that committee—Dan Poling and Truman Gibson—also serve on Weil's committee.

The May 6 New York Herald Tribune described Mr. Weil's speech to the Brewers in these words:

"Complimenting the foundation on its record of co-operating with the armed forces authorities, as well as with civil enforcement authorities, Mr. Weil urged the members to continue their program which 'has received recognition in high places in Washington.' He cited the foundation's program of co-operation as one which might be followed by others and said: 'The foundation can do a lot for our program. You can help alert citizens to their duties and responsibilities to the young men—our own sons—in the armed forces. You can use your influence on the local level to overcome the apathy that exists on problems connected with armed forces that are a civilian concern. You can continue as you have helped before with the kind of co-operation that has produced such effective results, to the end that the men who go into the armed forces will come out better men than they ever were before."

An infidel is a man who builds a house without windows, and then blames God because he has to live in the dark.

Negroes and the Mennonites

by Melvin Gingerich

AND after this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb." Rev. 7:9-10.

Mennonite contacts with the members of the Black Race have been few, partly because of the accidents of history and partly because of our unwillingness to make those contacts. If we have avoided making these contacts or if we would not feel happy in a congregation that had Negro members, we very likely could not be happy in heaven where we will worship and have close associations with those of "all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues." It behooves us, therefore, to study our attitudes to see if they have been Christian.

Accidents of History

As to the "accidents" of history, most of our forefathers lived in those areas of Europe where there were few opportunities to associate with the Black Race. When they migrated to America, most of them settled in the North where there were only a few Negroes. In spite of this, however, our forefathers were not altogether blind to what the Christian attitude towards Negroes should be. The first statement against slavery in America is found in the constitution of the Plockhoy Mennonite settlement on the Delaware, established in 1662. A few years later Germantown Mennonites and Quakers signed the first written protest against slavery in America.

Although at an early date Mennonites migrated into the slave holding area in Virginia, they never owned slaves and generally held a more enlightened position on the slavery issue than their average southern neighbor. Although many of their leaders have taken an enlightened attitude on the question of equality for the Negroes, in practice the policy of the Virginia Mennonites has to a certain degree been dictated by expediency rather than by principle because of the influence of southern thinking upon a portion of their leaders and membership. For example, it was not until this year that it was possible to obtain the permission of the local board of the Eastern Mennonite College to admit Negro students to that school. On the other hand the Virginia Conference carries on mission activity among the Negroes.

Treat As Brothers

A member of that race who joined one of these mission churches testified, "One of the many fine things that caused me to join the Mennonite Church was their anxiety, their very deep desire to treat our people as brothers, to teach us through your example what real Christian love is; to have sympathy and a ready, helping hand for the one farthest down, regardless of color, thus bringing us closer to our Maker."

The Krimmer Mennonite Brethren have been working among the Negroes of North Carolina and Tennessee for twenty-one years. They have established eleven Negro Mennonite churches, in which four native Negro Mennonite ministers are laboring as well as two ordained and twelve unordained deacons.

The Old Mennonites, as was stated above, are also working among the Negroes. The Lancaster Conference had Negro members for over fifty years. They now have fifty-five members in eight churches. Five of these churches have a mixed membership of Negroes and Whites. The Old Mennonites have other mission churches among the Negroes, including churches in Philadelphia, Harrisonburg, Los Angeles and Chicago. They also have seven mission churches among Spanish speaking peoples and five among the Jews.

Service Units in Colored Areas

Another area of Mennonite work among the Negroes has been in CPS and in the Voluntary Service units. In Florida and Mississippi our young men were made aware of conditions among the Negroes and of the unfair treatment they had received. This led to a continuing work among them at Gulfport, Mississippi, where many of our young people from all branches of Mennonites have had an opportunity to practice goodwill towards our black neighbors.

During the summer of 1948, the young people of the Old Mennonite churches had fourteen service units, five of which were among Negroes, one among Indians, and one among Mexicans. In 1949 there will be seventeen units, six of which will work among the Negroes. An outstanding unit has been Camp Ebenezer at Millersburg, Ohio, where Negro children are brought into a Mennonite community for a two weeks vacation. During the summer of 1949, two groups from Cleveland and two groups from Youngstown will be entertained. This experiment has had a two-fold result. Not only has this been a rich experience for the Negro youngsters but it has also been an enlightening one for the local Mennonite Church where the children are entertained.

Mennonite Negro Ministers

Another encouraging aspect of the work among Negroes in the Central States is the venture in Chicago started by the Old Mennonites in 1944. The Bethel

Christ's Forgotten Command
"Go and Sin No More"

by Howard J. Zehr

These words, "Sin no more," are seldom recognized as among the commands of Jesus, but they are found recorded in the Gospel of John on two occasions, and both are in the imperative mood. These words were spoken to a woman taken in the act of adultery. She had been brought to Jesus by the scribes and Pharisees, who were attempting to lay a snare before Him. The law of Moses commanded that such should be stoned. If Jesus declared the law, they would cause Him to lose His popularity; if He would acquit her, He would be guilty of breaking the law. At the moment, Jesus did neither. He simply asked that the one without sin cast the first stone. The crowd, convicted by their own conscience, left Him one by one but the woman remained.

The fact that this woman voluntarily remained with Christ proved her sincerity. She was willing to recognize her guilt before God and men. She had no reason to leave. Christ had something which was to satisfy the need of her sinful heart. She resigned herself to His mercy, fully recognizing His judgment as equity.

For Every Sin of Every Sinner

Jesus did not bring condemnation upon this woman, for she manifested a penitent attitude. Christ came into the world to save sinners. He did not come that the world might have life. Before Christ it is our attitude toward our sin that condemns us, for He is the propitiation for our sins and for the sins of the whole world. His blood shed upon the cross of Calvary was for every sin of every sinner. In His conversation with Nicodemus, Jesus said, "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." Souls are condemned because they reject Jesus Christ. Sin is not overlooked but forgiveness is always offered.

If We Agree With God . . .

Many Bible students have difficulty harmonizing this passage of Scripture with the whole tenor of the Bible because of Jesus' attitude toward this adulterous woman. Justification must always precede sanctification. But Jesus pronounced acquittal to the woman in the words, "Neither do I condemn thee." She was free after that pronouncement. Then He added, "Go, and sin no more." No one can live a holy life until he has experienced the forgiveness of sins. It is useless to tell one to sin no more until he is free from transgressions of the past. But Jesus did pronounce acquittal prior to these words. As in the case of the adulterous woman at the well, Jesus saw the heart and life of this sinful woman. Her penitent attitude became an object of His compassion. Once she confessed her sin and received pardon, she was prepared for further command to go and sin no more. Never can we expect to be free of the power of sin in our lives until we have been freed from its guilt. Perhaps many people never enjoy victorious Christian living because they haven't confessed to God all past sins. "If we confess our sins," John says, "he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." A more literal interpretation would be, "If we agree with God concerning our sins." We must see our sinfulness as God sees it. This woman saw her sinful condition and willingly agreed with Christ concerning it.

Absolutely Inseparable

While justification must precede sancification, the fact is equally essential that sancification must follow justification. The two are absolutely inseparable. The modern trend in evangelism is to stress the need of justification and to say little or nothing of the life which must follow. The grace of sanctification is the fruit of the grace of justification. We are saved by grace through faith, but we are His workmanship created in Christ Jesus unto good works. Paul wrote, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." Therefore, if one is truly in Christ, justified, he is in Christ made a new creation.

God's requirements are just as rigid under grace as they were under law. Peter, in writing to the early Christian converts, calls attention to the moral law, "Be ye holy; for I am holy," and enjoins them to "Be holy as the One who has called them is holy." The exhortation to the Hebrews admonishes peace and holiness without which no man shall see the Lord. No passage of the Scriptures gives room for laxity in Christian living and conduct.

A Word of God

Sanctification requires a work of God. The help of God is required to keep the law. The law failed in that it was so weak through the flesh; therefore, God sent His Son into the world that we might have life through Him. In justification we have His righteousness upon us, but in sanctification, we have His righteousness in

To accept Christ is to accept Him completely. If we accept His work for us, we must accept His work in us. Accepting Him is not merely giving assent to a certain creed or to certain historical facts, but it is the reception of the living Christ within us, along with the acceptance of all that the Scriptures say that He is and teaches.

In Cuauhtemoc

It is Two O'clock in the Morning--

by Katherine Linscheid

IT IS two o'clock in the morning. Our little five-day-old Mexican baby has just been fed and the hospital is quiet again. This baby's mother arrived from the direction of the "sierra" a day ago with a severe hemorrhage. The child looks like one would expect with its long black hair and little red face.

Our MCC unit moved to the new government hospital of the state of Chihuahua in Cuauhtemoc on April 3. It is an immense building and a striking contrasting to our ten-bed hospital which had been converted from an ordinary home into a temporary station of assistance. Our small hospital was in service almost a year instead of a few months as had first been expected.

Our city is surrounded by a strange combination of plains and short chains of mountains that rise abruptly out of otherwise apparently level country. To the east these mountains have a dry burnt look and the farther west you travel the more verdant they become, possessing scenery that rivals any we possess farther north.

Then Came the Mennonites . . .

Cuauhtemoc lies directly at the foot of one of these mountain chains. It is a dirty, dusty, noisy frontier town. Twenty years ago it boasted only seven forlorn adobe houses and sitting wearily along the railroad track to Creel. The people of Cusi, a prosperous mining town several miles south, looked with disdain at this little spot. Then came the Mennonites, intrigued by the farming potentialities of the plains; and, Cuauhtemoc grew to contain 8,000 people. Cusi became a ghost town. Its moldering ruins hold a strange fascination but little life.

Against this background the Mennonite Central Committee works. For a great part we have done hospital work, but some of our members have also made rich friendships through teaching English in the secondary schools and in night classes. Similarly, since these are a musical people, they have eagerly taken music lessons.

As the Dog Population Bayed its Protest

Medical work in connection with the seven practicing doctors has brought strange contacts with the common people. My first night on night duty with one of our registered nurses was a hectic one for me. Blissfully ready for sleep I made my way to one of the hospital beds only to be interrupted by a loud clatter at the door. Upon peering out we discovered a company of men one of whom had received a terrible blow on the head from a misdirected log in a saw mill. We let him in and I went out into the night. As the dog population of Cuauhtemoc bayed its mournful protest, I shakily started our rickety ambulance and went for the doctor. Discussing this patient later that night the nurse and I decided that greater men than he would very probably not have pulled through at home. In any number of instances these people seemed to show an unusual amount of resistance and stolidness to physical abuse and pain.

The Gun for Peace—the Bottle for Comfort

Being a frontier town many persons rely upon the gun for peace and the bottle for comfort. This violently potential mixture oftentimes explodes, touched off by a sudden outburst of anger. In our small hospital, closer to the center of town than the new one, we never knew what would confront us as we opened the door after the emergency bell had given its air-rending cry. It might be a mother in labor pains, a poor, stabbed, Tarahumari Indian, or a man riddled with bullets. On paper this sounds ominous and formidable, but it is undoubtedly not too strong a contrast to what takes place in some of our large cities. Then too, God always seemed very close and perhaps He seemed even closer to us in our sorrow for persons too poverty-stricken for good medical care, and for those who had spent time in riotous living.

This presents the more sordid side of Cuauhtemoc but all this is present in any place in the world rife with self-love and ignorance. This pueblo also has its lovely and thoughtful people, and the unit has made many friends it will not soon forget.

Our desire here has been to make our lives a living parable. We are forbidden by law to speak of the great Guide and Director of our lives. As the sower went out to sow, we have tried to sow His word with deeds of love and understanding, always keeping in mind the words of the man who said, in effect: take care how you conduct your lives for you may be the only Bible some people will ever read. We pray and hope that they may read of Him through us and then continue to read from the real source of Life.

> Our desire here has been to make our lives a living parable.

It is Hard to Understand

by Jacob H. Janzen

I would like to begin my article with hearty thanks to all those to whom I owe gratitude, of whom there are many.

First of all is God Almighty to whom I cannot be grateful enough for having remained the Almighty God although people have done their best to transform Him for me into a morose tyrant or to dilute Him into a mere psychological concept. As far as I am concerned, He is and remains the Almighty God, the Heavenly Father who provides for me, who loves me, who knows me, and calls me by name. He is ever near me in Christ Jesus, through His Holy Spirit and He provides for me.

He provides for me through good people, and there are two sides to this. The bright side is that experience reveals that there are in this evil world many more good people than one might think, who are ready to lend a hand to the Lord and be His helpers in service to poor, needy humanity. Lately, as I have become increasingly dependent on others, I have often been moved to gratitude because we mortals are not at all compelled to hate and to contend but are permitted to love one another. And love sanctifies. The gates to salvation are wide open to us here on earth because we do not absolutely have to hate an enemy, but may love all, leaving it to the Lord to deal with evil men.

> . . . And yet it is hard to understand why someone who has run his own business all his life and has been able to lay by money through his honest physical or mental labor should now have to care for the aged while people like us (ministers and missionaries) are dependent on compassion and charity. When charitable gifts smack of alms, the bread of charity becomes bitter.

This Drawback

But being helped by others has this drawback that it is usually very humiliating, and I have often prayed to God to deal with me as He has with so many others, for instance, to train me to be a skillful author, to allow me to write a best seller and thus acquire a large bank account on which I could draw for support, without always having to accept everything from compassion and charity.

But the Lord who has supplied me well with all my needs, has completely denied my request for money with which to secure my future. When I momentarily need funds, I ask God for some and He usually directs me to people who are able to help me. Then I have to ask these people and they help me although they are under no obligations to do so.

Usually the Lord refers me to several people, some of whom help me while others refuse. Merely to make the requests is very humiliating and refusals are utterly depressing. But that seems to be the way it has to be, for the Lord never gives me anything in any other way. I didn't think that I was very proud, but I must have a marked tendency toward pride that causes the Lord to keep humiliating me, and whenever I am unwilling to submit and recognize that there are people who are better and richer than I, the Lord simply keeps me in suspense until I become humble and a beggar again, as God has ordained for all my vanity and pride.

Not the Only One

Often it depresses me greatly to be such a poor business man and never to live on truly earned income. But on this trip which the Lord has again allowed me to make, I find that I am not the only one of whom this is true. My brethren in Christ would probably resent being mentioned by name and therefore I shall not do so. But I do want to speak about them briefly.

There is a laborer in the vineyard of the Lord who, in addition to widespread pulpit activity, has wisely administered many congregational and Conference funds with great blessing, and never has been accused of deceit, never has been under the slightest suspicion of wrongdoing. Now he is old and ill, he has been unable to save anything and his well-to-do children and relatives are providing for him. Happy they who have such relatives! But are the latter obligated to assume the care of the aged who have rendered a lifetime of universal service without having been able to save anything for themselves and who will certainly bequeath nothing when they die?

When Charitable Gifts Smack of Alms

The conferences and congregations, to be sure, are doing their share to help this man, blessed of the Lord. But no one owes him anything, he does not feel that he is living on his earnings. Merely charity. There is something even in this situation that is lovely and eases the mind. And yet it is hard to understand why someone who has run his own business all his life and has been able to lay by money through his honest physical or mental labor should now have to care for the aged while people like us are dependent on compassion and charity. When charitable gifts smack of alms, the bread of charity becomes bitter.

Not Even Charitable Support

And so it goes, not only with the above mentioned very deserving man, but also with many others. Some who have held less obvious but just as responsible and difficult positions do not even get charitable support now from conferences and congregations. What is to become of them? Will they not some day appear against us when the Lord will demand an accounting of our stewardship?

The above laborer in the vineyard of the Lord, in addition to many others, including myself, is too old to join the pension plan which the General Conference

Handbook To The Mennonite Hymnary

Those who love church music will be glad to hear of the recent release of the Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary, by Lester Hostetler.

This well-designed, 465-page book, written by a minister in the Mennonite General Conference Church, is released by the Conference Board of Publications.

As Reverend Lester Hostetler remarks in his preface, the book was written "to serve as a companion to the Mennonite Hymnary. It seeks to explain, as far as possible, the origin of the words and music of every hymn in the Hymnary."

The Handbook does considerably more.

Those who know and use the Hymnary in their homes and churches will learn that the Hymnary is an outstanding collection of hymns from the twenty centuries of Christian music. The hymns are taken from all of the major church denominations, Catholic and Protestant; drawn from the Old Testament and Apostolic Christianity, Reformation and revival groups, as well as American hymnody.

Thus the Handbook becomes a comment on the history of our Christian hymns. In Reverend Hostetler's introduction, he devotes almost forty pages to such a resumé and study of the hymn movement in history.

In about half a page, Reverend Hostetler gives to each hymn a remarkable amount of historical information. He draws out of their obscurity the origins of the music, often dating back to the Dark Ages and the first centuries of the church, or the troublesome times of the reformation. He clarifies some of the legends and confusion that surround many of our best-loved church lyrics. He fastens upon the lives of the composers of music and writers of lyrics, brings them forward into our own day with understanding.

From his story-telling, his research, his selection of authentic and plausible material, we come to the deeper appreciation in deeper understanding of the men and women and the times that created our music.

One of the important features, often neglected and here an integral part of his work, is his indexing. The thorough cross references to scriptural texts, metrical psalms, composers and sources of tunes, authors, translators, and sources of lyrics, and first lines of lyrics—all of these cross references make the Handbook, and thus the Hymnary, a useful help to our religious life.

Lester Hostetler

The index becomes a small concordance to the Mennonite Hymnary.

In addition to the historical research, Hostetler draws upon his thirty years of pastorship. He makes suggestions for uses of hymns for home worship, programs, and seasons of the church year.

Although the Handbook was intended primarily as a guide to Mennonite hymnody, its value does not end here. Good hymnody is not exclusively denominational, but draws from many sources. Those of other Communions interested in the hymnody of the church will find his book useful.

Although Reverend Hostetler does not pretend to have exhausted his subject, he has none-the-less verified and authenticated his material by countless references and comparisons to findings of scholars in the field.

Throughout his book the theme persists from Saint Paul: "I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also."

Reverend Hostetler approached his task, twenty years ago, with caution and humility as well as with considerable preparation. He knows the pastorate, having served communities in Sugar Creek, Ohio; Upland, California; and now, North Newton, Kansas in the Bethel College Church.

He was educated at the Goshen Academy and Goshen College; he graduated from the Union Theological Seminary, and studied at the Oberlin School of Theology.

He served for a time as editor of the Christian Exponent, and for many years contributed to the Mennonite Adult Sunday School Quarterly.

He studied music and hymnology in college and seminary, and in addition to the work of the pastorate, taught music classes in public schools and churches, and for a number of years directed community oratorio societies. He is a member of the Hymn Society of America.

The Handbook has been modestly priced at $3.00, and is on sale in Conference bookstores in Newton, Kansas; Berne, Indiana; and Rosthern, Saskatchewan, Canada; and college bookstores. Agreements have been made between the publisher and the young peoples' societies for the sale of the book to support the local young peoples' projects.—Ralph Bargen.

IT IS HARD TO UNDERSTAND . . . from page 7

of Mennonites of North America has adopted (1947) for the congregations and their preachers, and I am too uninformed to explain the business aspects of the plan. But I have met several persons of experience who are already profiting by it and believe that this old-age pension for ministers is the cheapest and best that can be obtained today.

Without Misgiving or Distress

Wouldn't it be a good thing for every congregation to take a good look at this plan and come to an understanding of it? In this way an old-age pension plan could be created for many a minister which he could accept without misgivings or distress, and which would not have the bitter after-taste of alms. And the congregation would have the lovely feeling of having dealt with beloved and honored teachers in accordance with the dictates of conscience.

I personally would like herewith to thank my dear home congregation, my conference and my good friends for helping me without making it difficult to accept their help. They are under no obligations, yet they do their best for me. May they be rewarded by God who for His part provides me with sufficient humiliation to keep me from developing excessive vain pride.

us. In the finished work on Calvary, Christ destroyed the works of the devil. He not only atoned for our sins which are past, but He broke the power of sin over us, thereby making it possible for us to obey the command, "Sin no more."

Not Merely Giving Assent

In the Epistle of First John, we are given a number of tests by which we may know that we have eternal life. A number of these have to do with the character of our lives. For instance, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." We know that we know Him if we keep the commandments which He has given. We know that we are of God if we love Him and do not have the love of the world in our hearts, for to love the world is not to love God. Christian living is evidence of our standing before God. John says that he that is born of God cannot sin because he is begotten of God and His seed remaineth in him so that he cannot sin. Holiness begets holiness just as love begets love. To accept Christ is to accept Him completely. If we accept His work for us, we must accept His work in us. Accepting Him is not merely giving assent to a certain creed or to certain historical facts, but it is the reception of the living Christ within us, along with the acceptance of all that the Scriptures say that He is and teaches.

In Romans 6, Paul teaches that in accepting Christ, we have been crucified with Him. We cannot receive Him without receiving Him in this way. Our old man is crucified with Him that the body of sin might be destroyed, or as a more literal translation might be, the body of sin is made inoperative. Our carnal natures are put out of business in our regeneration experience. When a business firm is put out of business, it is out of business until someone puts it back into business again. The same is true of our sinful desires. Christ has put them out of business, and they can only be used to follow sinful pursuits as we consent to sin. We must remember that our old sinful nature is not eradicated. It still exists and it must be kept inoperative. It must be suppressed. The Apostle Paul testified, "I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection." It will require conscious effort on the part of every one of us to mortify the deeds of the flesh.

Too many professing Chritians are ignoring this important command. If we are Christians, we cannot knowingly and habitually sin. In our baptismal vows we promised to forsake our carnal wills and desires, and by the grace of God and the aid of the Holy Spirit to give ourselves to Christ and the teachings of His Word. Have we been true to our promise?" "Go, and sin no more." "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh." (Gal. 5:16). Reprinted Gospel Herald

SMUCKER JOINS MENNONITE STAFF

Rev. Don E. Smucker, widely known throughout the conference as a lecturer, retreat leader and Professor at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, has accepted the appointment as Associate Editor of the Mennonite; he will serve on the Board of Associate Editors with Lester Hostetler, W. F. Unruh, and David C. Wedel. The Associate Editors assist the Editor with the editorial work—including such tasks as editorial writing. Rev. Smucker fills the vacancy on the Board of Associate Editors left by the Acting Editor who formerly served in that capacity.

Negroes And The Mennonites . . . Continued from p. 4

Negro Mennonite church in Chicago now has forty-six members, with Mr. and Mrs. James Lark in charge. Brother Lark as an ordained Mennonite Negro minister has been invited to preach in many Mennonite churches where he has won the friendship of thousands and has created a new interest in our responsibility to members of his race.

Here and there, however, in this conference as well as in other branches of the Mennonite church one hears rumblings of discontent with this new interracial emphasis. Here and there in recent years incidents have occurred that cause us to hang our heads in shame. Although Mennonites have made a creditable beginning in the area of race relations pioneering, it must be admitted that we have as yet not done very much in this needy field. If we expect to enjoy heaven in the presence of great numbers of Negroes, it is time that we learn how to enjoy their fellowship here and now.

Progress in Paraguay

Peter Dyck to Report

Java Next

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA.—Commenting on his recent observations in the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay, William T. Snyder reports that the people there have had some good rains recently and have begun to plant their vegetable gardens for this season. The recent cotton crop was not heavy; but, the kaffir yielded more than had been expected earlier, because several timely rains were received.

In Volendam Colony the older villages look surprisingly well established as far as homes and yards are concerned, but many of the newer villages are still in the process of clearing forest and have only begun in their development otherwise. One observes there many of the problems that go with pioneering, and yet the people are facing the work courageously and are showing good progress for their efforts.

In the Chaco the villages which were established at about the same time showed similar development to that in Volendam. However the Chaco settlement covers a much greater area. Some pests such as grasshoppers and ants have been especially destructive in the past year, affecting particularly several of the villages on the western end of the settlement. Efforts are being made to combat these pests, and in recent weeks, STICA, a government agency, sent a group of specialists there to study the problem.

Indirect contact was made with the group of Mennonites who had come from Canada and settled at Villa Rica. Some of these have again returned to Canada but there does not seem to be any movement among them to join the other settlements in Paraguay. Visitors from the other settlements are cordially received by the group at Villa Rica.

Churches to Hear Refugee Story

Peter and Elfrieda Dyck have been a part of our work with and in behalf of the Mennonite refugees even since it was first possible to begin this phase of the MCC program. They are now returning from Europe, terminating their foreign service.

During the summer months they will visit as many as possible of our Mennonite communities. During June they will be visiting Iowa, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, and Oregon. In July and the first part of August they will visit Canadian churches and spend some days at their home. During the latter part of August they will visit the Eastern United States area and come as far west as Minnesota.

The Dycks will be able to give a good picture of the refugee program as it has been carried on and also of the work that still lies ahead.

Personal Notes

Harry and Elva Gascho, Elvira Lehman, and Viola Amstutz returned from China on May 27. William Enns returned from Paraguay on May 29. Peter and Elfrieda Dyck and Margaret Janzen returned from Germany on June 2.

Relief in Java Possible

A survey of conditions in the area of the Mennonite Mission in Java has recently been made by Martin Schrag and William Yoder. They found there a definite need for clothing and medical assistance, and an invitation on the part of the Indonesian churches for the MCC to open a project. It is felt that the political situation is now such that work could be safely undertaken. Consideration is being given to this opportunity of service.

Federal Aid to States

The Senate has just passed the Taft bill, S.246, providing for 1300 million in financial aid to states for educational purposes. At this writing it is before the House Committee on Education and Labor. It would assure a minimum elementary and secondary education of $55 per child per year. At present some states spend an average of as little as $25 per child per year while others spend as high an average as $230. In effect, the high-income states would help the low-income states.

Would It Mean Federal Control?

The question most frequently raised is whether federal aid would not lead to federal control. In answer to this question, the bill specifically provides for state and local control. The states would administer the funds.

Will Catholic or Protestant Schools Benefit?

At present 18 states give state aid to Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish parochial schools for bus transportation, non-religious textbooks, and the like. Under the proposed law, these same states could use federal funds for parochial schools for these same purposes. Some Protestant groups want the bill amended to eliminate the possibility of any help to parochial schools; some Catholic groups want federal aid for parochial schools on the same basis as is provided for public schools. Amendments to achieve both these purposes were defeated in the Senate.

National Science Foundation

Another bill, which to date has received little consideration, would set up a National Science Foundation which would be concerned with granting scholarships and fellowships in many scientific fields.

Other Educational Bills

Several other bills from among the many before Congress are those providing for medical-education assistance, demonstration, public-library service, the school health bill, war equipment for colleges, scholarships abroad, and the like.

Are There Implications for the Church?

The Christian church is concerned about the best program of education for the youth of our country. Can this be achieved through increased local and state support, through federal aid, through building a system of private church schools, by a combination of these plans, or by still other means? The problem is worthy of the most serious study of Christian people.

Jottings

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Missionaries Alfred Habeggers, now from the Lame Deer, Montana, American Indian Mission Station, brought us the message and some reports of their mission work in word and pictures on the evening of May 25. Mrs. Habegger was dressed in typical Indian fashion. The Berean Bible Academy from Elbing, Kansas, brought us a program of songs, reading, and a short message on May 22; they love to sing. Our VBS closed May 20 and on the following Monday evening they gave us a sample of what they had learned.—Mrs. Arnold A. Plenert, Corr.

Deep Run Church Bedminster Pennsylvania: During the 100th anniversary of our church we were greatly inspired by the spiritual and very challenging messages brought by Rev. Russell Mast. our former pastor, and Rev. Howard Landes, a former son of the congregation. Dr. Elmer E. S. Johnson gave many historical accounts in his message, "A Mennonite Meeting in the Wilderness." Greetings were given by other former sons of the congregation and neighboring pastors.

—United Church, Wolf Point, Montana: This church is a result of the efforts of the Evangelization Committee of the NDC and of other interested men of God. We organized the church here less than a year ago with sixteen members. Since that time a church building has been erected. May 22 Rev. B. J. Nickel and Rev. M. M. Lehman were special speakers at the dedication and ordination services. Reverend Lehman is secretary of the Evangelization Committee of NDC and officiated at both services. Thank you for your prayers and contributions.—Lawrence Goerz, pastor.

—First Church, Richfield, Pennsylvania: May 25 seventeen of our members went to MCC Headquarters at Akron, Pennsylvania, and helped pack over 5,300 pair of children's stockings for European relief. Over 200 pounds of old and new relief clothing was also taken along to Ephrata. Stanley Shenk of New York Biblical Seminary was with us on May 29, preaching for the morning and evening services. Our building committee and church council are working towards the enlargement of our church and Sunday school rooms.—Mrs. Sheaffer, Corr.

—Hoffnungsau Church, Inman, Kansas: The church building is progressing nicely and has been completed far enough to use the basement for our services. May 22 the congregation gathered in the front of the church for a service of song, psalm reading, and prayer after which our pastor led the group into the basement. Missionary J. B. Ediger is back in the church after a period of illness. Reverend and Mrs. Ediger have retired after serving the Oklahoma Mission Station for forty years. The Happy Hour Sewing Circle rendered programs to three surrounding Homes for the Aged.—Mrs. Albert Ediger, Corr.

—Alexanderwohl Church, Goessel, Kansas: J. W. Warkentin of Hillsboro, Kansas, showed motion pictures of South America where he served under the MCC helping to settle displaced persons. At our child consecration service thirty children were consecrated.

—Meadow Church, Colby, Kansas: May 1 and 4 Martha Wall, missionary at Nigier French Africa, talked and showed slides. May 15 the five northwest churches at Hanston, Pawnee Rock, Ransom, Vona, and Meadow held a mission rally here. Missionary Albert Jantzen and Rev. B. H. Janzen were speakers with music from the various churches. May 26 the men's choir from Grace Bible Institute sang here. May 29 our choir went to Sublette to attend the song festival. The sewing society held an all-day meeting June 1 when officers for the coming year were elected.—Mrs. Peter J. Franz, Corr.

—Salem-Zion Church, Freeman, South Dakota: Three out of five couples were able to observe their fiftieth wedding anniversary on May 25. They were: Mr. and Mrs. John C. Mueller, Mr. and Mrs. John D. Kaufman and Mr. and Mrs. Peter J. Schrag. A large crowd attended the farewell services for Reverend J. J. Regier on Sunday afternoon, May 29. Reverend Edmund J. Miller, President of Freeman Junior College will serve our church until the arrival of Reverend Russell Mast about September 1. The wedding of Verlyn Schrag to Silas Waltner will take place on June 17.—Mrs. Robert Graber, Corr.

—New Hopedale Church, Meno, Oklahoma: Mrs. Herbert Schmidt spoke the morning of May 15 and in the evening showing slides and speaking on Paraguay. Baccalaureate sermon of the Oklahoma Bible Academy was given May 22 by Reverend Alvin J. Regier to a class of fifteen seniors. The commencement service was held May 27. Reverend Howard Nyce, pastor of the Mennonite Church at Pretty Prairie, Kansas, spoke on "Faithfulness." Reverend and Mrs. Arnold Epp and girls were here May 30. Reverend Epp spoke in the evening after which an evening of fellowship and refreshments were enjoyed by all at the Oklahoma Bible Academy basement. —Corr.

—First Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: The Bethel College Fellowship drive totaled $715.

—First Church, Geary, Oklahoma: This has been a very blessed spring for our church. From April 24 through 29 we had adult Bible study with Reverend Lester Hostettler as instructor. From May 2-13 we had our Vacation Bible School. The preschool age children met from 9:30 to 11:30 in the morning. The school-age group met from 7:00 to 9:00 in the evening. We had a total enrollment of 45 children, which represented six denominations. We thank the Lord for the wonderful time we had. The instructors for the Vacation Bible School were Mrs. Helen Lehmen and Reverend and Mrs. A. H. Peters. The ladies of the church mended and prepared 550 articles for relief, which weighed a total of 310 pounds.—Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." was the scripture passage read to begin our children's day program June 5. A fine program was rendered by both children and grownups, and enjoyed by all. Lunch was served in the dining hall in Hydro.—Corr.

Into the Beyond

JOHANN SCHMIDT, aged 95, passed away May 16. He was a member of the Alexanderwohl Church in Goessel, Kansas. He had the joy of celebrating with Mrs. Schmidt their 65th wedding anniversary.

JACOB AMSTUTZ, Columbus, Ohio, a member of the Ebenezer Mennonite church, was born March 31, 1871, and died May 26, 1949.

MRS. ANNA SPALLINGER, Findlay, Ohio, member of the Ebenezer Mennonite church, was born November 15, 1867, and died May 22, 1949.

GUSTAV W. RUTH, Trenton, Illinois, member of the First Mennonite Church, Summerfield, Illinois, was born August 24, 1878, and died May 30, 1949.

ROCKFORD H. BORMAN, Freeman, South Dakota, was a member of the Bethany Mennonite Church in Freeman, South Dakota. He was born September 7, 1910 and died May 31, 1949.

Inasmuch As Unto the Least of These

The Mennonites, who represent about one-tenth of one per cent of America, are sending approximately fifty per cent of the relief goods of private agencies to Germany.

by John Howard Yoder

The following article is a presentation of the reasons for the Mennonite interest in relief work as presented by Mr. Yoder, former M.C.C. relief worker, in Motive magazine, a Methodist student magazine.

To begin with its philosophy is scarcely an adequate approach to understanding Christian philanthropy. Kindness, especially to the degree that its practice is prevalent among whole groups of people, is rather emotional than rational in its genesis; springs rather from a Christian attitude of conscience than from an explicitly reasoned set of ethical premises.

Such a phenomenon has been the relief activity of America's Mennonites. In every phase of its history, from famine relief in Russia during the twenties, to Civilian Public Service during World War II, the work of the Mennonite Central Committee has been a series of immediate responses to obvious but largely unforeseen needs. Yet there lies behind its achievements a unity of purpose whose appearance is anything but hap-hazard; and it is that purpose, seldom stated, yet ceaselessly applied, that gives significance to the feeding of a few million hungry Europeans, or to hookworm eradication in the southern United States, or to refugee settlement in Paraguay.

The old word for it is Gospel; and we have found no better explanation of our purpose than to call it evangelism. If such terminology should sound archaic, we are not surprised, for we count ourselves among the unashamed orthodox. In the fruits of the last century of untrammeled religious thought, we find no more adequate ethical ultimate than the will of a sovereign God, no better expression for what is wrong with the world than sin, and no more effective remedy than the love of God in Christ Jesus. That the traditional Christian doctrines exhaust the meaning of the metaphysical realities involved, or that they have been adequately related to contemporary needs, we have not the shallow boldness to claim, yet such qualifications cannot destroy their ultimate validity.

That it has been possible to hold such a conservative doctrinal position without descending to ranting fundamentalism, and conversely, to minister to the world's physical needs without evaporating into the social sweetness-and-light of liberalism, is due to a religious-ethical synthesis that is ours through the providence of inheritance. Accident assigned to us as ancestors, by blood and by spirit, the Anabaptists of the sixteenth century. Far before their time, they pioneered in communal living, missions, separation of church and state, pacifism; in fact, they were so radically consistent about deriving their ethics from the New Testament that thousands of them died at the hands of Protestants and Catholics alike.

The central emphasis which the Anabaptists derived from their fresh study of the New Testament can best be understood in contrast to the incomplete Christianities which then enjoyed the support of government. While Luther was defining salvation as an experience of grace apart from works, Rome, as the reception of grace through works, and Calvin, as the irresistible election of God, the Anabaptists refused to separate vocation, belief, and behavior as disparate elements, and thus needed no system to relate them. Salvation was simply the total life process of the Christian in God, of which conversion is only the beginning. Christian behavior is then neither adiaphoron nor prerequisite to grace, but simply the way of foreign Christian acts; and he can make no compromise with the will of the state or with his own economic well-being without denying his very definition of Christianity. They called it WANDEL—"discipleship"; inseparable belief, obedience unto death, and proclamation; both opportunity and obligation; the response to God's invitation and command to participate in his saving will for the world, and in that process to be saved oneself.

The persecution involved in their revolutionary behavior was no surprise to them, for isolation and suffering must normally fall the lot of those whose beliefs give them cause to be different. As necessarily involved in separation, even suffering becomes a part of the evangel we proclaim; for our willingness to pay its price is the only final proof that we ourselves accept the message we propagate. "For even here-unto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps."

Such concepts are no longer new. We've heard this before, but it was as startling then when applied as it would be now. That its familiarity in contemporary thinking is not casually derived from the Anabaptist example is due partly to consistent misrepresentation by state-church historians who couldn't tolerate disagreement with the human clarity of their legislated creed, partly to persecution which drove its survivors into the isolated upland valleys of Switzerland, partly to the desire for survival which let them be driven, and partly to the pietism which came as a friend and induced the radicals to exchange their birthright of life for a mess of cozy "experience."

. . . We are theists with no apology, and we find nothing so obsolescent about building our ethics upon the direct will of God. Whether we ascertain His will aright, we are ever ready to discuss; but once having decided that the New Testament teaches peace, relief, and preaching, we no longer consider ourselves at liberty to debate whether to obey simply because the commanded action appears unlikely to achieve its apparent (to the pragmatist) end. For, getting the hungry fed, perhaps, is not all that God desires. Perhaps the act itself of feeding, or praying, or loving, is just as important as is the full stomach, or the answered petition, or the lubricated society.

It is this radically complete view of the meaning of the Gospel in life, the rediscovery of which forms the ground and the guide of contemporary relief activity. If the Christian cannot separate belief and life, then he can preserve neither without the other. We make man no more than livestock if we attempt to feed only his body, and we inexcusably limit the meaning of the love of God if we proclaim that he will forgive without demonstrating that he also provides.

The proclamation of such a unitive evangel by means of material relief raises unique problems, for that method of distribution which most efficiently dispenses the goods themselves is not necessarily most effective in demonstrating that the label, "In The Name of Christ," which appears on every item is a significant part of the gift. The suit we give a man must be "a suit with a plus," and if in dealing with large numbers of both suits and people we come to think of them as digits, then our zeal for service will have defeated its own purpose. The essential task involved in Christian relief is thus the solution of a problem of spiritual logistics; and if the Mennonite Central Committee has achieved anything in the face of the world's need, it is not shown by statistics about meals distributed or giving per capita, but by the testimony of the recipients that the gift was to them an evangelistic demonstration of the provident love of God.

Although thus inseparable from the whole body of historic Mennonite faith, our philosophy of relief is of course especially related to our position as pacifist, for there would be little point in refusing to kill our enemies if we were willing to let them starve. We should have scant excuse to refuse the wartime service demanded by our society, were not that refusal balanced with a voluntary peace-making contribution to reaffirm the good faith of our conscientious objection. This conviction that undoing the effects of war is indivisible from unwillingness to cause them is nowhere more practically exemplified than in the fact that the three "historic peace churches" support the relief organizations most active in serving the needy without regard to race or religion or politics.

And what do we expect to achieve? Nothing earth-shaking; perhaps nothing even noticable in history. A quarter-million Mennonites would be stupid to expect their puny millions of dollars even to begin to banish from Europe the face of hunger. Yet to be dismayed by the appearance of futility would be to repudiate our entire purpose. For our work was not undertaken in any anticipation of success. We refuse to fight, yet with no expectation of stopping war; we preach in the face of the indications of history and psychology that we shall never get much closer to having everyone converted; we share our goods with no hope of ending economic centralization; and so we must feed the hungry regardless of whether we have grounds to expect that they will be filled.

The common reaction to such an attitude is quite understandable, for the common reactor is an EX ANTE pragmatist. His assent to the desirability of any action hinges upon the desirability of its end, and the "practicality," judged before the fact, of the means for attaining it; consequently, since the obvious purpose of feeding the hungry is to get them fed, and a few hundred tons of flour will do very little toward that end in all of Europe, why try so hard? Our answer is that we deny both the competence of human reason to judge clearly concerning ultimate ends, and the validity of practicality as an ethical standard, and cannot so far repudiate our principles as to attempt to prove them from pragmatic premises. We are theists with no apology, and we find nothing obsolescent about building our ethics upon the revealed will of God. Whether we ascertain his will aright, we are ever ready to discuss; but once having decided that the New Testament teaches peace, and relief, and preaching, we no longer consider ourselves at liberty to debate whether to obey, simply because the commanded action appears unlikely to achieve its apparent (to the pragmatist) end. For, getting the hungry fed, perhaps, is not all that God desires. Perhaps the act itself of feeding, or praying, or loving, is just as important to him as is the full stomach, or the answered petition, or the lubricated society.

When a historian says of sixteenth-century Anabaptist material aid, "They did not expect and did not work for any permanent alleviation of social ill or evil except in so far as people become followers of Jesus," he simply restates the theistic orientation of the Mennonite interpretation of Christian ethics. Its social benefits are not the ground of our moral obligation, nor our failures its disproof, nor our achievements its vindication. "WE HAVE THIS TREASURE IN EARTHEN VESSELS, THAT THE EXCELLENCY OF THE POWER MAY BE OF GOD, AND NOT OF US." . . . . ALWAYS ABOUNDING IN THE WORK OF THE LORD, FORASMUCH AS YE KNOW THAT YOUR LABOR IS NOT IN VAIN IN THE LORD. NOW CONCERNING THE COLLECTION . . . ."—Motive Magazine, by permission

The Oregon Retreat In The Cascade Mountains

Purpose: The aim of the Retreat is to make possible a vital experience with God, to provide Christian fellowship and recreation to foster spiritual growth, and to challenge retreaters to consecrated Christian living.

Theme: "For me to live is Christ." Phil. 1:21a

The Oregon Young People's Retreat was held at Trout Creek Camp in August of 1948. This camp has been the site of the Oregon Retreats for the last three years, and as usual the week spent there was not a disappointment to any of the 75 young people in attendance. The camp itself is located in the Cascade Mountains about 25 miles east of Portland. Being nestled in the trees it offers excellent opportunity for hikes as well as the facilities for swimming, softball, volley ball, and many other sports and games.

Before the waking bell rings each morning, a prayer meeting is held for all who are interested in attending. The larger part of the group were present almost every morning to start the day with prayer and intercession for the speakers, leaders and all who were in camp.

Chapel was held every morning before breakfast. These services were in charge of the individual churches represented. During the morning three classes were held. There were separate classes for the high-school and the college-age groups; these were taught by Rev. Clyde Dirks and Rev. W. A. Regier respectively. The subjects for these classes were "Making God's Standard Practical."

It was our privilege to have Rev. George Kopper of Monroe, Wash. as our guest speaker. He taught on the subjects "The Miracle of Modern Missions," for the combined class. The third class of the morning was the music class under the direction of Burt Russell. Certainly this class was a blessing and a joy to each of us, for what Christian young person does not love to sing of the One in whom he puts his trust?

The afternoons were spent in recreation and fellowship mostly centered around the swimming pool or the ball diamond. After the supper dishes were done, we enjoyed the Fellowship Hour which held a different activity every evening. It was during this time that we held planned hikes, "stunt nite," slides of Europe, and various other forms of recreation.

The camp-fire service closed the day; it was under the direction of Rev. Kopper. During this hour the challenge of salvation and consecration was presented to us in a very direct and effective way. As a result of the Bible teaching in the classes and evening services five young people found Christ as Savior and all who knew Him were caused to love Him more and long to serve Him better. Several dedicated their lives to Him for the first time.

All who attend our camps realize that the emphasis is placed on the spiritual aspect of the retreat instead of the recreational. Each one who spent time with us there would agree that the purpose of the retreat was a reality in the lives of the young people.

Why I Am a C.O.

By Allen Dale Kaufman, Voluntary service worker

Probably the most important reason I'm a C.O. is because of my training in the home. It is very important; had it not been for that which my parents drilled into me, I might not be here.

If you'll take a little for granted, it boils down to common sense. Wars and frictions have occurred time and time again through history, but have accomplished (as far as humanity is concerned) NOTHING.

God is a God of love, but He is also a God of wrath; in Old Testament times He commanded, in some cases, all things to be destroyed, but only because the people disobeyed His will. God led the prophets to conclusions that turned out to be some very bloody affairs. It was not God's will that man take these things into his own hands. "Vengeance is Mine; I will repay . . . "

God is truly a God of love. He sent His Son to die for the iniquity of us so-called "human beings." Christ said, "You have heard it said . . . (this way) . . . but I say unto you . . ." Christ's basic teaching, and the teaching of His followers after He left, was love for fellow men. Love thine enemy; love thy neighbor. How can we kill when we know that we were basically taught to LOVE? It doesn't work. In order to kill we must hate. "He that hateth his brother is a murderer."

The taking of another man's life—by lawful or unlawful means—is to me the worst thing a person can do. Christ said, "If a man smite thee on thy right cheek turn to him the other also." If you don't like it, stop and think: "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord." Kindness and love are like a hub in the wheel of an old wagon; all these things tie into and lead to the center. Also "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with GOOD"! I believe that statement says much more than we really think; but if all people would have some understanding of it, this world would be a better place in which to live. The only way this can be done is by contact from the outside, and I think it is up to not only preachers and missionaries but also to us. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations. Those people on the outside need education, but in order to have that it must be backed with love, kindness, and the Word of God.

Peaceful methods of settling national frictions have

Possibilities for Voluntary Service

By Elmer W. Ediger, director M.C.C. Voluntary Service

Suppose you had the responsibility of finding a place to invest the time, energy, and potentialities of 50 to 100 young men and women. What types of service and what places would you suggest? Voluntary Service operates on two observations. First, that there are many needy people in this world, having needs both physical and spiritual. Second, our Christian homes, communities, and churches are bringing forth consecrated young Christians who want to respond to the love of God and to help people who are in need. V. S. aims to unite these two. As we examine the needs about us in the world, we note many different types. The most obvious and dramatic are those which are emergencies caused by war, floods, etc. Then there are needs which are continuing, to which the real answer is not relief, but rehabilitation, helping people to establish themselves. The third general type would be that of "danger" areas, where it is not so much a matter of repairing but preventing some of the things that might happen. For example, there are young children who live in poor areas, who perhaps can be kept from lives of crime by useful activities and wholesome play.

We want to supply the present units with workers and replacements, but we are also on the lookout for new projects. It is somewhat hazardous to mention these for fear that they will be taken as definite possibilities; however, we do want to share with you some thinking and planning that is being done.

1. Under the Federal Bureau of Prisons, we may be opening a small unit to work in a training school for delinquent boys between the ages of 15 and 18. The location has not yet been determined. It may be Washington, D. C., Denver, Colorado, or elsewhere. Young men may be used as assistants in the vocational shops of mechanics, electricity, woodworking, laundry, and assisting the coach in recreation.

2. Industrial Home School in Washingtn, D. C., for children under the age of 14, who do not fit into a regular school home pattern, who are considered problem children is another possibility. Here we can utilize perhaps six young men and women, if other obstacles such as housing can be overcome.

3. In Paraguay, under the Institute of Inter American Affairs, we may place two young men with mechanical and general farm ability, who will assist on the experimental ranch of the Co-operative Endeavor of the U.S. and Paraguay government. If this project is successful, there is a possibility for expansion in Paraguay and other Latin American countries. Such would be financed by the government.

4. Los Angeles T.B. sanatorium is a high class institution needing a higher class help. They are very eager to have our assistance. Opportunities will be available as regular attendants on the floor for those who are above 21, and for others in the library, recreation, on the grounds, etc.

5. We are exploring the area of Indian Reservation work.

6. Soil Conservation Service is interested in the possibility of utilizing men in survey and tractor work. There are considerable obstacles left, however, before such might be considered further.

7. Boys' homes in Kansas, both Ellsworth, and Salina, have asked for volunteer help. These are small "boys' towns" operating under the Episcopal Church. Work would be that of helping in the farming, housekeeping, and in work with the boys.

We trust that these and our present service opportunities will challenge us to do our best. Some of us will be doing some work we have never done before but that is to be expected. Some of the work we may not like immediately, but firsthand seeing of needs are often appalling. The greater the evil and the diffi- overcome. We believe in a Christianity that has "teeth" culty we encounter, the greater power He has for us to in it for those who call themselves Christ's disciples. Let us take up our cross and follow Him. "He that loseth his life shall save it."

never been tried. Theoretically, it ought to work, but people believe more in might in terms of guns, air forces, tanks, etc. Love never fails in the settlement of human strife. It may take a little more initiative, but once you're started you have something.

Christ was the only perfect human to walk on this earth. He had pain, He had love, He had temptations, He had trials, and He had to die. He is the most perfect example we have to follow; there are things we don't understand, but we must have faith in Him and look to Him for guidance. It is evident that He would be very dissatisfied if I were to destroy or to kill a person; He just isn't that way. He hung on the cross when at the bat of an eye He could have done away with His killers, but He died in the most humiliating way devised by man. In such a case I couldn't have gone I-A or I-AO.

Open Additional Voluntary Service Units

Plans have been made for opening three additional summer Voluntary Service Units. Fifteen to twenty young people will serve at the State Hospital at Greystone Park, N. J. Ten girls are to be assigned to the Vineland State School, N. J., for recreational therapy among the mentally deficient patients. Six to eight persons will serve at the Industrial Home School Annex, Washington, D. C. to carry on Bible School and recreation among the homeless and underprivilegd children cared for there.

In addition to this, the MCC office has made contacts for the establishment of two service units which are to be under the direction of individual conference groups.

Men at Work on Mental Hospital Farm in California

William Miller of Iowa City, Iowa and Joseph Beachy of Hutchinson, Kansas are working for about three months on the farm near Reedley, California, which is later to be used as a site for the Mennonite Mental Hospital. Also serving there are Lawrence Harder, for a one-year term, and Willard Hooge, Carl Derksen, Harold Pankratz and Vernon Friesen, each for a temporary period until the hospital unit in Los Angeles, to which they are assigned, is opened.

NEW YORK.—Church World Service is cooperating with CARE, the government approved, non-profit relief agency in a unique nationwide campaign which will provide millions of bars of badly needed soap for distribution overseas through regular Protestant and Eastern Orthodox church channels. In this campaign a bar of Swan soap will be sent to needy people overseas through Church World Service, for every two Swan soap wrappers collected by Protestant organizations and sent to Church World Service, CARE Soap Campaign, Boston 3, Massachusetts.

SPAIN.—Protestants going to worship have been the targets of rocks thrown by local citizens of San Sebastian, a town in northern Spain. Papers wrapped around the stones read: "Blessed by the Virgin! Down with Luther! Down with the Protestants!" The rock-throwing was apparently done without official sponsorship since the police still allow Protestants of San Sebastian to meet for services as usual.

RUSSIA.—"To put a stop to . . . speaking with tongues, in obscure foreign languages" at pentacostal prayer meetings is the reason Mr. N. A. Levindanto, a representative of the Union of Evangelicals and Baptists in the U.S.S.R., was sent to the Soviet Republic of Estonia. The Estonian Pentacostals assured Mr. Levindanto that henceforth there would be "no indulgence in speaking with tongues . . . . in Estonia."

NORMAN, OKLAHOMA. — Nine students from the University of Oklahoma have volunteered to reduce their daily consumption on calories to focus attention on the low eating standards of European students. The 1,030 calorie diet is being followed in order to bring other students to realize the hardships experienced by students in Europe and to push the drive for the world service fund on the campus.

ADDIS ABABA, ETHIOPIA. — three weeks as a period of prayer for Abunds Basilios, head of the Ethiopian Coptic Church, has designated the next three weeks as a period of prayer for the success of the sessions of the United Nations General Assembly at Lake Success, New York.

LONDON.—More than a million letters are being sent by Bishop John W. C. Wand to Londoners asking them to cooperate in a "Mission to London" to be conducted by Church of England missionaries from May 14 to 29. Anglican Church bells in the city will ring for three hours on the opening day to start the evangelistic drive. The first week will be devoted to plain statements of the Christian faith.

DALLAS, TEXAS. — Four hundred and fifty-nine Southern Baptist churches from thirteen states and the District of Columbia have signed tentative applications for low power frequency modulation radio stations, it was announced here by Dr. R. Alton Reed, director of Radio activities for the Baptist General Convention of Texas.—United Evangelical Action

NEW YORK.—The dramatic new forty-minute sound film, "Answer For Anne," is now available to local churches at a rental price of $10. The story of the picture is built around the efforts of Anne, a high-school girl to fulfill a civics class assignment by discovering whether or not her fellow-towns-people are willing to take in displaced persons. It involves seeing her pastor who then tells her more about the displaced persons and their plight, and what the churches of this country are planning to do to help them.

PHILADELPHIA.—Plans are being made by the executive board of the United Lutheran church in America for widespread evangelical work in countries behind the iron curtain. Secretary of this church body said recently that Christians should work diligently to make the United Nations "a more effective world organization," and also that Lutheran missionaries and evangelical workers must support U. N., particularly in "countries which may be kept to international war or peace."

Their First Soap

BERLIN, GERMANY — Two tiny frauleins work up a lather with the first soap received in Berlin through the CARE soap drive. German children like these have never seen honest-to-goodness soap. Bob Hope, who saw their plight when he was abroad last year, is continuing to urge support of the CARE campaign on his radio show. The drive lasts till August 1, during which time Lever Brothers will donate one cake of soap for every two Swan wrappers sent to CARE, Boston 1, Massachusetts. CARE delivers the soap to the children overseas.

NEW YORK.—Roman Catholics are engaged in a growingly successful work among American Negroes. There are approximately 520 white Catholic Priests, thirty Brothers, and 1,900 Sisters devoting themselves entirely to Negro work in churches, schools, hospitals, and orphanages. In the United States there are 277 Catholic grammar schools for Negroes, sixty-one high schools, thirteen boarding schools, one nurses training school, one college, and one theoogical seminary, with a total enrollment of 58,294 pupils. There are 351 all-Negro Roman Catholic churches besides the thousands who attend mixed churches. There are twenty-two Negro Catholic Priests, fourteen Negro religious Brothers, and 540 Sisters of the Holy Family. —United Evangelical Action

ECUMENICAL VISION would seem to require that in our various publications as a Conference we begin to drop the denominational labels. In such a fine publication as the Mennonite Hymnary and its companion volume recently published the Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary we have volumes that would prob- “Mennonite.” Hymnbooks, above all, are an anomaly ably have a much wider sale and use but for the word when they have a denominational title; for hymns are the property of no one denomination. If we used only those hymns written by Mennonites, how poor we would be. On the other hand, if the Mennonite denomination has a responsibility with the other Peace Churches to call Christianity back from its “apostasy in repudiating love as the Alpha and Omega of the Gospel,” then the collection of hymns made with that concern in mind ought to be made available to the whole Church. One would hope that in any future revisions these valuable volumes may be known simply as The Hymnary and The Handbook to the Hymnary. This obviously is not a criticism of either. On the contrary, it is probably one way of giving our highest commendation.—JJE

INTERMARRIAGE WITH COLORED PEOPLE

A READER OF THE MENNONITE invites comments on three questions: (1) Can a white man, and notably Christian, consistently claim freedom from race discrimination if he still objects to intermarriage with colored people of any shade, because of color only? (2) Is race amalgamation among Christians contrary to the teaching of the New Testament? (3) Does “Dan Cupid,” the god of love, recognize a color line?

These are pertinent questions which anyone who professes to believe in the Christian doctrine of the equality of the races must be prepared to answer. There are many people who would like to see the negroes treated impartially and justly but they cannot bear the thought of inter-marriage. They will admit that the negro is a brother but do not wish ever to admit him into the family as a brother-in-law. If racial equality means intermarriage, they will have none of it. They insist on drawing a color line when it comes to the sacredness of family ties.

The three questions are really one question. They all pertain to marriage.

To begin with the last question, the answer seems to us an unequivocal “yes.” Dan Cupid does recognize a color line. If it were not so, there would be many more mixed marriages. There are numerous instances, as in schools and on mission compounds, where young people of two races are on the most friendly terms. They eat and play and work together, yet they do not marry, for they realize that the social consequences would be such as to preclude happiness in marriage.

The New Testament gives us no direct answer to Question 2. We are not told whether race amalgamation is right or wrong. The New Testament gives us general principles, and we are left to draw from these our own conclusions. We are told that God made of one blood all the peoples of the nations of the earth, that no race is “unclean”; and we are left to infer that there is no such thing as an inferior or a superior race. Modern science supports that view. All men are children of the same God and all are in need of the same Savior. To quote a great hymn,

> In Christ there is not East or West,
>   In Him no North or South
> But one great fellowship of love
>   Throughout the whole wide earth.

On the other hand, the New Testament has specific teachings concerning marriage and the ends for which it was ordained. It was ordained by God for the lifelong companionship, help, and comfort, which husband and wife ought to have of each other; for the continuance of the holy ordinance of family life, that children should be duly nurtured and trained; for the welfare of human society, which can be strong and happy only where the marriage bond is held in honor.

If a man and woman of different races will marry, having given due consideration of the ends for which marriage was ordained, who shall withstand them? But let them ponder well, before taking such a step, the solemn admonition of the marriage ceremony, that it is “not to be entered upon lightly or unadvisedly, but thoughtfully, reverently, and in the fear of God.” In rare cases mixed marriages have been known to have succeeded remarkably well. The race problem is not primarily the problem of marriage but of elemental social justice.

There are 13,000,000 negroes in the United States, a tenth of our population. They constitute our major domestic problem. Booker T. Washington used to say that the negro was the one immigrant who had been “invited” to come to this country. He is a part of us and yet he is made to feel that he does not belong. He is denied the freedom and equality of opportunity which the Christian teaching declares he should have. His grievance is not that he cannot intermarry with white people but that he is constantly submitted to humiliation. He is denied jobs, and privileges to enter the professions, and opportunities for advancement, solely on the basis of color. He resents it and often doubts whether the United States really cares for him, or his wife, or his children, or the future of his race.

Our duty as Christians is to defend these elemental human rights. The Church must voice the dignity and value of human personality. The rights of colored people is not something granted them by white people; they are God given. Once we recognize that, God will grant us more light to deal with the perplexing problem of intermarriage.—LH

Christian Mental Hospitals

The Only Satisfactory Solution

by Arthur Jost

MENTAL illness can be dealt with most effectively when it is recognized and accepted as a sickness. Among the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches there is good interest in providing for the mentally ill "in the name of Christ." In presenting the need and the plan to our churches, several factors indicate that the time is ripe to initiate this work.

A Christian Obligation

First, the conviction is shared unanimously that the spiritual and physical welfare of our mentally-ill brethren and sisters should be the concern of us as Christians. Having registered this conviction, however, many questions of a very practical nature arise. "Do we have so many mentally ill as to justify a separate hospital? Can we afford to give this service? Do we have sufficiently trained personnel? Does the state institution prove inadequate?" Those of us who have surveyed the need and who are aware of the potential support, those of us who have worked and lived within our state institutions, feel that the answer to the above questions must be in the affirmative.

Conditions in one mental hospital

Second, the personal concern of many of the brethren and sisters in the church for the spiritual as well as physical well-being of their mentally-ill family members or friends is evident. This concern finds expression especially among those who have a first-hand knowledge of conditions as they exist in mental institutions and who have some evidence that their loved ones are not in a place of desirable spiritual and physical environment.

'Inside' Information

Third, the insight of many of our brethren and sisters into the conditions of our mental institutions is a motivant for their support of a church program. While it is true that many folks never find admission beyond the "visitors' ward" and form their opinions from a superficial examination, many others have had a closer view. Some may have been employed in such institutions while others may have been patients. Such groups give ready assent and support to a mental hospital program where Christian standards of treatment and care are maintained throughout.

The mental hospital program of the Mennonite Central Committee is designed to strive for the following objectives:

First, it is to provide for the mentally ill a loving, understanding, and sympatheticly Christian environment. As Christians and Mennonites we have become environment-conscious. For our youth we have to a certain extent provided the opportunity of a Christian environment through our church schools; for our brethren and sisters of the church we are constantly seeking a more effective ministry; for our older people we are providing hospitality and a wholesome environment for the twilight of life in our homes for the aged. For the oft-confused mind and the despairing spirit of the mentally ill, a Christian environment is of untold importance.

Protestants Not Classified

The relative isolation of our state institutions and the limited experience of dealing with mental patients has apparently discouraged the extension of the services of our churches and pastors to that area. A hospital superintendent of a large institution told the writer that they did not classify Protestant patients into their various denominations as there were no inquiries concerning such data. At the same time the Catholics were classified because that church was concerned for her patients.

There is rarely opportunity in our contemporary mental institutions for pastoral counsel when desired. The writer once witnessed where a patient, while pleading to see a minister after a chapel program, was bodily taken away to her ward. Recently the writer was informed of a Mennonite patient who had been persuaded to accept a cult. With weakened or impaired mental faculties the entire gamut of temptations peculiar to institutional life often overwhelm the patient. The creation of a Christian environment is perhaps the most valid point favoring our church mental hospital.

Handled As Our Own Fathers . . .

A second objective is to provide kind and proper physical care. It is a farce which has been totally disproven and discredited that says mental patients must be handled with brutal force. To meet emergencies with control and kindness does mean that an adequate and well-trained staff must be on hand. Patients in our church hospital shall at all times be handled as our own fathers, mothers, sisters, or brothers, which they are in a very real sense. They shall be given comfortable beds, chairs on which to sit, clothes to wear, and shall be kept free from filth and vermin. To many

"The Seventy Returned with Joy"

THE CHURCH IN INDIA GROWS BY LAY WITNESSES

by L. W. Jantzen

AT the end of the evangelistic touring season at Jagdeeshpur this spring, the pastors brought in their reports of the work. One pastor, fairly beaming with joy as he entered, brought this report of victory. Rev. T. N. Paul, pastor of Antioch church, farthest away from Jagdeeshpur labors in a very backward, hilly area, which extends up to the border of Orissa province. Listen to him:

"Sahibji, I have good news for you. In our touring this year, we taught the Christians in every one of the villages where they live—now about thirty. But we also found that our lay Christians are at work. Here is what happened.

Not One Can Read, But They Witnessed

One of our Christian families from the south end of our church area moved away from their very mountainous, rocky home, to a village not far from the big road to the north (the state highway). They have been there now for some time. They are poor and uneducated farm people and weavers, and not one in their family can read. But they witnessed about Jesus Christ in their new home. They live far away from any of our workers, so we had never preached in their new village. Now, in tour, we heard of this family, and camped there for about ten days, to teach them daily. And, listen please, this family had been faithful, for now there were several other persons, in two villages, who wanted to become Christians. We taught and tested them, and found them quite ready. So, on March 6, 1949, the first baptismal service in Ghatkschhara village was held. A number of Hindus, too, came to see the service, and went away quite impressed. Now, we left one worker there for several weeks, to teach them more of the Word. But he just cannot stay there. He must go on. There is no worker living near them, and they are almost surrounded by mountains. Only this one family of Christians lives near them, and not one among them can even read. What can we do to teach them more?

Can't you send another worker to live there to help them?"

How Would You Answer?

How would you answer that question? It was hard to say no, but no other alternative was possible just then, for several reasons. We have still too few trained workers to send to such villages. Then, too, very often the trained workers do not want to live in backwoods areas, far away from fellowship and civilization. Besides, in the mountainous areas transportation is difficult, often having to be done by foot. The pastor and his few workers will do their best to reach these new brethren as much as possible, to feed them with God's Word. But it is a cause of great thanksgiving and encouragement, that untrained laymen are witnessing effectively for their Lord and Saviour. Pray much for a strong, witnessing laity in the Church of Christ in India. Therein lies much of its hope for the present and the future.

Canadian District Conference Convenes

SARDIS, BRITISH COLUMBIA, JULY 2-6

The Mennonite Conference of Canada will be held in Sardis, British Columbia, July 2-6 using as the central theme, "The Church Awaiting the Lord."

Ministers' Conference July 2

Opening the Conference will be the ministers' conference on Saturday morning at 9:30 a.m., with William Martens, presiding. Messages will be given by Nic. Fransen on "Faithfulness of the Preacher in Offering Food for the Soul," and by H. T. Klassen on "How are we Solving Problems in the Church." C. G. Neufeld will give a report on the courses of study for Ministers in the Provinces. Elder J. A. Dyck will give the Communion sermon on Saturday evening.

Sunday: Mission Festival

Reverend J. M. Regier and Reverend P. J. Dyck will discuss Home Missions at the Mission Festival Sunday morning. In the afternoon Missionary John Thiessen and Reverend J. J. Thiessen will speak on Foreign Missions. The local Young People will have charge of the Youth Fellowship Program on Sunday evening.

Conference Sessions

After the usual opening and business matters have been taken care of, Reverend J. J. Thiessen will deliver the Conference Sermon. A memorial service will follow after which Reverend J. M. Pauls will give a message on "The Awaiting Church is Alert." Reverend Wm. Pauls will address the second day of the Conference on "The Awaiting Church Purifies Itself." Aside from the reports of various committees, messages on "The Awaiting Church Works for the Lord" by Reverend J. D. Adrian, and "The Awaiting Church Rejoices in His Coming" by Reverend John G. Rempel will be given on the Wednesday, July 6.

Women's Mission Activities

The business meeting of the Women's Mission Societies will be held Monday afternoon, July 4. At the evening service of the women's meeting, Missionary John Thiessen of India will deliver the message.

Youth Meeting

The Youth Organization of Canada will have charge of the program at the Conference Tuesday evening, July 5.

Plan Anniversary of Immigration

Mennonites of the prairie states and the Canadian provinces should be urged to unite to commemorate the 75th anniversary of their immigration and settlement in these areas, it was suggested at a meeting of Western District officers and members of the Bethel College Board of Directors and administration, held at Bethel College. The meeting was called to consider plans to observe the arrival of the European Mennonites on this continent 75 years ago, the 100 anniversary of the birth of David Goerz and other prominent leaders of this period, and the development of the Mennonite Historical Library.

Rev. A. J. Dyck, Inman, and Arnold A. Epp, Burrton, Kans., were named chairman and secretary, respectively, of a committee that is to invite churches and communities to observe a special day of thanksgiving. A committee of five consisting of Rev. Henry Hege, Corn, Okla., Rev. Phil. A. Wedel, Alexanderwohl Church, Dr. Ed. G. Kaufman and Dr. C. Krahn, North Newton, and Rev. Walter H. Dyck, Newton, was appointed to work out a program for the celebration, with Walter H. Dyck, C. Krahn, and I. G. Neufeld, North Newton, in charge of publicity.

Churches and cultural groups should have local or community programs on or before October 9, it was suggested, while a general celebration is to be planned in Memorial Hall at North Newton for October 12.

It was further pointed out that all branches of Mennonites which came to this continent in the 1870's should be invited to participate in this jubilee.

Observance of the centenary of the birth of David Goerz on June 2 should be tied in with the anniversary celebrations because of his prominence in immigration, conference, school, mission, and hospital matters in the early years, it was pointed out.

Collections held during the celebration should be used for the transportation and settlement of Mennonite refugees, missions, and to assist in erecting the library building which is to house Mennonite historical materials. The lower floor of the new library at Bethel College in the process of construction is to be devoted for this purpose.

It was suggested the Western District Conference ministers hold their annual conference Tuesday, Oct. 11, and convene the District Conference on Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 13 and 14, leaving the 12th of October free for the observance of Bethel College Founders' Day and the historic anniversaries.

Religion is not a compulsory subject for non-Christians in our Janjgir Middle School, but only one girl was irregular in attendance in 1946-1947. One Brahman boy (the highest caste) passed the Bible examination. He sat on the same bench with a boy from the lowest caste. This is a great victory of Christianity over caste.

Uruguay Land Purchase Confirmed

The purchase of 1199 hectares (about 2870 acres) of land in the northwestern part of Uruguay upon which the Mennonite immigrants may settle was endorsed by the Executive Committee on June 7. The tract of land, known as El Ombu, lies 280 kilometers northwest of Montevideo and is nearly equidistant from the cities Mercedes, Paysandu and Durazno. On the land are numerous buildings of burned brick construction, livestock shelters, implement sheds, an orange grove, a well, good fences, and other improvements.

Immediate steps are being taken to move the people from the temporary camps in which they have been located since they arrived in Uruguay aboard the VOLENDAM last October. This land tract will provide not only the necessary housing for the people, but it is hoped that there can be developed here a center for the church and school life of the settlement.

A recent cablegram expressed the appreciation of the people for the new land: MENNONITE LEADERS DEEPLY GRATEFUL GOD AND MCC SEND WARMEST GREETINGS MCC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE AND CHURCHES.

Relief Shipments During May

During the month of May the following shipments of relief materials valued at a total of $100,167.05 left port:

To Germany: 11 tons of equipment and hospital supplies; 28 tons of clothing, shoes, soap, leather and certain foods; 18 tons lard; 52 tons soy grits; one automobile; To Austria: 7 tons clothing, shoes, soap; To Italy: 7 tons food and supplies; To Belgium: ½ ton clothing, shoes, soap; To Holland: 2 tons food; To The Philippines: ¾ ton powdered milk.

Our Children's Home

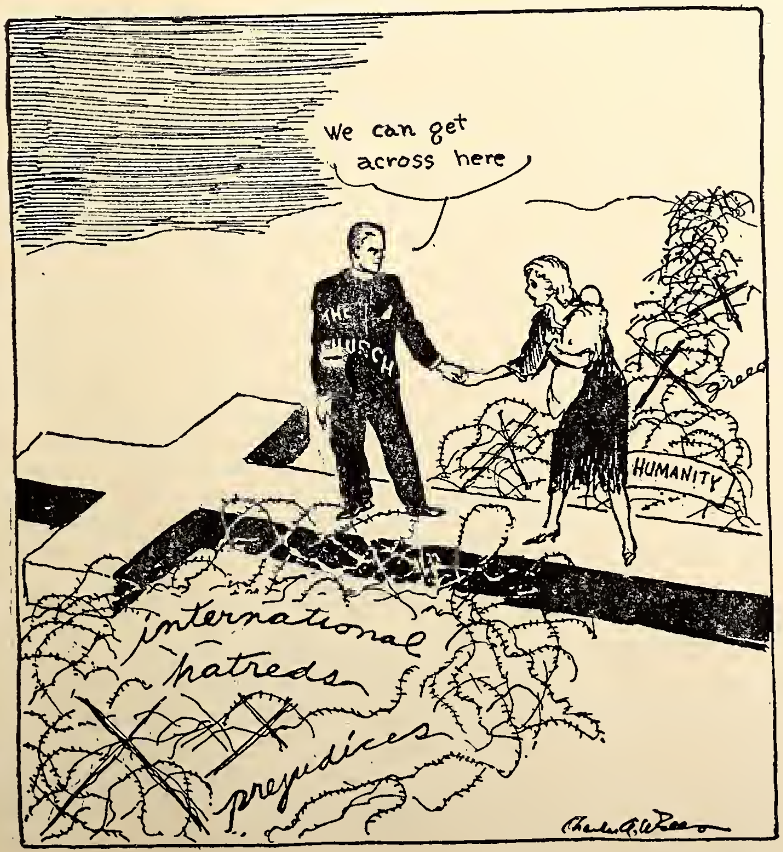
The Children's Homes in Europe represent another phase of the transition from direct relief work to that which is known as moral and spiritual rehabilitation, or the "plus" in relief work. Two of these are located in France (Weiler and Nancy) and one in Holland (Heerewegen). Each child represents an indvidual responsibility and opportunity. The MCC workers are with the children day and night and have the freedom of religious instruction along with their general care.

Radiating beyond the children and their parents, the influence of our Children's Homes is felt in the community and among the local Mennonite congregations. Deep appreciation has been expressed by many who have come into contact with this work.

Convicted on Counselling Charge

Publicity has been given to the conviction of Larry Gara, an instructor at Bluffton College, Ohio, for giving encouragement to a young man to follow his conscience in the matter of the non-registrant position under the present draft law. The legal clause upon which the case is based is found in Section 12 (a) of the Selective Service Act, which specifies penalties for "any person . . . who knowingly counsels, aids or abets another to refuse or evade registration" under the act.

This case is being appealed to a higher court in the hope that the decision will be reversed. The MCC Peace Section is keeping in touch with the developments in this case.



Crossing The Barbed Wire

By Charles A. Wells

There have been very few times when mankind has been so sadly divided and those divisions marked by such great barricades of prejudice, suspicion and hatreds. Our only hope for peace is to find some way over these barriers. The cross offers that way, for the cross is really a way of life. First, it is a way that the individual can walk that lifts him above so many of the pitfalls that destroy men. Then, on a larger scale, that cross is also a way of life for the nations. If its principles were more thoroughly accepted, more faithfully followed, we would experience miracles on the international scene. God still works when men give Him a chance. Thousands know this is true, for they have seen it happen in their lives. As God works through the experience of individuals so can He work through the lives of nations. It is through the teachings of Christ that men learn how to walk and work with God.

The Christian and Suffering

Part I. The Causes of Suffering

by Ed. G. Kaufman

Seniors of 1949, and friends of Christian education:

It may seem strange to discuss suffering on a joyful occasion of this kind. However, when one considers the magnitude and the seriousness of the problems of our time and the seeming impotence of current Christianity in the face of these, it becomes increasingly evident that this situation exists because in a large measure Christians have lost the meaning and place of suffering in the Gospel. Something very far reaching has happened. Somehow we have come to think that the Gospel should make us comfortable instead of uncomfortable and willing to suffer for its sake.

Jesus said, "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake, shall find it" (Matthew 16:25). ". . . . except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit" (John 12:24). "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow me" (Luke 9:23). ". . . in the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world" (John 16:33).

Let us consider this problem of suffering from three angles: (1) The causes of suffering—backward look; (2) The purposes of suffering—forward look; and (3) How to use suffering, or how to meet it.

I. THE CAUSES OF SUFFERING

Suffering is the supreme mystery in God's world. Science has eased many burdens and conquered many diseases, but failure and pain and death remain with us and suffering is still a mystery. Suffering is a problem for the Christian, not for the unbeliever. If man is the product of blind forces that have no purpose, then evil with all its intended suffering is the most natural thing. But the Christian does not believe that. Since we believe that God is the creator and that he is Almighty, and that his nature is perfect goodness and his name is love, it is perplexing that this world which he has made should have in it so much tragic suffering—physical, mental, social, spiritual, individual, and group suffering. If God is like Christ who gathered little children in his arms and went to the cross for you and me, why should there be so much pain in the world which he created and is ruling?

The Havoc Side of Law

There are at least four factors in the universe from which much of our suffering comes. First, the world is regulated by a system of laws. Because these laws are inflexible, those who cannot or who will not cooperate are hurt. The laws of nature make the earth habitable but at times also produce havoc. The gentle breeze which today is a comfort may tomorrow turn into a tornado. The murmuring stream which today quenches one's thirst may tomorrow become a destructive torrent. Fire may warm us comfortably, or it may burn us painfully. Gravity may help us do our work or it may harm us and bring tragedy. The laws of nature are dependable and reliable and that is good. If gravity sometimes pulled downwards, sideways, or upwards, or at times even failed to function at all, this would be chaos and not a cosmos. The universe is law-abiding. How much tragedy comes from that!

The Price of Progress

A second cause of suffering lies in the progressive nature of human society. Life makes us struggle our way through difficulties toward better conditions. We begin with undesirable situations such as poverty, disease, ignorance, slavery, war etc., and struggle by faith and courage to better our conditions. Much tragedy comes from that constant struggle for progress and improvement. Change causes suffering. The transition from ox cart to airplane must be paid for with tears and blood. All progress in civilization entails suffering.

Friendship's Potential Sorrow

A third cause of suffering is the fact of the interrelationship of people. No person is completely self sufficient. Men are dependent one on the other. The relationship that civilized people sustain to each other is so intimate and the pressure of society so intense that strain and stress is inevitable. Depressions and war, oppression and tyranny, even carelessness cause suffering. A school child with scarlet fever who disobeys quarantine regulations and travels on the bus may infect the classmates with the disease. Human society is interrelated.

When a person exposes himself to intimate friendship or a great love, there comes with that attachment a potential source of sorrow. Not only because of possible clashes of opinion and misunderstandings, but even if all goes well, finally there is painful separation by death. The very intensity of the joy that men find in their affections, deepens, by contrast, the dark gloom

> . . . it becomes increasingly evident that this situation exists because in a large measure Christians have lost the meaning and place of suffering in the Gospel. Something very far-reaching has happened. Somehow, we have come to think that the Gospel should make us comfortable instead of uncomfortable and willing to suffer for its sake.

of the lonely valley which they later must walk. The bereaved may make fresh adjustments, but the aching void and painful longing for the beloved remains. A major source of suffering is human inter-dependence.

The Consequences of Freedom

A fourth source of suffering is human freedom. Men are not puppets dancing hither and yon in response to outside control. They are free agents. Heredity, environment, and glands may condition a person, but he is, nevertheless, basically free. The exercise of this freedom has far reaching consequences. A wrong choice produces suffering. The choice may have been made in ignorance or poor judgment, but it still produces suffering. Willful preference of evil is sin, and sin entails suffering. A person betraying his inner standards becomes bedeviled by an inner voice. He carries a cargo of memories and cannot escape remorse. Not only does it inflict mental anguish, but imposes physical suffering as well. Not only does he suffer, but he also causes others to suffer. That is true of individual as well as social sin. When the world collectively sins, the world collectively suffers. Man's power of choice enables him to sink to low levels, but also to rise to great heights.

From these four factors flows much of the suffering of men—the law-abiding nature of the universe, the progressive nature of human society, the inter-meshed relationship of human beings, and the power of human choice. Yet would we be willing to eliminate a single one of these factors from human life? Would we make this universe whimsical and not law abiding? Would we make human life static and not progressive? Would we break up all human relationship and leave us like bottles in the rain without any ties? And would we take from man freedom of the will and his power of choice? No, we would not give them up for they are, after all, also the factors that make life beautiful and worthwhile.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

A powerful Commencement Address by Jesse N. Smucker, President of the General Conference brought the 1948-49 school year to a close on May 31. In his message, "Couriers of Christ," Mr. Smucker pointed to four paradoxes concerning a person who is a courier of Christ. First, he must be both narrow and broad; second, he must be both patient and urgent; third, he must have humility and authority; and fourth, he must hate sin and love the sinner. One of the unusual features of this final commencement service was a telegram from Mrs. S. K. Mosiman, widow of the late president S. K. Mosiman of Bluffton College. The telegram offered congratulations and God's richest blessing on the Seminary. It was deeply appreciated. Meanwhile, all of the seniors have left Chicago except Jacob Goering, who is assisting in the up-keep of the Seminary properties this summer, prior to his enrolling at the University of Chicago for his Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology.

Plans are going forward for the annual Daily Vacation Bible School held in the Seminary for children of the neighborhood and our own boys and girls. Two girls from the General Conference Voluntary Service Unit will be assisting with this work.

On Becoming Mature

Maturity is a changing concept. It does not mean what it meant a hundred years ago; nor does it mean what it did even twenty-five years ago. Maturity is a developmental process in mentality. Few people, in fact, have reached true maturity. . . . A considerable degree of immaturity prevails in large numbers of the population everywhere. The inability of people to live with other people, their inability to adjust to changing circumstances affecting them and those close to them, their inability to understand others' points of view is most marked.

Some grown-up people, although they may have developed physically, have not yet completed their social development . . . . In the relation of persons there is indeed a long way to go in development. A child discovers his mother and then others in his family. He sometimes goes as far as discovering the people in his province and occasionally discovers and develops a real relationship with the people in his own nation. But it is still rare, it is very rare, to find a person truly loyal to all kinds of people in his own nation, no matter what their race, creed or politics. Only through such a general development, through such maturity, is it possible for the world to develop enough world citizens in enough places . . . .

At all times there is movement and development . . . . At twelve or so the child should be functioning several months ahead of himself, at sixteen he should be eight or ten years ahead of his present self and should be planning his future. When a man has reached maturity he should be able to function, in terms of time at least, two to three generations ahead. The most important work being done in the world today will not reach its greatest fruition in this generation or even in the next, but in the generation after that . . . .

The world has a great need for these people, these mature people, people who see time in these terms.

"THE HEALING LIGHT"

by Agnes Sanford

It is encouraging to read Mrs. Sanford's book and to learn that men can be healed from physical and mental illness by obedience to the laws of God as given to us in psychology and in our Christian faith. Too many psychologists are unable to interpret psychology properly from the standpoint of Christian love as Mrs. Sanford is doing in her good book. She is right when she says:

> "Can we imagine a caveman finding out that wood burns and then refusing to use wood as fuel and insisting that stone should burn instead? Yet that is exactly what mankind has done regarding the fire of the spirit. Only love can generate a healing fire . . . . Yet the Christian church abandoned love as its heavenly fuel, and began to insist that the stone of cruelty should burn instead . . . . And so the church, by doing in the name of Christ the very things that Christ told them not to do, lost the power to heal. This want of Conformity to the law of God, who is love, is our greatest sin. And if we wish to receive more of the inflow of God's love, we must learn to give more of the outflow of God's love."

This is a must book for the preacher and the teacher in the social sciences and phychology.

It is a reliable guide to all those who suffer from sickness and disease, and who want to know what they can do to heal themselves. Mrs. Sanford uses such simple language that any one can follow her and make use of the power of God who can heal us from all our infirmities.

It is also a very good book for parents who want to know more about their great responsibility of rearing their children in the fear of the Lord. As a Christian mother, Mrs. Sanford gives some very interesting and helpful experiences out of her own life that will be a help to all parents.

It is also a good book for us Mennonites. It will help us to understand the doctrine of non-resistence.

I think, Glenn Clark, who wrote the introduction, is right when he says:
